THE AMERICAN AND ENGLISH ENCYCLOPÆDIA OF LAW.

IMPORT — IMPORTATION — IMPORTER. (See also the titles REVENUE LAWS; TAXATION. And see IMPOST, post.) — I. To import is to bring from a foreign jurisdiction into this jurisdiction merchandise not the product of this country.¹ "Imports" are things imported.² An importation, in the

1. Import. — U. S. v. The Steamboat Forrester, Newb. Adm. (U. S.) 94.

To import is to bear or carry into. The Conqueror, 49 Fed. Rep. 102.

Bring In. (See also the title REVENUE LAWS.) — In U. S. v. Jordan, 2 Lowell (U. S.) 539, it was said that the revenue laws use the terms "to import," "to bring in," and "to introduce" as synonymous.

Same — Non-intercourse Law. — A statute declared it unlawful to import into the United States any goods, wares, or merchandise of British growth. A British ship and cargo were captured by a French frigate on the high seas, pending a war between England and France, and were given by the commander of the French frigate to the captain and crew of an American vessel which had previously been captured and burned by the same frigate, and who were detained on board the French frigate when the British ship was captured. The American captain brought the ship and cargo into a United States port. This was held to be no infraction of the non-intercourse law. It was contended that the word import was co-extensive with the words "bring in." Chief Justice Marshall said: "I am not prepared to controvert or absolutely to admit this proposition." Ship Adventure Case, 1 Brock. (U. S.) 235.

Import and Export Distinguished. (See also EXPORT — EXPORTATION, vol. 12, p. 520.) — In Kidd v. Flagler, 54 Fed. Rep. 369, the court thus distinguished import and "export" as used in the revenue laws: "The defendant maintains that if the owners intended to bring the property back, it was not exported. The plaintiffs assert that the question of intent has no bearing whatever upon the point at issue. The dictionary meaning of the term 'export' is as follows: 'To carry from a state or country, as wares in commerce.' Webst. Dict. 'To send goods and merchandise from one country to another.' 1 Bouv. Law Dict. 502; 1 Rap. & L. Law Dict. 487. The term is the direct converse of import, which means 'to bring into a country merchandise from abroad.'"

Part of the Property of the State. — In its strictly literal sense import signifies merely bringing into, or to bring into the state, but "to import" may be understood as meaning "to bring in," as a part of the property of the state, to be held for use or sale. Com. v. Griffin, 3 B. Mon. (Ky.) 215. That case was upon the right of a state to forbid the importation of slaves.

2. The word import in a commercial sense means the goods or other articles brought into this country from another country. Peirce v. New Hampshire, 5 How. (U. S.) 504.

Constitutional Provision — Act and Thing Imported. — In Brown v. Maryland, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 419, it was said: "What then are imports? The lexicons inform us they are 'things imported.' If we appeal to usage for the meaning of the word, we shall receive the same answer. They are the articles themselves which are brought into the country. 'A duty on imports,' then, is not merely a duty on the act of importation, but is a duty on the thing imported. It is not, taken in its literal sense, confined to a duty levied while the article is entering the country, but extends to a duty levied after it has entered the country." And in that case it was held that a license tax on importers is a duty on imports, within the meaning of Const. U. S., art. 1, § 10, cl. 2: "No state shall * * * lay any imposts or duties on imports," etc.

In Wynne v. Wright, 1 Dev. & B. L. (N. Car.) 23, the term imports was said to include in its meaning both the act of importation and the articles imported, which latter retain their character as imports until by the first wholesale disposition of them they have passed from the control of the importer and become incorporated in the mass of property of the state, or until they have been broken up from the original cases, or other form in which they have been imported, and are offered for sale at retail, or in any other peculiar manner. See also Low v. Austin, 13 Wall. (U. S.) 29; King v. McEvoy, 4 Allen (Mass.) 110. And see the title ORIGINAL PACKAGE.

Same — Interstate Commerce. — Under Const.

broad meaning of the term, consists of a voluntary bringing in of goods with the intent to unlade them.¹ An importer is a person engaged in foreign commerce.² II. "Import" is also that which is conveyed by words; meaning; tendency.³

IMPORTUNITY. — See the title UNDUE INFLUENCE.

IMPOSE. (See also the title TAXATION.) — To impose means to lay or levy.⁴

U. S., art. 1, § 10, cl. 2, the term imports is confined to things brought from foreign countries, and does not include things brought from another state. Brown v. Houston, 114 U. S. 622; Pittsburg, etc., Coal Co. v. Louisiana, 156 U. S. 590; Peirce v. New Hampshire, 5 How. (U. S.) 594; Woodruff v. Parham, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 123; Hinson v. Lott, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 148; Hay Inspectors v. Pleasants, 23 La. Ann. 350; Territory v. Farnsworth, 5 Mont. 303; People v. Maring, 3 Keyes (N. Y.) 374; State v. Pinckney, 10 Rich. L. (S. Car.) 474. Compare Almy v. California, 24 How. (U. S.) 169.

Same — Persons. — The word imports applies to things, property only, and not to persons, as passengers and immigrants. People v. Compagnie Generale Transatlantique, 10 Fed. Rep. 362, 107 U. S. 59; Brown v. Houston, 114 U. S. 622; Pittsburg, etc., Coal Co. v. Louisiana, 156 U. S. 590; Norris v. Boston, 4 Met. (Mass.) 282. And see Norris v. Boston, 7 How. (U. S.) 477. The word importation is used in Const. U. S., art. 1, § 9, in reference to slaves, but these were property.

Yacht. — Where a yacht was built in a foreign country and navigated to a port of New York, it was held that it was not an imported article in the sense of the tariff laws. The Conqueror, 40 Fed. Rep. 99. See generally the title REVENUE LAWS.

Seamen. — A statute forbade the captain of a ship to import or bring into any port of the United States any negroes. It was held that this did not apply to colored seamen employed in navigating the vessel. The Brig Wilson v. U. S., 1 Brock. (U. S.) 423. See generally the title SEAMEN.

1. Republic v. Anderson, 10 Hawaii 253.

Importation. — "To constitute an importation so as to attach the right to duties, it is necessary not only that there should be an arrival within the limits of the United States and of a collection district, but also within the limits of some port of entry." Arnold v. U. S., 9 Cranch (U. S.) 104. See also U. S. v. Vowell, 5 Cranch (U. S.) 368; Marriott v. Brune, 9 How. (U. S.) 632. To constitute an importation, under a non-intercourse act, it is also necessary that there should be an intent to land the goods there. "It is undoubtedly true that the mere act of coming into port, though without breaking bulk, is prima facie evidence of importation. Yet even this presumption may be rebutted. If a vessel come in by distress, or to avoid capture, it has never been considered as an importation." Per Story, J., in Schooner Mary, 1 Gall. (U. S.) 206. See also Schooner Boston, 1 Gall. (U. S.) 239.

In Republic v. Anderson, 10 Hawaii 253, it was held that the voluntary bringing in of opium from foreign jurisdictions to a landing place, though not a port of entry within the jurisdiction of Hawaii, was an importation within the meaning of an act against the importation of opium. See also Schooner Mary, 1 Gall. (U. S.) 206; Schooner Boston, 1 Gall. (U. S.) 239; U. S. v. Arnold, 1 Gall. (U. S.) 348; U. S. v. Lyman, 1 Mason (U. S.) 499; Kohne v. Insurance Co. of North America, 1 Wash. (U. S.) 165; U. S. v. The Steamboat Forrester, Newb. Adm. 94.

Imported into the Harbor. — A statute imposed a duty upon all goods imported into or exported from a certain harbor. The harbor extended from a certain bridge down the river to the sea. A vessel brought goods into the harbor, made some use of the posts erected therein, and passed, without otherwise using the harbor, under the bridge, up the river, landing the goods at a point above the bridge within the flow of the tide where there was no harbor. It was held that the goods were not imported into the harbor. Wilson v. Robertson, 24 L. J. Q. B. 185, 4 El. & Bl. 923, 82 E. C. L. 923.

Illegal Importation. — In U. S. v. Jordan, 2 Lowell (U. S.) 539, it was held that the act of entering goods by false invoice came within the definition of an illegal importation.

2. Importer. — Peirce v. New Hampshire, 5 How. (U. S.) 594.

By the English Customs Amendment Act, 1859, § 8, "the word importer, in any act relating to the customs, is * * * to apply to and include any owner or other person for the time being possessed of or beneficially interested in any goods imported." See Budenberg v. Roberts, L. R. 1 C. P. 575.

In King v. McEvoy, 4 Allen (Mass.) 110, it was held that one who received from an importer and duly foreclosed a mortgage on a cask of spirituous liquors which was in a United States warehouse in bond, and paid the duties and received the cask, did not thereby become the importer thereof within the meaning of the Massachusetts statute of 1855, c. 215, § 2, concerning the manufacture and sale of spirituous liquors. See generally the title INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

3. Import and Tenor. (See also PURPORT; TENOR.) — A declaration on a patent which avers the patent and specifications to be "in language of the import and to the effect following," and then sets them forth in hac verba, is sufficient, and is not open to the objection that the patent is not set forth according to its legal tenor and effect. Wilder v. McCormick, 2 Blatchf. (U. S.) 31, 29 Fed. Cas. No. 17,650.

4. County Taxes. — In Neary v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., 7 Houst. (Del.) 419, it was held that a tax levied under the general law of the state for the assessment of county taxes was imposed by law on the person who is bound to pay it.

IMPOSITION. (See also the title TAXATION; and see IMPOST, post.)—An imposition is an impost; tax; contribution.¹

IMPOSSIBLE CONTRACTS.—See the titles ACT OF GOD, vol. 1, p. 588; CONDITIONS, vol. 6, p. 499; CONTRACTS, vol. 7, p. 147; INTERPRETATION AND CONSTRUCTION, post.

IMPOST. (See also the titles REVENUE LAWS; TAXATION; and see IMPORT; IMPOSE; and IMPOSITION, ante.)—An impost is a duty on imported goods and merchandise. In a larger sense it is a tax of imposition.²

IMPOTENCY. (See also the titles BASTARDY, vol. 3, p. 876; DIVORCE, vol. 9, p. 816; MARRIAGE.)—Impotency is an incapacity that admits of neither copulation nor procreation.³

1. Imposition—Exemption from Taxation. (See also the title EXEMPTIONS (FROM TAXATION), vol. 12, p. 266.)—In Harvard College v. Boston, 104 Mass. 470, it was held that an assessment by the city of Boston upon the land of Harvard college of part of the expense of altering a street, proportionate to the benefit received by the assessed land from the alteration, was a civil imposition.

Impositions—Covenant in Lease.—A lessee covenanted to pay all rates, taxes, and impositions whatsoever. It was held that water rates were not rates or impositions within the meaning of this covenant. Badcock v. Hunt, 22 Q. B. D. 148.

In Tidswell v. Whitworth, L. R. 2 C. P. 326, where the lessee covenanted to pay all taxes, rates, assessments, and impositions whatsoever, it was held that the term impositions did not include a special assessment for paving a street. Compare Sweet v. Seager, 2 C. B. N. S. 119, 89 E. C. L. 119.

2. Imposts.—Pacific Ins. Co. v. Soule, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 445; Neary v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., 7 Houst. (Del.) 419; Hancock v. Singer Mfg. Co., 62 N. J. L. 289.

In The Union Bank v. Hill, 3 Coldw. (Tenn.) 328, it was said: "The word imposts is sometimes used to signify taxes, or duties, or impositions; but in its more restrained sense it is used to signify a duty on imported goods and merchandise."

An impost tax or duty is an exaction to fill the public coffers for the payment of the debts and for the promotion of the welfare of the country, and does not extend to a retribution provided to defray the expense of a bridge, or removing obstructions in a watercourse, or the like, to be paid by those only who enjoy the advantages resulting therefrom. Worsley v. New Orleans, 9 Rob. (La.) 324.

Costs against a garnishee are not a "tax, impost, assessment, or municipal fine." Wearne v. Haynes, 13 Nev. 103.

United States Constitution.—Under Const. U. S., art. 1, § 10, cl. 2, "an impost or duty on imports is a custom or a tax levied on articles brought into a country, and is most usually secured before the importer is allowed to exercise his rights of ownership over them." It is not the less an impost because levied upon them after landing or in the form of a license tax upon the importer. Brown v. Maryland, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 419. See also Crow v. State, 14 Mo. 237.

"Impost is a duty on imported goods and merchandise. In a larger sense, it is any tax or imposition. Story Const. Abr., § 474. Cowell says it is distinguished from custom 'because custom is rather the profit which the prince makes on goods shipped out.' Cowell's Interpreter, title Impost. Mr. Madison considered the terms 'duties' and imposts in these clauses [of the Constitution] as synonymous. 1 Story Const. 669, note. Judge Tucker thought they were probably intended to comprehend every species of tax or contribution not included under the ordinary terms 'taxes and excises.'" Per Swayne, J., in Pacific Ins. Co. v. Soule, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 445.

Pilotage.—The words "imposts or duties on imports," in the United States Constitution, do not cover pilotage fees and penalties. Cooley v. Philadelphia, 12 How. (U. S.) 299.

Exemption from Taxation. (See also the title EXEMPTIONS (FROM TAXATION), vol. 12, p. 266.)—The shares of stock of a company were exempted from any tax or impost whatever. It was held that the word impost included every enforced contribution from the company to the public treasure. Hancock v. Singer Mfg. Co., 62 N. J. L. 289. See also Singer Mfg. Co. v. Heppenheimer, 58 N. J. L. 633.

3. Impotency.—In Payne v. Payne, 46 Minn. 467, it was said: "The statute does not define the term impotency, but in the law of divorce it means want of potentia copulandi, and not merely incapacity for procreation. It is an incapacity that admits neither copulation nor procreation. And what the law refers to is capacity for copula vera, and not partial and imperfect or unnatural copulation. The incapacity must also be incurable." Citing 1 Bishop on Mar. & Div., § 765 et seq.; D-e v. A-g, 1 Rob. Ecc. 379. See also Kempf v. Kempf, 34 Mo. 211.

Physical Incapacity and Impotency.—In Anonymous, 89 Ala. 292, it was said: "The meaning of the words 'physically incapacitated,' as here used, is substantially the same as that of the word impotent, frequently met with in divorce proceedings. It means powerless, or wanting in physical power, to consummate the marriage."

I. DEFINITION. — Impounding, as used in this article, means placing in a pound animals distrained or astray.¹

II. SCOPE OF ARTICLE. — Questions relating to the impounding of property seized on a distress for rent have been treated under another title in this work.² This article will be confined, therefore, to questions relating to the impounding of estrays or of animals taken damage feasant.

III. WHEN ANIMALS MAY BE IMPOUNDED — 1. Animals Distained Damage Feasant. — A man finding beasts of another wandering on his grounds damage feasant, that are doing him hurt or damage by treading down his grass and the like, may, by the rules of the common law, distrain and impound them until satisfaction be made him. In the United States the distraint and impounding of animals found damage feasant is generally regulated by statute.³

2. Estrays. — In some of the United States there are statutes providing for the taking charge of cattle or other domestic animals when found running at large, for impounding and advertising them, and when not reclaimed by their owner within a certain time, for their sale to satisfy the charges against them.⁴

1. Definitions. — 1 Bouv. Law Dict. 994.

A Pound is an inclosed piece of land secured by a firm structure of stone or pieces of timber placed in the ground. Wooley v. Groton, 2 Cush. (Mass.) 305.

2. See the title DISTRESS, vol. 9, p. 652.

3. For questions relating to distress damage feasant, see the title ANIMALS, vol. 2, p. 358.

4. As to the constitutionality and construction of laws relating to estrays, see the title ANIMALS, vol. 2, p. 378.

IV. WHAT CONSTITUTES IMPOUNDING.—To constitute an impounding, the animals must be placed in a pound and there restrained with the intent on the part of the person so restraining them to impound them.¹

V. CHARACTER OF POUND REQUIRED TO BE USED—1. At Common Law.—At common law, animals distrained damage feasant could be impounded in either a common or a private pound, at the option of the impounder.²

2. By Statute.—And by statute in some of the United States the same rule prevails;³ in other states animals distrained damage feasant or found going at large must be impounded in the public pound if there is one in the town;⁴ while in a few states the requirement to impound the animals in a public pound is absolute and unqualified.⁵

VI. IMPOUNDING MUST BE WITHIN REASONABLE TIME.—In those states where animals are required to be impounded in a public pound, they must be taken to the pound in a reasonable time. What is a reasonable time is a question of fact for the jury.⁶

VII. CERTIFICATE TO BE LEFT WITH POUNDKEEPER.—Under the statutes of several states the impounder is required to leave with the poundkeeper a certificate or memorandum stating the cause of impounding, the amount of damages claimed, the fees and charges incurred, etc.⁷

1. What Is Necessary to Constitute an Impounding.—Howard v. Bartlett, 70 Vt. 314. In this case it was held that the mere taking up of cattle by a person who found them on his premises doing damage, and putting them in an inclosed pasture without the intention of impounding them, did not constitute an impounding, although there was no usable public pound in the town where the cattle were taken.

2. Common-law Rule.—Vin. Abr., title Distress, E 4. par. 6; Mosher v. Jewett, 63 Me. 84; Collins v. Larkin, 1 R. I. 219.

3. Statutes Allowing Impounding in Either a Public or Private Pound.—Sherman v. Braman, 13 Met. (Mass.) 407. See also Adams v. Adams, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 384; Anthony v. Anthony, 6 Allen (Mass.) 408; Pettit v. May, 34 Wis. 666.

Legal Impounding under the Massachusetts Statute.—A cow which was found damage feasant upon a mowing field was driven by the owner of the field into the road and there delivered into the custody of a field driver, who drove her to his barn and there confined her, the owner of the field assisting him and at the same time notifying him that he claimed remuneration for the damage done. It was held that this was a legal impounding under the Massachusetts statute. Pierce v. Josselyn, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 415.

4. Impounding in Public Pound Where There Is One in the Town.—Mosher v. Jewett, 59 Me. 453, 63 Me. 84; Bills v. Kinson, 21 N. H. 448; Drew v. Spaulding, 45 N. H. 472; Riker v. Hooper, 35 Vt. 457, 82 Am. Dec. 646; Rowe v. Hicks, 58 Vt. 18. See also Harriman v. Fifield, 36 Vt. 341.

Under the Vermont Statute, if there is no public pound in the town the distrainer is not bound to impound the animals in an inclosure of his own; he may impound them in one belonging to some other person. Riker v. Hooper, 35 Vt. 457, 82 Am. Dec. 646.

In this state it was held that a distrainer who, having impounded cattle in his barnyard, turned them into an inclosed field to graze during the days, and put them back into his barnyard each night, thereby lost his legal control over them. Harriman v. Fifield, 36 Vt. 341.

5. Statutes Requiring Impounding in a Public Pound.—Price v. Babbit, 5 Alb. L. J. 382; Rockwell v. Nearing, 35 N. Y. 302; Collins v. Larkin, 1 R. I. 219.

Rhode Island Statute Construed.—Sheep taken damage feasant were delivered to the poundkeeper, and, there being no public pound, were by him confined in his own yard. Such confinement was held not to constitute a legal impounding under the Rhode Island statute. Collins v. Larkin, 1 R. I. 219.

6. Reasonable Time Allowed for Impounding.—Drew v. Spaulding, 45 N. H. 472.

But under the New York Statute animals distrained damage feasant cannot be impounded before the damages have been appraised. Pratt v. Petrie, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 191; Sackrider v. M'Donald, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 253; Hopkins v. Hopkins, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 369; Merritt v. O'Neil, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 477; Gates v. Lounsbury, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 427.

But a mere intention to impound the animals before the damages have been appraised will not render a person a trespasser ab initio. Gates v. Lounsbury, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 427.

7. Memorandum Required to Be Left with Poundkeeper.—Eastman v. Rice, 14 Me. 419; Merrill v. Gatchell, 17 Me. 191; Palmer v. Spaulding, 17 Me. 239; Morse v. Reed, 28 Me. 481; Sherman v. Braman, 13 Met. (Mass.) 407; Merrick v. Work, 10 Allen (Mass.) 544; Pickard v. Howe, 12 Met. (Mass.) 198; Wild v. Skinner, 23 Pick. (Mass.) 251; Osgood v. Green, 33 N. H. 318; Rollins v. Jones, 39 N. H. 475.

Under the New Hampshire Statute it is not essential that the certificate should be left with the poundkeeper before or at the time of impounding. It may be left within a reasonable time after the impounding. Rollins v. Jones, 39 N. H. 475.

Memorandum Held Defective in Not Stating Cause of Impounding.—In Massachusetts a person distraining cattle doing damage on his land impounded them in the town pound and handed the keeper the following written memorandum

VIII. DUTIES AND LIABILITY OF POUNDKEEPER. — A public poundkeeper is bound to take and keep whatever is brought to him, and when animals are once impounded he cannot let them go without a replevin, or the consent of the party. If the animals are wrongfully taken the liability rests with the person who brings them, and not with the poundkeeper.¹ But if the poundkeeper, by going out of the line of his duty, makes himself a party to some illegal act of the impounder, he is liable therefor.²

IX. WHO IS REQUIRED TO FEED ANIMALS WHILE IMPOUNDED. — At common law, if the impounding was in the common pound, or in a special pound overt, the owner of the animals was bound to supply them with food; but if the impounding was in a special pound covert (such as a barn or other inclosure where the owner could not have access to his animals to feed them without offense) then the impounder was required to feed them at his peril.³ By statute in some of the United States, when animals are impounded in the public pound it is the duty of the poundkeeper to supply them with food and drink,⁴ and he is liable to the owner for all damages arising from his neglect to do so.⁵

Poundkeeper Entitled to Charges for Food and Detention. — Whether cattle have been legally impounded or not, the poundkeeper, before releasing them, is entitled to be paid his legal charges in respect of their food and detention.⁶

X. NOTICE OF IMPOUNDING. — The statutes of some of the United States provide that notice of the impounding shall be given to the owner of the animals.⁷

with his name and a date upon the paper: "Two dollars for damages and three dollars and fifty cents for fees." It was held that the memorandum was defective in not stating the cause of impounding, as required by the statute. Newhouse v. Hatch, 126 Mass. 364.

1. Duty of Poundkeeper — Not Liable for Impounder's Wrong. — Brandling v. Kent, 1 T. R. 60; Badkin v. Powell, 2 Cowp. 476; Ibbottson v. Henry, 8 Ont. Rep. 625; Wardell v. Chisholm, 9 U. C. C. P. 125; Folger v. Hinckley, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 263; Anthony v. Anthony, 6 Allen (Mass.) 408.

2. When Poundkeeper Is Liable. — Buist v. McCombe, 8 Ont. App. 598; Wardell v. Chisholm, 9 U. C. C. P. 125.

3. Duty of Feeding Animals. — Riker v. Hooper, 35 Vt. 457, 82 Am. Dec. 646.

4. Bills v. Kinson, 21 N. H. 448; Cate v. Cate, 44 N. H. 211; Riker v. Hooper, 35 Vt. 457, 82 Am. Dec. 646.

5. Poundkeeper Liable for Not Feeding Animals. — Riker v. Hooper, 35 Vt. 457, 82 Am. Dec. 646.

6. Black v. Stewart, 19 Nova Scotia 77.

Under the Vermont Statute the owner of the animals must pay all expenses of keeping them while impounded. Riker v. Hooper, 35 Vt. 457, 82 Am. Dec. 646; Harriman v. Fifield, 36 Vt. 341.

As to who is entitled to recover such expenses from the owner, see Riker v. Hooper, 35 Vt. 457, 82 Am. Dec. 646.

New York. — Rockwell v. Nearing, 35 N. Y. 302.

Pennsylvania. — Vandamager v. Wood, 1 Ashm. (Pa.) 203.

Vermont. — Moore v. Robbins, 7 Vt. 363; Riker v. Hooper, 35 Vt. 457, 82 Am. Dec. 646; Harriman v. Fifield, 36 Vt. 341; Keith v. Bradford, 39 Vt. 34; Porter v. Aldrich, 39 Vt. 326; Howard v. Bartlett, 70 Vt. 314.

Under the Iowa Statute, where one who distrains trespassing animals gives the statutory notice to the person who has charge of them, as well as to one having charge of the farm on which they are usually kept, it is sufficient though the owner has not been notified. Lyons v. Van Gorder, 77 Iowa 600.

The Massachusetts Statute (Pub. Stat. Mass. (1882), c. 36, § 32), provides that within twenty-four hours after the animals have been impounded the person impounding them must notify their owner of such impounding. Under this statute, if the owner of the cattle replevy them within twenty-four hours after they have been impounded, he cannot afterwards object that no notice of such impounding was given him. Field v. Jacobs, 12 Met. (Mass.) 118; Wild v. Skinner, 23 Pick. (Mass.) 251.

By the Michigan Statute the notice is required to be in writing. Jones v. Dashner, 89 Mich. 246.

Under the Vermont Statute, if the owner of the animals does not replevy or redeem within forty-eight hours after notice of the impounding he is made subject to a penalty. Riker v. Hooper, 35 Vt. 457, 82 Am. Dec. 646; Harriman v. Fifield, 36 Vt. 341.

The claim for the penalty, under this statute, is not barred in nine months. Riker v. Hooper, 35 Vt. 457, 82 Am. Dec. 646.

As to who is entitled to recover the penalty,

The Notice Is Waived by the owner of the animals if he discovers the facts within the time allowed for giving notice, and refuses to pay lawful damages.¹

XI. APPRAISEMENT OF DAMAGES. — After the impounding of animals distrained damage feasant, if the owner of the animals does not pay the estimated damages and expenses, such damages must be appraised. The statutes provide who shall act as appraisers and the manner of their appointment. The appraisal is usually required to be made within a certain time after the impounding, or after notice thereof to the owner of the animals.² Some of the statutes also require notice of the appraisement to be given to the owner.³

XII. RELEASE FROM POUND. — If, after the impounding, the owner of the animals tenders to the impounder or poundkeeper the amount of the damages sustained or expenses and legal charges incurred, or after the appraisal pays the sum found to be due, he will be entitled to have his animals released from the pound and surrendered to him.⁴

XIII. SALE. — If, in the case of estrays, the legal charges and expenses, or in the case of animals distrained damage feasant, the sum found by the appraisers to be due, be not paid, the animals may be sold and the proceeds applied to the liquidation of the damages or charges. The proceedings preliminary to the sale differ in the several states. Nearly all the statutes require the sale to be advertised.⁵

see Riker v. Hooper, 35 Vt. 457, 82 Am. Dec. 646.

Time Within Which Notice Must Be Given. — Under a statute requiring notice to be given within twenty-four hours after impounding, the time does not begin to run until the animals are actually impounded. Howard v. Bartlett, 70 Vt. 314.

Description of the Animals. — Under the New Hampshire statute, where the impounder, in his notice, failed to describe one of the animals distrained, it was held that the omission invalidated the proceedings as to that one animal, but not as to the others taken. Brown v. Smith, 1 N. H. 36.

The owner of a close having impounded a horse doing damage therein, sent a notice to the owner of the horse containing these words, "I have taken up as an estray, doing damage in my inclosure, a horse belonging to you." It was held that a sale of the horse in the manner prescribed by the Massachusetts statute, in the case of animals taken up damage feasant, was nevertheless valid, the word "estray" not being used technically in such notice. Lyman v. Gipson, 18 Pick. (Mass.) 422.

1. Norton v. Rockey, 46 Mich. 460.

2. But under the New York Statutes the appraisement of damages done by cattle distrained damage feasant was required to be made before the animals were impounded. Pratt v. Petrie, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 191; Sackrider v. McDonald, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 253; Hopkins v. Hopkins, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 369; Merritt v. O'Neil, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 477; Gates v. Lounsbury, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 427.

For an interpretation of the particular provisions of the New York statute see Hale v. Clark, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 498; Stafford v. Ingersoll, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 38; Price v. Babbit, 5 Alb. L. J. 382; Hopkins v. Hopkins, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 369; Rockwell v. Nearing, 35 N. Y. 302; Armbruster v. Wilson, 43 Hun (N. Y.) 261; Allaback v. Utt, 51 N. Y. 651.

3. Appraisement — Iowa. — Barrett v. Dolan, 71 Iowa 94.

Pennsylvania. — Vandamager v. Wood, 1 Ashm. (Pa.) 203; Kerr v. Lowry, 2 Pa. Dist. 371.

Vermont. — Harriman v. Fifield, 36 Vt. 341; Keith v. Bradford, 39 Vt. 34; Porter v. Aldrich, 39 Vt. 326; Dudley v. McKenzie, 54 Vt. 685.

Wisconsin. — Pettit v. May, 34 Wis. 666; Warring v. Cripps, 23 Wis. 460.

Notice of Appraisement Required on General Principles. — In Vandamager v. Wood, 1 Ashm. (Pa.) 203, the court said: "It would be prudent, if it is not absolutely necessary, to give notice of the time and place of such appraisement, in the case of a known owner, although not positively directed by the act. General principles seem to require it."

Appraisers Not Limited to Amount of Damages Claimed. — Under the Massachusetts statute, in estimating the damage done by cattle distrained damage feasant, the appraisers were not limited to the amount of damages claimed by the owner of the close in the notice of distress given by him to the owner of the cattle. Lyman v. Gipson, 18 Pick. (Mass.) 422.

Certificate of Appraisers Conclusive. — In Vermont, when an appraisal is in all respects made according to the provisions of the statute and without fraud, the certificate of the appraisers is conclusive. It is in the nature of a judgment. Harriman v. Fifield, 36 Vt. 341.

4. Release from the Pound upon Payment of Amount Due. — McPherson v. James, 69 Ill. App. 337; Lyman v. Gipson, 18 Pick. (Mass.) 422; Osgood v. Green, 33 N. H. 318; Drew v. Spaulding, 45 N. H. 472; Gilbert v. Stephens, 6 Okla. 673.

5. Sale of Animals. — Delk v. Pickens, 84 Ga. 76; Miller v. Dale, 72 Iowa 470; Merrill v.

XIV. RESCUE AND POUND BREACH. — Where animals are distrained damage feasant, if there be anything wrongful in the distress the owner of the animals may rightfully retake them before the impounding; but if the distress be lawful, and he retakes them, he will be liable for a rescue. If the animals be once impounded, they cannot be taken though the distress was without cause; and a person taking distrained animals from the pound will, in any case, be liable in damages to the distrainer,¹ and if he breaks into the pound and takes the animals, he may be indicted for pound breach.²

What Will Amount to a Rescue. — It is not necessary that positive violence, or menacing, or threatening words should be employed, to characterize the taking of distrained animals as a rescue. The taking away and setting at liberty, against law, constitute a rescue. Such a taking is esteemed in law a violent taking.³ But there can be no rescue unless the party from whom they are taken has had the actual possession of the animals.⁴

XV. LIABILITY FOR UNLAWFUL IMPOUNDING. — If an impounding is unlawful or the proceedings irregular, or if one who impounds animals afterwards neglects, abuses, or kills them, he will be liable in damages to the owner, or the owner may recover the animals impounded in an action of replevin.⁵

Gatchell, 17 Me. 191; Smith v. Gates, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 55; Cate v. Cate, 44 N. H. 211; Drew v. Spaulding, 45 N. H. 473; Harriman v. Fifield, 36 Vt. 341.

1. When Distress May Be Retaken — Liability for Unlawful Taking. — Cotsworth v. Bettison, 1 Salk. 247; State v. Young, 18 N. H. 543; Sackrider v. M'Donald, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 253; Collins v. Larkin, 1 R. I. 219; Taylor v. Welbey, 36 Wis. 42.

But under the Massachusetts and Vermont Statutes it was unlawful to rescue animals distrained damage feasant, although the distress was wrongful and the animals had not yet been impounded. Field v. Coleman, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 267; Bowman v. Brown, 55 Vt. 184.

Michigan. — One sued under the Michigan statute for a rescue of beasts distrained or impounded cannot bring into question the regularity of the distrainer's proceedings; he is expressly remitted to his action of replevin to test the validity of those proceedings. Hamlin v. Mack, 33 Mich. 103.

Owner Aiding in Completing Rescue. — If the owner of animals that have been rescued from the pound aids in completing the rescue, he will be liable for a pound breach, although he was not present when the animals were taken, and the taking was not done by his direction or with his knowledge or consent. Pierce v. Josselyn, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 415.

2. Indictment for Pound Breach. — State v. Young, 18 N. H. 543.

In the Iowa Statute making it a misdemeanor to release distrained stock, the word "stock" has its ordinary meaning as used in agriculture, and includes swine. The State v. Clark, 65 Iowa 336.

Under the Vermont Statute, if any person breaks open any pound or releases any animal impounded, without lawful authority, he is liable to a fine of twenty-five dollars and all damages. Harriman v. Fifield, 36 Vt. 341.

3. What Constitutes a Rescue. — Hamlin v. Mack, 33 Mich. 103.

4. Bac. Abr., tit. Rescue, (A); Vinton v. Vinton, 17 Mass. 342.

Taking a Rescue, Though Animals Are Finally Impounded. — If a person take cattle from the lawful custody of the field driver when driving them to the pound, it is a rescue, although they are never out of his sight and are finally impounded by him. Vinton v. Vinton, 17 Mass. 342.

When Animals, Before Impounding, Are Allowed to Escape. — In Knowles v. Blake, 5 Bing. 499, 15 E. C. L. 517, it appeared that the plaintiff's son, having seen the defendant's horses trespassing in his father's field, was in the act of driving them to the pound, when he left them for the purpose of apprising the defendant of what had happened. While he was out of sight on this errand, the horses strayed from the plaintiff's field into the defendant's shrubbery, where they remained nearly half an hour, at the expiration of which time the plaintiff's son, having failed to obtain redress from the defendant, drove the horses out of the shrubbery into the plaintiff's yard, whence they were shortly afterwards taken by the defendant. It was held that the defendant's act in taking his cattle was not a rescue, and judgment was therefore rendered in his favor.

5. Liability for Unlawful Impounding — Recovery of Animals — Massachusetts. — Adams v. Adams, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 384; Smith v. Gates, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 55; Sherman v. Brame, 13 Met. (Mass.) 407; Merrick v. Work, 10 Allen (Mass.) 544.

New York. — Pratt v. Petrie, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 191; Sackrider v. M'Donald, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 253; Hopkins v. Hopkins, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 369; Merritt v. O'Neil, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 477.

Vermont. — Mellen v. Moody, 23 Vt. 674; Rowe v. Hicks, 58 Vt. 18.

Injury to Beast in Pound Without Distrainer's Knowledge. — But a person who impounds a beast taken damage feasant, in a town pound, is not liable for any injury the beast may receive, without his agency or knowledge, while confined in the pound. Brightman v. Grinnell, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 14.

Measure of Damages in Actions for Unlawful Impounding. — In an action for an unlawful impounding and sale, or for killing animals impounded, the measure of damages is the value of the animals.¹

IMPRESSION. (See also the title WITNESSES.) — The impression of a witness, if derived from recollection, is competent, but if it is merely his belief founded on hearsay, or is mere inference, it is incompetent. If, however, his testimony is susceptible of the former construction it is not to be excluded by the court merely because it is an impression.²

IMPRESSMENT. (See also the titles MILITARY LAW; SEAMEN.) — Impressment has been defined as taking into the public service by compulsion.³ In a more limited sense it is the power of compelling seafaring men to enter the naval service.⁴

Massachusetts Statute — Field Driver Not Liable After Lawful Impounding. — After animals found upon the highway without a keeper have been lawfully impounded by a field driver as required by the Massachusetts statute, the field driver is not liable in damages to their owner, although he fails either to restore the animals or sells them as required by law, through the default of the poundkeeper or other person, or from the insufficiency of the pound, the animals being lawfully in the poundkeeper's custody. Coffin v. Vincent, 12 Cush. (Mass.) 98.

Agent's Liability for Neglect to Comply with Statutory Requirements. — Under the statutes requiring notice of impounding, if a person who impounds cattle damage feasant acts as the mere servant and at the immediate request of the owner of the land on which the cattle were doing damage, or at the request of one standing in the place of the principal in interest, he is not responsible for the neglect to give notice of the impounding. But where a landowner who resides out of the state has appointed a person his agent to take care of the premises and protect them from damages from cattle running at large, and for seizing and impounding, for and in his name, all cattle found trespassing upon the close, the owner of cattle distrained damage feasant has a right to treat such agent as standing in the place of his principal, so far as to hold him responsible for the omission to give notice of the impounding. Porter v. Aldrich, 39 Vt. 326.

In Maine, A, acting as the servant of B, without justifiable cause distrained and impounded cattle doing damage on B's land, but failed to leave a certificate with the poundkeeper, such as the statute requires, to fix the liability upon B. It was held that A was liable in damages to the owner of the cattle. Eastman v. Rice, 14 Me. 419.

Penalty for Neglect to Give Notice of Impounding. — Under the Vermont statute a person who impounds another's beasts and neglects to give notice of the impounding to the owner of the beasts, is subject to a penalty for such neglect. Porter v. Aldrich, 39 Vt. 326; Dudley v. McKenzie, 54 Vt. 394.

1. Measure of Damages. — Coffin v. Field, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 355; Dickson v. Parker, 3 How. (Miss.) 219, 34 Am. Dec. 78.

What the Value of the Animal Is, is a question of fact for the jury. Dickson v. Parker, 3 How. (Miss.) 219, 34 Am. Dec. 78.

2. Witnesses. — State v. Flanders, 38 N. H. 333; Kingsbury v. Moses, 45 N. H. 225; Lisbon v. Buth, 23 N. H. 9.

An Affidavit stated that the impression of the affiant that he tore up an agreement, or, as an alternative, that it was lost or mislaid. It was argued that the affidavit was not sufficiently certain and positive. The court said: "We do not concur in this reasoning. An impression is an image fixed in the mind; it is belief; and believing the paper in question was destroyed has been deemed sufficient to let in the secondary evidence." Riggs v. Tayloe, 9 Wheaton (U. S.) 486. See also Hopper v. Ashley, 15 Ala. 464. And see the titles LOST PAPERS; SECONDARY EVIDENCE.

Impression and Opinion Distinguished — Juries. (See the title JURY AND JURY TRIAL.) — A juror was asked if he had formed an opinion. He replied that he thought not, but that he had formed an impression. The court said: "The word impression, if it can properly be applied to a mental operation, does not reach the strength of an opinion. An opinion is a conviction which is based, and must be based, upon testimony. An impression is a mere fancy or lodgment in the mind which is not based upon testimony, and the existence of which cannot be traced to proof; and in this case the juror himself distinguished between an opinion and an impression by insisting that he had not formed an opinion, and did not entertain any at the time, but that it was a mere impression." State v. Krug, 12 Wash. 288. See also State v. Pike, 49 N. H. 399; Freeman v. People, 4 Den. (N. Y.) 9. Compare Greenfield v. People, 74 N. Y. 283.

3. Impressment. — Irwin v. U. S., 23 Ct. Cl. 157; Porter's Case, 10 Op. Atty.-Gen. 24. In the case first cited it was held, where a military officer during a campaign stopped the claimant's trains, forced them into his column, placed them under military discipline, and made direct use of some of the property for the benefit of the army, that the loss of some of the animals was a destruction of private property arising from the impressment of the trains.

4. This right had its foundation in the common law, and resided in the crown alone. 1 Black. Com. 419; Rex v. Tubbs, 2 Cowp. 517; Ex p. Fox, 5 T. R. 276. It extends to all seafaring men, and any exemption must depend upon the positive provisions of statutes. Ex p. Fox, 5 T. R. 276.

IMPRIMIS. — See note 1.

IMPRISON — IMPRISONMENT. (See also the titles ARREST, vol. 2, p. 832; BAIL (IN CIVIL CASES), vol. 3, p. 587; BAIL AND RECOGNIZANCE (IN CRIMINAL CASES), vol. 3, p. 651; DURESS, vol. 10, p. 320; ESCAPE, vol. 11, p. 258; EXTRADITION, vol. 12, p. 590; FALSE IMPRISONMENT, vol. 12, p. 719; FINES AND PENALTIES, vol. 13, p. 52; HABEAS CORPUS, vol. 15, p. 125; HOSPITALS AND ASYLUMS, vol. 15, p. 757; HOUSES OF REFUGE AND CORRECTION, vol. 15, p. 777; IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT AND IN CIVIL ACTIONS, post; PRISONS; SENTENCE AND IMPRISONMENT.) — Imprisonment is the restraint of a person contrary to his will.²

1. Imprimis. — A legacy prefaced by the word imprimis has been held not to be entitled to a preference over other legacies. Blower v. Morret, 2 Ves. 422; Perrine v. Perrine, 6 N. J. L. 137. See also the title LEGACIES AND DEVISES; and see FIRST, vol. 13, p. 552.

2. Imprisonment. — Johnson v. Tompkins, 1 Baldw. (U. S.) 600; U. S. v. Benner, 1 Baldw. (U. S.) 239.

Imprisonment is any forcible detention of a man's person, or control over his movements. Lawson v. Buzines, 3 Harr. (Del.) 416. See also Johnson v. Bouton, 35 Neb. 898.

Every confinement of the person is an imprisonment whether it be in a common prison or in a private house, or in the stocks, or even by forcibly detaining one in the public streets. Hubert's Case, Cro. Car. 210; Floyd v. State, 12 Ark. 43.

Actual Confinement. — In Doyle v. Doyle, 19 Kan. 168, it was held that it was not a fatal defect in an indictment that it failed to show that a debtor was in jail. The court, per Brewer, J., said: "We see no good reason for limiting the meaning of the word imprisoned to actual confinement in the jail, but think it may fairly be construed as denoting the actual detention by the sheriff under the writ; and when a debtor is so seized and held, it seems to us he may be considered, in the language of the statute, as one 'imprisoned under the provisions of this article.'" Compare Lytte v. Davies, 2 Ohio 277.

A statute permitted the discharge, in certain cases, of prisoners who had been imprisoned in the county jail for twelve months. It was held that a prisoner who was allowed to work upon the streets under the sheriff's directions, and who was not locked up in his cell at nights, was still imprisoned. State v. Woodward, 123 Ind. 30.

"Indulgence of his jailer may mitigate but it does not destroy his imprisonment." Page v. Mitchell, 13 Mich. 69.

Same — Custody of Counsel. — A statute provided that no prisoner should be imprisoned under a commitment for contempt for nonpayment of alimony, for a longer period than specified. It was held that the imprisonment referred to actual imprisonment within the walls of a jail, and not to the technical restraint under which a person is supposed to be when he is committed to the custody of his counsel and suffered to go at large. People v. Grant, 47 Hun (N. Y.) 604, affirmed 111 N. Y. 587.

Same — Jail Limits. — A person in custody within prison limits has been held to be imprisoned. Comstock's Case, (N. Y. Super. Ct.

Spec. T.) 16 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 233; Buttles v. Carlton, 1 Ohio 32; Matter of Moore, 1 Am. Insolv. Rep. 95.

So within a statute providing for discharges from custody in certain cases where arrests have been made in civil causes, it was held that the word imprisonment applied to a person confined within jail limits. Coman v. Storm, (N. Y. Super. Ct.) 26 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 84, overruling Bylandt v. Comstock, (N. Y. Super. Ct. Spec. T.) 25 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 431.

In Ex p. Manchester, 25 N. Bruns. 552, it was held that the word imprisoned in a statute providing for the discharge of a debtor from arrest was applicable to a defendant on the limits, and also to a case where the debtor had given bail on his arrest and had afterwards been rendered by his bail.

But within the meaning of a statute which provided for the release of poor debtors from imprisonment, it was held that the word imprisoned did not apply to a debtor who had given bond for jail limits. Miller v. Strabbing, 92 Mich. 303. See also Griffin v. Helme, 94 Mich. 495.

Same — Statute of Limitations. (See also the title LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.) — A slave held in trust to be set free as soon as it could be done, and permitted by her nominal owner to act as a free person, was held not to be imprisoned within the meaning of that term as used in the statute of limitations. Downs v. Allen, 10 Lea (Tenn.) 652.

Imprisonment and Fine. — Where indictments for misdemeanors might charge in several counts different kindred offenses, the punishment for which was the same, it was held that imprisonment and fine were not punishments of a similar nature. Norvell v. State, 50 Ala. 178.

Hard Labor. — In Hodge v. Reg., 5 Crim. L. Mag. 391, it was held that the "imposition of punishment by * * * imprisonment for enforcing any law," in the British North America Act, included the power to impose hard labor. The court said: "It seems * * * that imprisonment there means restraint by confinement in a prison, with or without its usual accompaniment, 'hard labor.'" But see Reg. v. Frawley, 46 U. C. Q. B. 158. And in State v. Hyland, 36 La. Ann. 710, it was said that the word imprisonment, unqualified, is used in contradistinction to "imprisonment at hard labor."

Penitentiary. — In Cheaney v. State, 36 Ark. 80, it was said: "In all our penal legislation, when the word imprisonment only is used, it is understood to mean imprisonment in a county jail or local prison, and when the legislature has intended imprisonment in the penitentiary it has been so expressed."

House of Refuge.—In State v. Brown, 50 Minn. 353, it was said: "We do not propose to add to the very many pages which, in the reports and text books, have been devoted to the support of the position, now taken almost universally by the courts, that a person committed to the care and custody of a board in charge of an institution of the character of the Minnesota state reform school is not 'punished,' nor is he imprisoned, in the ordinary meaning of those words. Hence the constitutional provision which regulates and limits the jurisdiction of justices of the peace in criminal matters has no application." To the same effect see Ex p. Nichols, 110 Cal. 651; Reynolds v. Howe, 51 Conn. 478; Jarrard v. State, 116 Ind. 99; Roth v. House of Refuge, 31 Md. 329; Farnham v. Pierce, 141 Mass. 203; Kelley, Petitioner, 152 Mass. 432; Wares, Petitioner, 161 Mass. 70; State v. Ray, 63 N. H. 408; People v. Masten, 79 Hun (N. Y.) 581; Prescott v. State, 19 Ohio St. 184; Cincinnati House of Refuge v. Ryan, 37 Ohio St. 197; Ex p. Crouse, 4 Whart. (Pa.) 9; Milwaukee Industrial School v. Milwaukee County, 40 Wis. 328. Compare Com. v. Harregan, 127 Mass. 450.

But in People v. Turner, 55 Ill. 280, it was held that an act of the legislature creating a reform school and providing for the summary commitment of children who were destitute of proper parental care or were growing up in mendicancy, ignorance, idleness, or vice, was unconstitutional as prescribing a virtual imprisonment without due process of law. This decision was approved by Judge Redfield in a note in 10 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 372. To the same effect see State v. Ray, 63 N. H. 406.

But in Matter of Ferrier, 103 Ill. 367, it was held that an act establishing an industrial school and providing for the commitment of vagrant children to such school was constitutional. See also McLean County v. Humphreys, 104 Ill. 378.

I. DEFINITIONS. — Imprisonment for Debt may be defined as any restraint upon the liberty¹ of the defendant in a civil action,² whether upon execution against the person or upon an order of arrest granted by the court during the dependency of the proceedings, for the purpose of holding him to bail.

Debt Defined. — The word "debt," as understood in the subject under discussion, does not include all cases of debt in the technical legal sense,³ but is confined in its application to cases of debt in the popular sense of a demand founded upon or arising out of a contract, express or implied.⁴

II. CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS. — The constitutions of many of the states contain provisions prohibiting imprisonment for debt or restricting the right to imprison debtors to certain cases.

Imprisonment for Debt Prohibited. — In several states imprisonment for debt is prohibited absolutely.⁵

Allowed in Cases of Fraud. — In other states it is provided that there shall be no imprisonment for debt except in cases of fraud.⁶

Debts Founded on Contract. — In some states the constitutional exemption extends only to the case of debts founded on contract, cases of fraud being

1. Imprisonment is "the restraint of a man's liberty." Bouv. Law Dict. See IMPRISON — IMPRISONMENT, ante, p. 10.

2. As to what is a civil action, see CIVIL SUIT, ACTION, CASE, ETC., vol. 6, p. 96.

A constitutional prohibition against imprisonment for debt has never been understood or held to apply to criminal proceedings. Exp. Mann, 39 Tex. Crim. 491 [citing Ex p. Fleming, 4 Hill (N. Y.) 581; Moak v. De Forrest, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 605; Lynde v. Montgomery, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 461].

Imprisonment for Debt on Execution and Imprisonment for Contempt Distinguished. — In Côté v. Vermette, 9 Quebec 340, imprisonment upon execution and imprisonment for contempt are thus distinguished: "La contrainte par corps [execution against the person] en matière civile n'est jamais une punition; elle n'est qu'un moyen de coaction. * * * Elle appartient exclusivement à la juridiction civile des tribunaux, tandis que le mépris de cour est strictement une offense criminelle, et n'appartiendrait qu'à cette juridiction, si l'on n'eut dû, pour la bonne administration de la justice, permettre aux tribunaux offensés de punir de suite et sommairement l'offenseur. * * * Elle [contrainte par corps] était distincte et indépendante de la punition qui pouvait lui être imposée pour son mépris de cour, et qui aurait pu être une amende ou un emprisonnement spécial ou les deux réunis."

Road Assessments or levies are not debts within the meaning of the constitutional provision abolishing imprisonment for debt. Matter of Dassler, 35 Kan. 678.

The Master's Fee in Divorce Proceedings is not a debt within the meaning of the Pennsylvania act abolishing imprisonment for debt. Calhoun v. Calhoun, 6 Pa. Co. Ct. 177.

Proceeding on Contingent Liability. — A proceeding against an executor by his sureties to compel him to indemnify them against loss, and to prevent him from removing his person or property out of the state without first giving such indemnity, is not an action on a debt within the constitutional inhibition. Ruddell v. Childress, 31 Ark. 511.

Texas. — Const., art. 1, § 18.

usually excepted from the operation of the prohibition.¹

Debtors Who Have Surrendered Their Property. — In several instances it is provided that the person of a debtor, where there is not a strong presumption of fraud, shall not be continued in prison after delivering up his estate for the benefit of creditors in the manner prescribed by law.²

Absconding Debtors. — In Oregon and Washington absconding debtors may be imprisoned.³

Imprisonment for Militia Fines. — In several states it is provided that no person shall be imprisoned for a militia fine in time of peace.⁴

III. STATUTORY PROVISIONS — 1. Generally. — The right of imprisonment for debt and in civil actions is regulated in most of the states, even where the state constitution contains no provision on the subject, by express statutory provisions. In general these statutes follow the constitutional provisions already considered and prohibit imprisonment for debt and in civil cases except for fraud and in actions founded on tort.⁵

Federal Statute. — There is no provision in the Federal Constitution relating to imprisonment for debt. It has been provided by Acts of Congress, however, that "no person shall be imprisoned for debt in any state on process issuing from a court of the United States where by the laws of such state imprisonment for debt has been or shall be abolished. And all modifications, conditions, and restrictions upon imprisonment for debt provided by the laws of any state shall be applicable to the process issuing from the courts of the United States to be executed therein; and the same course of proceedings shall be adopted therein as may be adopted in the courts of such state."⁶

1. No Imprisonment for Debts Founded on Contract Except in Case of Fraud — Michigan. — Const., art. 6, § 33.

2. Debtor Not to Be Detained in Prison After Delivering up His Property for Benefit of Creditors — Colorado. — Const., art. 2, § 12.

Illinois. — Const., art. 2, § 12. In order to hold a defendant to bail, it must appear that he has refused to surrender his estate or has been guilty of fraud. *Stafford v. A Debtor Who Has Assigned All His Property in trust for the benefit of his creditors is not liable to arrest. Hopgood Shoe Co. v. Saupp, 7 Pa. Super. Ct. 480. See also Burton v. Dickens, 3 Murph. (7 N. Car.) 103.

Demand and Refusal. — In Illinois, before a debtor can be arrested for refusal to deliver up his property, it must appear that there was a demand for the property and a refusal by the debtor. Tuttle v. Wilson, 24 Ill. 553; Maher v. Huette, 10 Ill. App. 56.

3. Imprisonment of Absconding Debtors — Oregon. — Const., art. 1, § 19.

Washington. — Const., art. 1, § 17.

As to the meaning of "absconding debtor" in these constitutions, see Norman v. Zieber, 3 Oregon 197; Burrichter v. Cline, 3 Wash. 136.

These cases are set out under ABSCOND — ABSCONDING DEBTOR, vol. 1, p. 202, note. See also Norman v. Mancietie, 1 Sawyer (U. S.) 484, and infra, this title, Grounds of Arrest and Imprisonment — Removal of Debtor from State.

4. No Imprisonment for Militia Fines — Iowa. — Const., art. 1, § 19.

Michigan. — Const., art. 6, § 33.

Nevada. — Const., art. 1, § 14.

New Jersey. — Const., art. 1, § 17.

5. Consult the statutes of the several states.

As to the New Mexico Act of 1857 (Comp. Laws 1884, § 2183), forbidding imprisonment (except in cases of fraud and personal injuries) where the debtor files a complete schedule of his property, see In re Jaramillo, 8 N. Mex. 598.

Term of Imprisonment — New York. — Under Code Civ. Pro. N. Y., § 111, as amended in 1886, the period of imprisonment in civil cases is absolutely limited, with certain exceptions, to three months within the prison walls of a jail, and to six months within the jail liberties. People v. Grant, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 18 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 220; Downey v. Clute, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 18 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 235. For earlier contrary decisions under this statute see People v. Grant, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 18 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 231, note; Warshauer v. Webb, (N. Y. City Ct. Spec. T.) 18 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 232, note; Dolan v. Knapp, (N. Y. Super. Ct. Spec. T.) 18 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 233, note.

6. Federal Statute Relating to Imprisonment for Debt. — Rev. Stat. U. S., § 990. This is substantially the Act of Congress of Feb. 28, 1839, as supplemented by the Act of Jan. 14, 1841. And see Act of March 2, 1867, 14 U. S. Stat. at L. 543; U. S. v. Walsh, 1 Abb. (U. S.) 66; Deady (U. S.) 281; Catherwood v. Gapete, 2 Curt. (U. S.) 94; U. S. v. Tetlow, 2 Lowell (U.

Since the passage of these acts no process to arrest a defendant in a civil case can be issued except under the state law.¹

Imprisonment of Defendant in Admiralty Cases. — It is held that these acts do not apply to cases in admiralty, and that a defendant may be arrested and imprisoned on admiralty process notwithstanding the Acts of Congress and the laws of the state legislatures abolishing imprisonment for debt.²

Claims by United States. — The United States as plaintiff is bound by the provisions of the acts to the same extent as private creditors.³

No Arrest Except as Prescribed by Statute. — According to the terms of the statutes regulating imprisonment in civil cases, there can be no arrest in such cases except as prescribed by the statutes.⁴ Moreover, it seems that there can be no arrest even in cases excepted from the operation of the constitutional provisions abolishing imprisonment for debt unless there are statutes so providing.⁵

Statutes Construed Strictly. — Statutes authorizing imprisonment for debt, although remediable in that they are designed to coerce, by means of the imprisonment, the payment of the creditor, are also regarded as penal, and are not to be extended by construction so as to embrace cases not clearly within them.⁶ Such statutes are strictly construed, and a creditor seeking to avail himself of the remedy provided thereby must fully comply with all the requirements prescribed by them.⁷

2. Constitutionality. — Statutes regulating the right of imprisonment for debt and in civil actions have repeatedly been held constitutional.⁸

The Act of Congress adopting the laws of a state in regard to imprisonment for debt gives immediate effect to such laws, as well in cases pending as in those subsequently commenced. Gray v. Munroe, 1 McLean (U. S.) 528.

Massachusetts Statutes Not Within Federal Statute. — The several insolvent acts of Massachusetts prohibiting imprisonment in certain cases were held not to be laws abolishing imprisonment for debt within the federal act. Catherwood v. Gapete, 2 Curt. (U. S.) 94; Matter of Freeman, 2 Curt. (U. S.) 491; Campbell v. Hadley, 1 Sprague (U. S.) 470.

4. No Arrest Except as Prescribed by Statute. — Consult the statutes. See also Fellows v. Cooke, 6 Daly (N. Y.) 204; Tompkins v. Smith, (N. Y. Super. Ct. Gen. T.) 62 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 499; Gibbs v. Larrabee, 23 Wis. 495; Wagner v. Lathers, 26 Wis. 436.

In order to authorize the arrest of a defendant for debt the requirements of the constitution and statutes under which it is sought to make the arrest must be complied with. Stafford v. Low, 20 Ill. 152; Parker v. Follensbee, 45 Ill. 473. See infra, this section, the paragraph headed Statutes Construed Strictly.

5. No Imprisonment in Absence of Statute. — In Spice v. Steinruck, 14 Ohio St. 213, Peck, C. J., said, with reference to the provision of the Ohio Constitution abolishing imprisonment for debt: "This constitutional provision clearly contemplates legislation before any arrest could be made in civil actions, though fraud may have intervened. Courts, therefore, whether of general or limited jurisdiction, have now no common-law power to authorize arrests in such cases, and the power, as it exists at all, must have been conferred by express legislation."

In order to authorize the arrest of a debtor for refusal to deliver up his estate for the benefit of his creditors the statute authorizing such arrest must be substantially complied with. Maier v. Huette, 10 Ill. App. 56.

The passage of a constitutional provision prohibiting imprisonment for debt except in cases of fraud does not affect the status of a prior act of the legislature consistent with the constitutional provision. Hill v. Hunt, 20 N. J. L. 476; Ex p. Clark, 20 N. J. L. 648, 45 Am. Dec. 394.

In Actions ex Delicto. — Statutes authorizing the imprisonment of a defendant in an action ex delicto are not in conflict with the constitutional inhibition of imprisonment for debt. Ex p. Hardy, 68 Ala. 303; Ex p. Bergman, 18 Nev. 331. See infra, this title, Right of Arrest as Determined by Nature of Action — Actions Founded on Tort.

Effect of Statutes on Obligation of Contracts. — The right to imprison a debtor constitutes no part of the contract, and a state legislature may pass an act abolishing imprisonment for debt or releasing the debtor from imprisonment which will operate upon existing as well as future cases without thereby impairing the obligation of contracts.¹

Statutes Authorizing Imprisonment for Contempt. — It has been held in Alabama that where the constitution of a state declares that there shall be no imprisonment for debt the legislature has no power to pass a law which by evasion and indirection authorizes such imprisonment under the form of imprisonment for contempt of court.²

IV. RIGHT OF ARREST AS DETERMINED BY NATURE OF ACTION — 1. Actions Arising on Contract. — By the terms of the various constitutional and statutory provisions of the several states the defendant cannot be arrested in an action on contract except where he has been guilty of fraud.³

2. Actions Founded on Tort. — It is well settled that obligations arising in tort or ex delicto are not debts within the meaning of the constitutional provisions, and that therefore orders of arrest or executions against the person may competently issue in the case of claims founded upon tort.⁴

2. Imprisonment for Failure to Obey Chancery Decree. — Ex p. Hardy, 68 Ala. 303. In this case it was held that the Alabama Act of March 8, 1871, authorizing a court of chancery to imprison a debtor for contempt in failing to comply with a decree of the court requiring him to deliver up his property as prescribed by the act, was a law authorizing imprisonment for debt, and was therefore unconstitutional and void. Breach of Warranty. — Without proof of fraud the defendant cannot be arrested in an action to recover for breach of warranty on a contract. Howard v. McKee, 82 Pa. St. 409.

Action on Bond. — In early Virginia cases it was held that bail was not required in actions of debt on bonds with collateral conditions. Ruffin v. Call, 2 Wash. (Va.) 181; Nadenbush v. Lane, 4 Rand. (Va.) 413. But see in Maryland, Coward v. Bohun, 1 Har. & J. (Md.) 538. See also the title BAIL (IN CIVIL CASES), vol. 3, p. 598.

Waiver of Tort. — Where an action may be brought either ex contractu or ex delicto, and the plaintiff waives the tort and sues on the contract, the defendant cannot be arrested. Goodwin v. Griffin, 88 N. Y. 629.

4. Arrest Authorized in Actions ex Delicto. — Ex p. Hardy, 68 Ala. 303; People v. Cotton, 14 Ill. 414; McKindley v. Rising, 28 Ill. 337; People v. Greer, 43 Ill. 213; Rich v. People, 66 Ill. 513; Ex p. Bergman, 18 Nev. 331; Keeler v. Clark, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 18 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 154; Moore v. Green, 73 N. Car. 394, 21 Am. Rep. 470; Long v. McLean, 88 N. Car. 3; Kinney v. Laughenour, 97 N. Car. 325; Howland v. Needham, 10 Wis. 495.

The following cases hold generally that the defendant may be arrested and held to bail in an action of tort. Wilder v. Brush, 7 La. Ann. 657; Block v. Bannerman, 10 La. Ann. 1; Jones v. Kelly, 17 Mass. 116; Patten v. Halsted, 1 N. J. L. 320; Benson v. Bennett, 25 N. J. L. 166; McDuffie v. Baddoe, 7 Hill (N. Y.) 578; Sedgbecker v. Moore, Bright. (Pa.) 197; Rowe v. Newton, 5 Pa. Co. Ct. 325; In re Kindling, 30 Wis. 35.

Contrary Doctrine — California. — It was held in Ex p. Prader, 6 Cal. 239, that section 73 of the California Practice Act, providing that the defendant might be arrested in actions for wilful injuries to person or character, was unconstitutional as being in violation of the provision of the constitution that no person shall be imprisoned for debt unless in case of fraud.

When Special Cause for Arrest Must Be Shown. — Where the power to order bail in an action of tort is discretionary with the court or judge, it is held that the plaintiff's affidavit upon which bail is asked for must disclose not only a cause of action, but also some special cause for ordering bail, as that the defendant is a nonresident, or is about to depart out of the state, and the like.¹

3. Equitable Actions. — It seems that the question whether the defendant in an equitable action may be arrested depends not so much upon the form of the action as upon the nature of the relief sought. Thus it has been held that if, in an action for the recovery of money, the facts stated in the plaintiff's affidavit bring the case within the provisions of the statute authorizing the arrest of the defendant in a civil action, the order of arrest may be granted notwithstanding the action is brought in a court of equity.² But where the relief asked for is of an equitable nature the defendant is not liable to arrest,³ and in such case the fact that damages are asked as incidental to the main relief prayed for is immaterial.⁴

4. Election of Remedies. — Where the plaintiff has an election to bring his action either ex contractu or ex delicto, the arrest of the defendant being prohibited in the former case and allowed in the latter, the better doctrine seems to be that he cannot subject the defendant to arrest and imprisonment by electing to sue in tort.⁵ But where the action is to recover damages for a distinct tort, although one growing out of the existence of a contract, the plaintiff, by disaffirming the contract and proceeding against the defendant for his fraudulent or tortious conduct, may render him liable to arrest.⁶ The right of arrest is not affected by the mere fact that in an action founded in tort a contract is alleged by way of inducement.⁷ It is sometimes difficult, however, to determine whether an action as brought is to be regarded as

Trespass by Stock. — The defendant may be arrested in an action to recover damages for trespass committed by his stock. Harrison v. Brown, 5 Wis. 27.

Infringement of Patent Right. — So also in an action for the infringement of a patent right the defendant is subject to arrest. Parkhurst v. Kinsman, 3 Woodb. & M. (U. S.) 168.

Ct. 300.

founded on contract or in tort. Illustrative cases showing the distinction will be found in the note.¹

5. Effect of Judgment. — In general all causes of action become debts after judgment;² but it seems that the mere fact that a claim founded in tort has been reduced to a judgment does not render it a debt in the sense of that term as used in the constitutional prohibition of imprisonment for debt.³

Recovery of Judgment as Affecting Right of Arrest. — The question whether the recovery of a judgment in an action in which the arrest of the defendant was authorized is a merger of the original cause of action and the right to arrest the defendant therein is one upon which the decisions have been conflicting.⁴ In New York the question is now settled as to judgments of foreign tribunals by a statute which provides that "the recovery of judgment in a court not of the state, for the same cause of action, or where the action is founded upon fraud or deceit, for the price or value of the property obtained thereby, does not affect the right of the plaintiff to arrest the defendant" as prescribed by statute.⁵

1. Whether Action Is on Contract or in Tort — Illustrations. — An action against an innkeeper for the loss of a guest's baggage is founded on tort, and warrants the arrest of the defendant, if the conditions required by the statute exist. People v. Willett, 26 Barb. (N. Y.) 78, 15 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 210.

Where the Action May Be Either Tort or Contract against a carrier for the loss of goods, and the action brought is in contract, an execution against the person of the defendant is not authorized. Catlin v. Adirondack Co., (Ct. App.) 11 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 377, 81 N. Y. 379, reversing 20 Hun (N. Y.) 19.

A claim against a superintendent of a railroad company for failure on demand to account for and pay over money belonging to the company, collected by him, was held to be a cause of action arising upon contract, in an action upon which the defendant was not liable to arrest. Matter of Stephenson, 32 Mich. 60.

An Action by a Tenant Alleging Forcible Entry and Detainer on the part of his landlord is an action of tort, and the defendant may be arrested. Medcraft v. Dartt, 67 Wis. 115.

Fraudulently Obtaining and Fraudulently Concealing Property. — An action in which the plaintiff alleges in one count that the defendant by fraudulent representations obtained goods on credit, and in another count that the defendant, being indebted to the plaintiff on certain notes, fraudulently concealed his property, is an action of tort wherein the defendant might be held to bail under the Connecticut Act of 1842. Armstrong v. Ayres, 19 Conn. 540.

2. Causes of Action Reduced to Judgment Are Debts. — See the title DEBT, vol. 8, pp. 994, 999. See also Ex p. Prader, 6 Cal. 239; Southern Express Co. v. Lynch, 65 Ga. 240.

3. Judgments in Tort Not Debts in Constitutional Sense. — Moore v. Green, 73 N. Car. 394, 21 Am. Rep. 470, holding that an arrest of the defendant in an action of libel is not improper under a constitution abolishing imprisonment for "debt." The defendant argued that a judgment against him would convert the claim for damages into a debt, which would render his further detention unlawful under the constitution, thus making the giving of bail nugatory. The court considered, however, that the constitutional clause was applicable only to "imprisonment for debt as popularly understood, viz., for a cause of action arising ex contractu." See further the title DEBT, vol. 8, p. 992.

4. Domestic Judgment a Merger. — In McButt v. Hirsch, (C. Pl. Spec. T.) 4 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 441, it was held that the recovery of a judgment in one of the courts of the state upon a debt fraudulently contracted merged the original cause of action, and that the defendant in an action upon such judgment was not liable to arrest for fraud in contracting the debt. See also Field v. Bland, (Ct. App.) 8 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y. 221, 81 N. Y. 239.

It has been several times held that the defendant may be arrested in an action upon a judgment recovered in another jurisdiction. Wanzer v. De Baun, 1 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 261; Fellows v. Cook, (C. Pl. Spec. T.) 50 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 95, reversed in 6 Daly (N. Y.) 204, apparently without reference to this point; Greenbaum v. Stein, 2 Daly (N. Y.) 223; Gordon v. Lindo, 1 Cranch (C. C.) 588. Compare Goodrich v. Dunbar, 17 Barb. (N. Y.) 644; Mallory v. Leach, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 23 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 507. And see Goodale v. Finn, 2 Hun (N. Y.) 151.

The defendant may be arrested in an action on the original cause of action notwithstanding a foreign judgment therein. Arthurton v. Dalley, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 20 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 311. See also Wanzer v. De Baun, 1 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 261.

5. Right of Arrest Not Affected by Foreign Judgment — New York. — Code Civ. Pro. N. Y., § 552; Baxter v. Drake, 85 N. Y. 502, 61 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 365, affirming 22 Hun (N. Y.) 565; Leach v. Linde, 73 Hun (N. Y.) 246, affirming 142 N. Y. 628; Pitt v. Freed, 78 Hun (N. Y.) 614, 28 N. Y. Supp. 863, overruling 66 Hun (N. Y.) 632, 21 N. Y. Supp. 300; Milbury v. Heitzberg, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 28 Civ. Pro. (N. Y.) 179.

The true interpretation of the section cited is that where there is a judgment out of the state, when the action is of such a nature as to authorize an arrest, the plaintiff has a right to sue within the state for the original cause of action precisely the same as if no judgment had been obtained, and that such judgment is not a bar to the action brought. It seems,

6. Effect of Assignment. — The assignment of a cause of action in which the arrest of the defendant is authorized does not affect the right of arrest, and the defendant may be arrested in an action brought by the assignee in any case in which he might have been arrested at the suit of the party in whose favor the cause of action originally arose.¹

V. GROUNDS OF ARREST AND IMPRISONMENT — 1. Generally. — The grounds upon which the defendant in a civil action may be arrested and imprisoned will be found enumerated in the various state statutes by which this matter is regulated. For the most part the cases in which arrest is authorized are either those in which the cause of action is founded upon tort or those where the defendant has been guilty of fraud.²

Refusal to Make Judicial Abandonment. — A refusal on the part of a trader, who has ceased payments, to make a judicial abandonment of his property for the benefit of his creditors when required to do so is, under the Quebec law, a ground of arrest.³

2. Injuries to Person or Character. — A common provision of the statutes is that the defendant may be arrested in an action to recover damages for a "personal injury"⁴ or for an "injury to person or character."⁵ Under these provisions it has been held that the defendant may be arrested in an action for the seduction of the plaintiff's daughter,⁶ or for criminal conversation,⁷ or for assault and battery,⁸ or for malicious prosecution⁹ or false

Seduction as Malicious Act. — In Whiting v. Dow, 42 Vt. 262, it was held that the seduction of the plaintiff's daughter was a wilful and malicious act within the meaning of the statute authorizing the confinement of the defendant in close jail in actions for such acts.

imprisonment,¹ or in an action of libel² or slander.³ So also the defendant may be arrested in an action for divorce on the ground of cruel and inhuman treatment,⁴ though it seems not where the action is brought on the ground of adultery.⁵

Personal Injuries Caused by Defendant's Negligence. — In an action to recover damages for personal injuries it is not necessary, in order to render the defendant liable to arrest, that the injury complained of should be wilful; it is sufficient to authorize the defendant's arrest that the injury was caused through his negligence.⁶

Death by Wrongful Act. — It seems that the question whether the defendant may be arrested in an action to recover damages for negligently causing the death of another is to be determined by the language of the particular statutes under which the action is brought. The right to arrest the defendant has been denied in Wisconsin and in a New York case under a similar statute, though the rule seems to be otherwise under the present statutes of New York.⁷

3. Injuries to Property. — It is provided by statute in several states⁸ that the defendant may be arrested in an action to recover damages for an injury to property,⁹ or for wrongfully taking, detaining, or converting

1. False Imprisonment. — Wilder v. Brush, 7 La. Ann. 657; Jones v. Kelly, 17 Mass. 116.

In an early case in New York it was held that the defendant could not be held to bail in an action for libel except for special cause shown. Clason v. Gould, 2 Cal. (N. Y.) 47. Alimony. — The defendant is not liable to arrest upon a petition for alimony. Westbrook v. Westbrook, 2 Greene (Iowa) 598.

5. Divorce for Adultery. — See M'Intosh v. M'Intosh, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 12 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 289. But in Boucicault v. Boucicault, 21 Hun (N. Y.) 431, 59 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 131, in an action for divorce on the ground of the defendant's adultery, where the plaintiff's affidavit stated that the defendant was about to depart from the state and had no present intention of returning thereto, it was held that the defendant might be arrested.

6. Personal Injury through Negligence Sufficient. — Ritterman v. Ropes, 52 N. Y. Super.

Ct. 236. See Haines v. Jeroleum, 2 McCarty Civ. Pro. (N. Y.) 196.

7. Death by Wrongful Act. — See Gibbs v. Larrabee, 23 Wis. 495. See also Ryall v. Kennedy, 41 N. Y. Super. Ct. 531. But in Haines v. Jeroleum, 2 McCarty Civ. Pro. (N. Y.) 196, it was held that the term "personal injury," as defined in Code Civ. Pro. (N. Y.), § 3343, included a claim for damages for negligently causing the death of a decedent, and that execution against the person might issue on a judgment obtained therefor.

8. Actions for Injury to Property. — See Code Civ. Pro. (N. Y.), § 549, subd. 2; Code N. Car., § 291, subd. 1; Stat. Wis. (1898), § 2689, subd. 1.

In an Action to Recover Money Lost in Gambling it has been held that the defendant cannot be arrested in New York. Tompkins v. Smith, (N. Y. Super. Ct. Gen. T.) 62 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 499, affirmed 89 N. Y. 602. But the defendant may be arrested in such actions under the Wisconsin statutes. Stoddard v. Burt, 75 Wis. 107.

A Combination to Injure the Plaintiff's Business by means of declaring and enforcing a boycott against him is an injury to property within the meaning of the statute authorizing the arrest of the defendant. Old Dominion Steamship Co. v. McKenna, (U. S. Cir. Ct.) 18 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 263, 30 Fed. Rep. 48.

Injury to Animal — Negligence of Bailee. — The defendant may be arrested in an action to recover damages for an injury to the plaintiff's ox caused by the defendant's negligence while the property of the plaintiff.¹

Injuries to Real Property. — The question whether the statutes authorizing the arrest of the defendant in such cases apply to real as well as personal property will depend upon the wording of the particular statutes.²

4. Fraud — a. GENERALLY. — In most of the states in which imprisonment for debt and in civil cases has been made the subject of constitutional or statutory provisions, cases in which the defendant has been guilty of fraud are excepted from the operation of exemptions secured by these provisions. The several cases of fraud that may arise will now be considered in detail.

b. IN ACTION OF FRAUD AND DECEIT. — The defendant may be arrested in an action to recover damages for fraud and deceit.³

using it. Keeler v. Clark, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 18 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 154. But see McCauley v. Salmon, 14 Phila. (Pa.) 131, 37 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 262, where, in a similar case, it was held that the defendant bailee was not liable to arrest, the decision being based on the ground that the action arose ex contractu.

Where the Mortgagor of Personal Property fraudulently takes some of the property out from the operation of the mortgage, he is liable to arrest. Matter of Hicks, 20 Mich. 280. To the same effect see Woodbridge v. Nelson, 13 Hun (N. Y.) 390.

Unlawful Detention. — The defendant may be arrested in an action to recover possession of personal property unjustly detained and damages for the detention. Tracy v. Griffin, 50 Barb. (N. Y.) 70. But see In re Short, (Supm. Ct. App. Div.) 54 N. Y. Supp. 1075; Purchase v. Bellows, (N. Y. Super. Ct. Spec. T.) 23 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 421. And it has been held that a statute authorizing the arrest of the defendant in an action to recover possession of personal property does not authorize the arrest of the defendant in an action for damages for the wrongful conversion of such property. Seymour v. Van Curen, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 18 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 94.

Imprisonment under Bail Process in Trover — Georgia. — Under Code Ga., §§ 3418-3420, in force in 1876 (2 Code 1895, §§ 4604-4606), the defendant in an action for the recovery of personal property may be imprisoned under bail process. Harris v. Bridges, 57 Ga. 407, 24 Am. Rep. 495. See also State v. Bridges, 64 Ga. 146. But there can be no arrest in such action where the plaintiff accepts an alternative verdict for the property or its value, as authorized by section 3564 (2 Code 1895, § 5335), and the verdict becomes absolute for the money value. Southern Express Co. v. Lynch, 65 Ga. 240.

2. Whether Word "Property" Includes Real Property. — Under the former New York statute the word "property" was limited in its application to personal property. Merritt v. Carpenter, 3 Keyes (N. Y.) 242; Fullerton v. Fitzgerald, 18 Barb. (N. Y.) 441. So also in North Carolina. Bridgers v. Taylor, 102 N. Car. 86. But in the present New York statute (Code Civ. Pro., § 549) the word "property" includes real as well as personal property. Welch v. Winterburn, 14 Hun (N. Y.) 518.

In Vermont, under the provisions now embodied in Stat. Vt. (1894), §§ 1560, 1561, the defendant in an action to recover possession of a tenement unlawfully held over by the lessee may be arrested. Barnes v. Tenney, 52 Vt. 557.

c. FRAUD IN CONTRACTING DEBT — (1) Generally. — A common provision of the statutes is that the defendant may be arrested in an action upon contract where he has been guilty of fraud in contracting the debt or incurring the liability.¹ Fraud in contracting a debt in the sense of these statutes means some fraudulent conduct on the part of the defendant at the time of making the contract whereby the plaintiff was deceived. A subsequent failure to perform the contract, even though fraudulent, does not warrant the arrest of the defendant on the ground that the debt was fraudulently contracted.²

Debt Contracted by False Representations. — Fraud in contracting a debt will obviously consist for the most part in false representations made by the defendant, Fraud in Contracting a Debt Discovered After a Judgment Therefor Was Obtained warrants the defendant's arrest in an action on the judgment. Wanzer v. De Baun, 1 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 261.

2. Fraud Committed After Debt Was Contracted. — Vankirk v. Staats, 24 N. J. L. 121. In this case it was held that a subsequent refusal to pay a debt does not warrant the inference that the debt was fraudulently contracted. See also U. S. v. Wood, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,755a; Steinhardt v. Beir, 60 N. Y. Super. Ct. 489.

In an action on a contract to recover damages for the breach thereof the defendant cannot be arrested for fraud in contracting the liability where the fraud complained of was committed in respect to the performance and not to the making of the contract. Mooney v. La Follette, 21 N. Y. App. Div. 510.

But the Defendant's Subsequent Acts May Warrant an Inference of Fraudulent Intent in Contracting a Debt. So where a loan was obtained by representations that the money was to be used for a particular purpose, and the borrower afterwards diverted it to other uses. Lovell v. Martin, (C. Pl. Gen. T.) 11 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 126.

A Mere Failure to Keep a Promise to Pay for Goods Purchased on Credit, although the intention not to pay existed when the goods were obtained, has been held in Illinois not to warrant the defendant's arrest in execution. Kitson v. Farwell, 132 Ill. 327; Kitson v. Ellinger, 35 Ill. App. 55. See, as to whether such a representation when the intention is not to pay is a fraud, the title FRAUD AND DECEIT, vol. 14, p. 51.

directly or indirectly, by which the plaintiff was induced to enter into the contract, and in order that the defendant may be arrested it must appear that such representations were relied upon by the plaintiff.¹ Fraud cannot be predicated upon the mere expression of an opinion.²

(2) False Representations as to Solvency. — One who obtains goods on credit by means of false representations as to his solvency, made with knowledge of their falsity, is guilty of such fraud in contracting the debt as will furnish a ground for his arrest in an action to recover the price of the goods.³

Scienter Necessary. — But in order to justify an arrest in such case it is essential that the representations should have been made with knowledge of their falsity.⁴ Such knowledge, however, may be inferred from circumstances.⁵

If a Vendee Knowingly Conceals His Insolvency, and his concealment is accompanied with an intention to acquire the property of his vendor without paying for it, he is guilty of such fraud as will render him liable to arrest in an action for the debt.⁶

(3) Fraudulent Purchase. — One who purchases goods for cash and obtains possession without paying for the goods, with the intent of immediately disposing of them or of converting them into a form in which they cannot easily be reached on execution, is guilty of such fraud as will authorize his arrest.⁷

1. False Representations Not Relied Upon. — Cox v. Dwyer, (Supm. Ct. Gen. T.) 17 N. Y. Supp. 713. See the title FRAUD AND DECEIT, vol. 14, p. 106 et seq.

The Falsity of One of Several Material Representations is enough, if relied on. Wannemacher v. Davis, 2 Sweeny (N. Y.) 272. And see the title FRAUD AND DECEIT, vol. 14, p. 113.

Where a Person Obtains Goods by Representations False to His Knowledge, a fraudulent intent will be legally presumed, and he may be arrested, although he denies the fraudulent intent. Whitcomb v. Salsman, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 16 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 533. But see Cullen v. Herz, (Supm. Ct. Gen. T.) 13 N. Y. St. Rep. 333, and the title FRAUD AND DECEIT, vol. 14, p. 103.

2. Statement of Opinion Not Fraudulent Misrepresentation. — Thus where one purchasing goods, in settlement of the price, indorses to the vendor the check of a third person payable to the vendee, he is not chargeable with fraud in contracting the debt so as to render him liable to arrest because of a representation or statement that the check would be paid upon presentation, for such a statement is "necessarily a mere expression of opinion and belief, and must have been received as such." Stewart v. Potter, (C. Pl. Gen. T.) 37 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 68. See the title FRAUD AND DECEIT, vol. 14, p. 34 et seq.

for the corporation by false representations as to its solvency is liable to arrest in an action by the person injured. Phillips v. Wortendyke, 31 Hun (N. Y.) 192. And see the title last cited, vol. 14, p. 27.

4. Scienter Necessary. — Gaffney v. Burton, (Supm. Ct. Gen. T.) 12 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 516; Birchell v. Strauss, 28 Barb. (N. Y.) 293.

5. Scienter Inferred from Circumstances. — Scudder v. Barnes, (Supm. Ct.) 16 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 534.

6. Knowingly Concealing Fact of Insolvency. — Watson v. Judge, 40 Mich. 729; Morrison v. Garner, (C. Pl. Gen. T.) 7 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 425; Claffin v. Moore, 42 N. Y. Super. T.) 20 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 366; Wallace v. Murphy, (N. Y. Super. Ct. Spec. T.) 22 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 414. See also Miltnerberger v. Burgess, 15 La. Ann. 8.

Where the defendant purchased beef cattle from the plaintiff for cash on delivery, and while he and the plaintiff were consulting as to payment his agent drove off the cattle and slaughtered them the same day, and the defendant thereupon induced the plaintiff to accept a worthless sight draft in payment, it was held that the facts showed a fraudulent scheme to obtain possession of the cattle for which the defendant might be arrested. Harding v. Shannon, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 20 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 25.

whether such fraud would or would not avoid the sale.¹

(4) Fraud by Agent or Copartner. — Fraud by Agent. — To authorize an arrest for fraud in contracting the debt sued on, the fraud complained of must be actual and personal, and not merely legal or constructive. Thus fraudulent representations made by an agent, but not known to or authorized or ratified by the principal, will not subject the latter to arrest.² But where the principal participates in or knowingly reaps the benefits of the agent's fraud he may be arrested.³

The Arrest of One Partner for the Fraud of His Copartner in making a contract for the firm is, according to the better opinion, regulated by the same principles, and such an arrest can be justified only by showing that the partner arrested actually participated in the fraud.⁴

d. FRAUD IN AVOIDING PAYMENT OF DEBT — (1) Generally. — Statutes authorizing the arrest of a defendant who has been guilty of fraud in contracting a debt do not authorize the arrest of a debtor who resorts to fraud and subterfuge to avoid the payment of a debt honestly contracted.⁵ But under constitutional provisions abolishing imprisonment for debt, but excepting fraud from the operation of the prohibition, such fraud includes not only fraud in contracting the debt, but also fraud in avoiding its payment.⁶

Fraudulently Procuring Extension of Time of Payment. — A debtor who for the purpose of securing an extension of the time of payment of his debt fraudulently induces his creditor to accept a worthless security therefor may be arrested.⁷

Payment by Worthless Post-dated Check. — It has been held, however, that a debtor who has induced his creditor to accept a worthless post-dated check in pay-from other brokers for cash, but were permitted to take them away without making payment, nothing being said about credit, and the purchasers afterwards sold the notes and converted a part of the proceeds, it was held that they might be arrested. Robbins v. Seithel, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 20 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 366.

1. Wallace v. Murphy, (N. Y. Super. Ct. Spec. T.) 22 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 414.

Resale at Loss. — Usually the fact that a purchaser sells for less than he pays, almost immediately after obtaining possession, is considered a badge of fraud, and evidence that the purchaser intended not to pay the purchase price; but such fact may be explained, as by evidence that the sale was made at the full market value. Manning v. Solis, 50 Barb. (N. Y.) 224.

2. Fraudulent Representations by Agent. — Clatlin v. Frank, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 8 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 412; Hathaway v. Johnson, 55 N. Y. 93, 14 Am. Rep. 186. And see the title AGENCY, vol. 1, p. 1161, note.

Refusal to Apply Money to Debt. — A refusal to apply money of which the defendant has the possession or control to the payment of a judgment is a fraud within the meaning of such a constitutional provision. Ex p. Clark, 20 N. J. L. 648, 45 Am. Dec. 304. In this case the court said: "Whatever is dishonest is fraudulent in foro conscientie, and is so treated in a court of equity. Fraud and dishonesty are synonymous terms." The court declared that one who so dealt with his money or property was "a dishonest and fraudulent man," whose imprisonment was provided for under the constitution.

7. Procuring Extension of Time by Fraud. — Van Wageningen v. Coe, 22 N. J. L. 531, decided under a statute authorizing arrest for fraud in contracting debt. See also Easton v. Cardwell, (Brooklyn City Ct. Gen. T.) 11 Civ. Pro. (N. Y.) 301.

ment of the debt is not liable to arrest in an action brought upon the check.¹

(2) Concealment or Disposal of Property. — The defendant in an action on contract may be arrested where, since the making of the contract or in contemplation thereof, he has concealed, removed, or disposed of his property, or is about to do so, with intent to defraud his creditors.²

What Constitutes Fraudulent Disposition of Property. — To constitute a disposition of property by a debtor with intent to defraud his creditors so as to warrant the arrest of the debtor, three things must concur: first, the thing disposed of must be of value, out of which the creditor could have realized all or a portion of his claim; second, it must be transferred or disposed of by the debtor; third, this must be done with intent to defraud creditors.³ Illustrative cases will be found set out in the note.⁴

1. Payment by Worthless Post-dated Check. — Woodruff v. Valentine, (N. Y. Super. Ct. Spec. T.) 19 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 93. The ruling was based upon the ground that, as suit was brought on the check itself, it was an action for a debt evidenced by the check, "not an action to recover upon an obligation incurred by the defendant's fraud." No decision was made as to whether an action in which an arrest could have been had would have lain upon all the facts.

Conveyance by Husband to Wife. — Where an insolvent husband conveys his property to his wife on account of an alleged indebtedness which does not legally exist, he may be arrested

An Actual Intent to Defraud, and not merely constructive fraud,¹ must be established by satisfactory evidence² in order to justify the defendant's arrest on the ground of disposing of his property with intent to defraud creditors.

A Fraudulent Disposal of Property in a Different Jurisdiction from that in which the debt was contracted has been held to warrant an arrest in the latter jurisdiction.³ The rule is otherwise, however, where the defendant both contracted the debt and disposed of his property in a foreign country.⁴

(3) Removal of Debtor from State.—A debtor who is about to leave the state without leaving sufficient property to pay his debts, and with intent to defraud his creditors, may be arrested at the suit of a creditor.⁵ The mere for disposing of his property with intent to defraud. Com. v. Duncan, 1 Pittsb. (Pa.) 207. But merely preferring his wife, to whom he is indebted, to other creditors is not fraudulent on the part of the husband. Watson v. Browne, 1 Lehigh Val. L. Rep. (Pa.) 156.

The Disposal of His Wife's Separate Estate, upon the security of which a husband borrowed money, will not justify an arrest of the husband, in an action to recover the money, on the ground that he had disposed of his property with intent to defraud his creditors or had been guilty of fraud in contracting the debt. Isaacs v. Gorham, 1 Hilt. (N. Y.) 479.

That disposing of or secreting property not belonging to the debtor is not ground for arrest, see Gay v. Dénard, 3 Montreal Super. Ct. 125; Gendron v. Lemieux, 12 L. C. Rep. 222.

Partner's Withdrawal of Firm Property.—A member of an insolvent partnership who withdraws a portion of the partnership property to pay his individual debts has been held not liable to arrest for this act. Sherill Roper Air Engine Co. v. Harwood, 30 Hun (N. Y.) 9. The withdrawal of partnership assets may, however, constitute evidence of an intent to defraud partnership creditors, Hinck v. Desjar, (Supm. Ct. Gen. T.) 3 N. Y. St. Rep. 349; and so subject to arrest the partner withdrawing such assets and converting them to his own use, Hanover Vulcanite Co. v. Nathanson, 38 Hun (N. Y.) 488. But a partner who merely withdraws money from the firm business in consequence of partnership losses cannot be arrested without proof that he has disposed or intends to dispose of the money withdrawn in fraud of creditors, although his copartner is shown to have been guilty of a fraudulent disposal. Scott v. Reed, (Supm. Ct. Gen. T.) 2 How. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 521.

Carrying on the Person Money derived from the sale of property subject to attachment is a fraudulent concealment of property with intent to defraud creditors. Clement v. Dudley, 42 N. H. 367. See the title EXEMPTIONS (FROM EXECUTION), vol. 12, p. 67.

The Fact that the Debtor Is About to Go Abroad, and states that he does not intend to pay his debts, does not support an inference that he is about to remove his property to defraud creditors. *Stroub v. A Nonresident Debtor Coming Temporarily into a State and about to return to his home has been held not to be within such a statute. Stevenson v. Smith, 28 N. H. 12; McKay v. Ray, 63 N. The Intention of a Debtor to Depart Will Be Presumed upon proof of a fraudulent or suspicious disposal of his property. Hudson's intention of a debtor to leave the state is not sufficient to authorize his arrest where there is no intent to defraud creditors;¹ but a debtor about to leave the state, whether openly or secretly, without intending to return, and with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud his creditors, is an absconding debtor and liable to arrest as such.²

e. FRAUD IN FIDUCIARY CAPACITY. — The statutory right of arrest exists in a number of states in actions to recover for money received or for property embezzled or fraudulently misapplied by a public officer, an attorney at law, an officer or agent of a corporation or banking association in the course of his employment, or by a factor, agent, broker, or other person in a fiduciary capacity.³

The Term "Fiduciary" as here employed, as interpreted by the courts, applies to contracts not based on credit, but based on confidence, having reference to the integrity and fidelity of the person trusted rather than to his credit or ability, and contemplating good faith rather than legal obligation as the basis

Case, 2 Mart. (La.) 172. But the fact that a debtor seeks to avoid a personal interview with an importunate creditor is not sufficient to warrant his arrest. Devries v. Summit 86 N. Car. 126.

An Executrix who has rendered an account is not liable to arrest in a suit by a creditor of the estate to secure his share thereof on the ground that she is about to leave the state without leaving sufficient funds to pay his debt. Mondelli v. Russell, 17 La. 537.

The executrix and sole legatee of a deceased debtor who had filed no inventory of the estate, and was about to leave the state, taking the assets with her, was held not liable to arrest under Code Civ. Pro. N. Y., § 550. Genesee River Nat. Bank v. Mead, 18 Hun (N. Y.) 303.

The Arrest of Two Joint Debtors Where One Is About to Depart under such circumstances as to warrant his arrest has been held authorized. Ex p. Overick, 3 Whart. (Pa.) 175.

No Execut. — The arrest and detention of a person about to leave the state under a writ of ne exeat is not imprisonment for debt. Dean v. Smith, 23 Wis. 483, 99 Am. Dec. 198. But see Malcolm v. Andrews, 68 Ill. 100. See NE EXEAT.

1. Debtor Leaving State Innocently Not Liable to Arrest. — See Ex p. Fkumoto, 120 Cal. 316; Tooth v. Frederick, 14 Ont. Pr. 287.

A debtor departing openly, leaving his property, and intending to return, is not liable to arrest. Levi v. Levy, 20 La. Ann. 552. See also Myall v. Wright, 2 Bush (Ky.) 130; Caraby v. Davis, 6 Mart. N. S. (La.) 163.

In Quebec, under Code Civ. Pro. 1897, § 895, the intent to defraud must be established in order to subject to arrest a person "immediately about to leave the provinces of Quebec and Ontario," and the mere fact that the defendant is leaving the province without paying his debts is not enough. *Shaw v. 2. Norman v. Manciette, 1 Sawy. (U. S.) 484.

The manner of a debtor's removal from the state, whether secretly or openly, is only material as showing the object of such removal. Prima facie a debtor about to remove from the state without the consent of his creditors, and without intending to return, is an absconding debtor. Norman v. Manciette, 1 Sawy. (U. S.) 484. And see ABSCOND—ABSCONDING DEBTOR, vol. 1, p. 201.

3. Fiduciaries. — See cases cited in this and the following notes.

An Administrator who has applied the funds of the estate to his own use may be arrested. Melvin v. Melvin, 72 N. Car. 384.

of the transaction. If credit is given to the party trusted, so that he becomes the debtor of the principal rather than his agent, he is not then acting in a fiduciary capacity within the meaning of the statute.¹

Agents, Factors, or Brokers. — An agent, factor, or broker, acting in a fiduciary capacity, who converts money intrusted to him for a specified purpose,² or which he has been employed to collect,³ or who converts or fails to turn over to his principal the proceeds of property intrusted to him to be sold or converted into money,⁴ is liable to arrest.

Ct. 554; Morange v. Waldron, 6 Hun (N. Y.) 529; and see FIDUCIARY, vol. 13, p. 10.

The Fiduciary Character of an Agent Receiving Moneys has been said to depend on whether good faith requires the keeping and paying over to the principal of the specific moneys, or a mere relation of debtor and creditor is created, the agent having the right to use the sum collected, holding himself accountable to the principal for that amount. In the former case he would be liable to arrest; in the latter, not liable. Stoll v. King, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 8 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 298; Robbins v. Falconer, 43 N. Y. Super. Ct. 363; Donovan v. Cornell, (C. Pl. Gen. T.) 3 How. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 525, 13 Daly (N. Y.) 339, 9 Civ. Pro. (N. Y.) 222; Angus v. Dunscomb, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 8 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 14.

Money Received by a Broker for the Purpose of Securing Himself against loss upon his client's transactions is not received in a fiduciary capacity so as to render the broker liable to arrest for failure to pay it over. Ohio. — Este v. Wilshire, 44 Ohio St. 636. In this case it was held that a broker who embezzles and converts the proceeds of stock committed to him for sale is liable to arrest on the ground of fraud in incurring the obligation.

Wisconsin. — Williams Mower, etc., Co. v. Raynor, 38 Wis. 119.

An Auctioneer who receives goods for sale under an agreement that he is to receive all over a certain amount of the proceeds, for his compensation, is liable to arrest for the non-payment of the proceeds. Holbrook v. Homer, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 6 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 86. Compare Morange v. Waldron, 6 Hun (N. Y.) 529.

Where Goods Were Consigned to a Member of a Firm in His Individual Capacity, and by him were turned over to his firm for sale on commission, it was held that no fiduciary relation was thereby established between the firm and the owner so as to render them liable to arrest for failure to pay over the proceeds of the sale. Fuentes v. Mayorga, 7 Daly (N. Y.) 103.

Effect of Discharge in Bankruptcy. — One who receives goods to sell on commission acts in a fiduciary capacity, and upon his failure to pay over the proceeds it has been held that he may be arrested notwithstanding the pendency of bankruptcy proceedings, or his discharge in bankruptcy, such discharge not affecting debts

Effect of Acceptance by Agent of Draft for Property Received. — Where an agent receives goods to sell for his principal the fiduciary relation thus established is not terminated by his acceptance of a draft drawn on him for the value of the property, and upon the nonpayment of the draft he may be arrested in an action to recover the proceeds of the sale;¹ but it is otherwise in such cases where the action is brought upon the acceptance and not for the recovery of the money received by the agent.²

Del Credere Agency. — The fact that an agent or factor is entitled to a del credere commission on sales made by him does not affect his liability to arrest for converting the proceeds of such sales.³

Bankers. — A banker who receives money for deposit in the ordinary course of business does not assume a fiduciary relation towards the depositor, and is not liable to arrest for failure to pay over the money so deposited.⁴ But if at the time of receiving money for deposit a banker knows that he is insolvent, he is guilty of fraud in incurring the obligation, and may be arrested on that ground although he may not have had any special intent to defraud a particular customer.⁵ So also a banker who converts the proceeds of a note intrusted to him for collection,⁶ or who converts funds received by him for a specific purpose,⁷ may be arrested.

f. FRAUD COMMITTED IN ANOTHER STATE. — Where the defendant in an action on contract has been guilty of such fraud as will authorize his arrest under the laws of the state in which the action is brought, his liability to arrest is not affected by the fact that the fraud was committed in another state.⁸

5. Misconduct or Neglect in Office or in Professional Employment. — Public officers and persons employed in a professional capacity usually sustain towards the public or clients a fiduciary relation, and for failure to turn over moneys received by them in their official or professional capacity they are ordinarily liable to arrest by virtue of this relation.⁹ In several states, however, misconduct or neglect in office or in a professional employment is made by statute an independent ground of arrest.¹⁰ Under such a statute an attorney at law

who converts or misapplies money in his hands belonging to his client may be arrested in an action for the recovery of such money;¹ and to subject him to liability to arrest in such case it is not necessary that he should have acted in bad faith.²

6. Disobedience to Orders of Court. — Where an order of court directs one party to pay to the other or to a third person money or property in his possession or under his control, disobedience to such order is a contempt of court, and may be punished by imprisonment without any violation of the constitutional provision abolishing imprisonment for debt.³ Under statutes, however, authorizing the punishment of contempt in disobedience to such orders, a distinction is made between an order to pay the debt and an order settling the right of the judgment creditor to the application of the proceeds of the debt, it being held that only the latter can be enforced by imprisonment.⁴ In several states, in statutes abolishing imprisonment for debt, proceedings as for contempt to enforce civil remedies are excepted from the operation of the statutes.⁵

c. Disposal of Property Before Action Brought. — Where the defendant has fraudulently acquired possession of the property he may be arrested in an action for its recovery although he has disposed of it before the commencement of the action.¹ But he cannot be arrested if he has parted with the property in good faith before the bringing of the suit.²

d. WHERE DEFENDANT IS NONRESIDENT — Defendant Not Exempt from Arrest on Account of Nonresidence. — The fact that the defendant is a nonresident of the state in which the action is brought does not render him exempt from arrest.³

Nonresidence as Ground for Arrest. — In some jurisdictions the nonresidence of the defendant will justify his arrest in certain cases.⁴ It has been held, however, that a statute authorizing the arrest of a defendant solely on the ground of nonresidence is unconstitutional.⁵

e. FOR NONPAYMENT OF FINES AND PENALTIES. — Fines and penalties imposed in criminal proceedings for the violation of penal statutes⁶ or for civil contempt⁷ are not "debts" within the meaning of the constitutional prohibition, and hence the imprisonment of a defendant for the nonpayment of a fine so imposed is not imprisonment for debt, and statutes providing for such imprisonment are not unconstitutional.

Action to Recover Fine or Penalty. — So also the defendant may be arrested in an action to recover a fine or penalty.⁸

v. Nelson, 49 Hun (N. Y.) 215, affirmed 112 N. Y. 674, applying Code Civ. Pro. (N. Y.) § 550.

In Ohio the defendant's nonresidence is no ground for his arrest. Morrow v. Finch, 7 West. L. J. 144, 1 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 307; Messenger v. Lockwood, 9 West. L. J. 521, 1 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 433.

In Actions of Tort where the granting of an order of arrest is discretionary with the court it has been held in a number of cases that the order should not be granted unless in addition to stating a cause of action the plaintiff's affidavit set forth some special cause for the order, as that the defendant was a nonresident. See supra, this title, Right of Arrest as Determined by Nature of Action — Actions Founded on Tort. In such actions the order will be granted where the defendant is a nonresident. Van Vechten v. Hopkins, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 293; Sherman v. Brantley, 7 Robt. (N. Y.) 55.

In several states the right to arrest the defendant in an action to recover a fine or penalty is given by statute. See Bright, Purd.

providing the payment of costs adjudged against a defendant in a criminal proceeding may be enforced by imprisonment.¹ And even at common law it has been held that a court has power to imprison a defendant until a fine and costs are paid.² There are cases, however, which hold that a defendant cannot be imprisoned for costs in the absence of a statutory provision therefor.³ Costs charged against the defendant do not constitute a debt within the meaning of the constitutional inhibition against imprisonment for debt, and statutes providing for the enforcement of payment of costs by imprisonment have repeatedly been held constitutional.⁴ So also statutes providing for the imprisonment of a prosecuting witness for the nonpayment of costs with which he has been charged have received the same construction.⁵

Defendant's Own Costs. — It is held that statutes providing for imprisonment for nonpayment of costs do not contemplate that the defendant shall be held for costs incurred by himself in his defense.⁶

Dig. Laws Pa. (1894), p. 67, § 52; Stat. Wis. (1898), § 2689, subdiv. 2.

Right to Arrest Defendant Denied. — In some cases it has been held that the defendant in an action to recover a penalty could not be arrested. U. S. v. Mundell, 1 Hughes (U. S.) 415, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 15,834; Clay v. Swett, 4 Bibb (Ky.) 255.

In Saul v. Aillier, 1 Mart. (La.) 21, it was held that bail was not required in an action on a penal statute to recover a forfeiture, where the statute does not especially authorize it. In Com. v. Cheney, 6 Mass. 347, it was held that a justice of the peace cannot hold one to bail for an offense which may be prosecuted by information qui tunc as well as by indictment.

Infringement of Revenue Laws. — The defendant may be imprisoned in an action to recover a penalty for the sale of goods without payment of duty in violation of the revenue laws, this being a fraud upon the United States and therefore within the purview of the exception permitting imprisonment for debt in case of fraud. U. S. v. Walsh, 1 Abb. (U. S.) 66, Deady (U. S.) 281.

The Action Must Be to Recover a Penalty and Not Merely of Penal Nature. Thus an arrest has been refused in an action to enforce the statutory liability of the trustees of an association for the debts of the association by reason of their failure to file a report as required. Glens Falls Paper Co. v. White, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 58 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 172. See also Staub v. Myers, 16 N. Y. App. Div. 476.

The Kansas statute (now Gen. Stat. 1897, c. 104, § 22) providing in effect that when, upon a trial before a justice of the peace for misdemeanor, it shall be found that the prosecution was maliciously instituted, or without probable cause, the prosecuting witness shall be adjudged to pay the costs, and unless a bond is given therefor, shall be committed to the county jail until paid, is constitutional, costs not being a debt within the meaning of the constitutional inhibition. Matter of Ebenhack, 17 Kan. 618. See also Matter of Lowe, 46 Kan. 255. Compare in Nebraska, State v. Ensign, 11 Neb. 529.

A prosecuting witness is not liable to imprisonment for failure to pay costs except where authority therefor is clearly conferred by statute. In re Heitman, 41 Kan. 136.

6. Bradley v. State, 69 Ala. 318; Knox v. State, 9 Baxt. (Tenn.) 202. See also Hill v. State, 78 Ala. 1; Ex p. Meyer, 57 Miss. 85.

Whether Costs Part of Punishment. — In some jurisdictions costs are regarded as a part of the penalty, and imprisonment for costs is considered a part of the punishment,¹ but the prevailing doctrine seems to be that the imprisonment of a defendant until the payment of a fine and costs adjudged against him constitutes no part of the penalty imposed, but is merely one of the means of enforcing compliance with the judgment of the court.²

Execution for Costs in Civil Cases. — In New York and South Dakota it is provided by statute that in certain cases an execution may be issued against the person of a party against whom a judgment for costs has been rendered.³ And it seems that the payment of costs in civil cases may be enforced generally by imprisonment, subject to the general rules regulating imprisonment for debt.⁴

8. Conflict of Laws. — The right to arrest a defendant in a civil action depends upon the lex fori, and not upon the lex loci, and a party found within the jurisdiction of one state, although not a resident thereof, may be there arrested for causes within the statutes of such state, although the cause of action arose in another state or country in which the defendant would not be subject to arrest therefor.⁵

1. Caldwell v. State, 55 Ala. 133.

In Montana a defendant may be imprisoned for the nonpayment of costs where the statute makes the costs a part of the punishment, but not otherwise. State v. Sullivan, 9 Mont. 490; State v. Reynolds, 14 Mont. 383.

In Virginia the costs are a part of the fine, and the defendant being taken on a capias pro fine can be released only by paying the costs as well as the fine. Com. v. Fields, 33 Gratt. (Va.) 291.

3. Execution Against Person of Plaintiff upon Judgment for Costs. — In cases falling within the provisions of Code Civ. Pro. N. Y., § 1487, an execution may be issued against the person of the plaintiff upon a judgment against him for costs. See Kloppenbergh v. Neefus, 4 Sandf. (N. Y.) 655; Miller v. Scherder, 2 N. Y. 262; Corwin v. Freeland, 6 N. Y. 560; Parce v. Halbert, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 1 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 235; Brown v. Brockett, (County Ct.) 55 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 32; Parker v. Spear, (N. Y. Super. Process of Contempt for Nonpayment of Any Sum of Money is abolished in Ontario as between debtor and creditor. Berry v. Donovan, 21 Ont. App. 14. See Dickson v. Cook, 1 Ch. Chamb. (Ont.) 210; Harris v. Myers, 1 Ch. Chamb. (Ont.) 229; Pherill v. Pherill, 2 Ch. Chamb. (Ont.) 444. For older cases involving imprisonment for nonpayment of costs see Judgment Against Defendant. — An execution for the collection of costs may be issued against a defendant against whom a judgment has been entered in an action to set aside a fraudulent conveyance. Smith v. Duffy, 37 Hun (N. Y.) 506.

In South Dakota, under a statute (Comp. Laws Dak., § 5115) similar to that of New York referred to above, it is held that a judgment against the plaintiff for costs in an action in which the defendant might have been arrested may be enforced by an execution against the person. Winton v. Knott, 7 S. Dak. 179.

4. Imprisonment for Costs. — See Newton v. Rowe, 9 Q. B. 948, 58 E. C. L. 948; Lane v. Gover, 1 Harr. & M. (Md.) 459.

Under the Pennsylvania Act of 1842 abolishing imprisonment for debt, the right to imprison for nonpayment of costs depends upon the nature of the action in which the payment of costs was adjudged or decreed. See Pierce's Appeal, 103 Pa. St. 27; Com. v. Keeper, 2 Phila. (Pa.) 153, 13 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 276; Cochran v. Gowen, 9 Phila. (Pa.) 299, 31 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 252; Peterson v. Geary, 3 Pa. Co. Ct. 49; Fetters v. Barkers, 1 Pa. Dist. 448; Church's Appeal, 103 Pa. St. 263.

An Action for Unlawful Detainer being an action of tort, an execution issued therein for costs is not imprisonment for debt arising out of or founded on a contract. Toai v. Clapp, 64 Wis. 223.

In New York imprisonment for the nonpayment of interlocutory costs, except in certain cases, is prohibited by Code Civ. Pro., § 15. See Morrison v. Lester, 15 Hun (N. Y.) 538; Matter of Lippincott, 5 Dem. (N. Y.) 299; In re Humfreville, 154 N. Y. 115.

5. Right to Arrest Governed by Lex Fori. — Smith v. Spinolla, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 198; Sicard v. Whale, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 194; City Bank v. Lumley, (C. Pl. Gen. T.) 28 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 397; Johnson v. Whitman, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 10 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 111; Brown v. Ashbough, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 40 How. Pr.

9. Clear Proof Required. — In order to justify the arrest of the defendant in a civil action the existence of a proper ground of arrest must be clearly established.¹ It seems, however, that a reasonable degree of certainty is all that is required.²

10. Discretion of Court to Grant Order of Arrest. — A statute providing that the defendant in a civil action may be arrested in certain cases does not entitle the plaintiff to an order of arrest in a proper case as a matter of right, but the granting or refusing of the order is a matter within the discretion of the judge to whom the application is made.³ It follows that the manner in which the judge has exercised this discretion is not subject to review.⁴ This does not, however, prevent another court from reviewing the question whether the judge had authority to grant the order upon the facts shown.⁵ But the sufficiency of the evidence to support the jurisdiction to issue a warrant of arrest cannot be attacked in a collateral proceeding.⁶

VI. ENGLISH DEBTORS ACT — 1. Generally. — The English Debtors Act of 1869, while presenting some points of similarity to the American statutes, is yet in the main so different that it is deemed best to treat it separately. The act provides substantially that no person shall be arrested or imprisoned for making default in payment of a sum of money except in the following cases: 1. Default in payment of a penalty, or sum in the nature of a penalty, other than a penalty in respect of any contract. 2. Default in payment of any sum recoverable summarily before a justice or justices of the peace. 3. Default by a trustee or person acting in a fiduciary capacity and ordered to pay by a court of equity any sum in his possession or under his control. 4. Default by an attorney or solicitor in payment of costs when ordered to pay costs for misconduct as such, or in payment of a sum of money when ordered to pay the same in his character of an officer of the court making the order. 5. Default in payment for the benefit of creditors of any portion of a salary or other income in respect of the payment of which any court having jurisdiction in bankruptcy is authorized to make an order. 6. Default in payment of sums in respect of the payment of which orders are authorized by the act to be made.⁷ It is further provided that, subject to certain provisions and rules,

Statute of Punitive Character. — It is now well settled that the section authorizing imprisonment in such cases is of a punitive character.⁴

A proceeding against a fiduciary under the Debtors Act being of a punitive character, the Discretion of Court in Ordering Imprisonment. — Formerly the court had no discretion to refuse to commit a trustee who had defaulted within the terms of the act.¹ This rule, however, was found to work hardship in some cases where the trustee had been guilty of no moral delinquency, or where his imprisonment would serve no useful purpose,² and by the Act of 1878 the court was authorized to inquire into each case and to exercise its discretion in ordering the imprisonment of a defaulting trustee.³

Money Must Have Been in Defendant's Possession or Control. — In order to bring a trustee within the exception so as to render him liable to imprisonment for default, it must appear that the sum in question has been at some time in his possession or under his control.⁴

Inability of Trustee to Make Payment Immaterial. — The fact that a defaulting trustee is unable to pay the money in respect to which he is in default is ordinarily not a sufficient ground to induce the court, in the exercise of its discretion, to refuse to order his imprisonment, at least where the trustee has been guilty of a fraudulent breach of trust.⁵

Fraud Unnecessary. — It is not necessary that a defaulting trustee should be guilty of fraud to be liable to imprisonment.⁶

3. Default by Attorneys and Solicitors. — By the fourth exception as above stated an attorney or solicitor may be imprisoned for default in payment of costs when ordered to pay costs for misconduct as such, or in payment of a sum of money when ordered to pay the same as an officer of court.⁷ The attachment against a solicitor in such cases, as in the case of defaulting trustees, is not merely a civil process, but is in its nature punitive and disciplinary.⁸

VII. PRIVILEGE FROM ARREST — 1. Persons Privileged — a. MEMBERS OF ROYAL HOUSEHOLD. — In Great Britain members of the royal household and servants in attendance upon the sovereign are privileged from arrest by virtue of their office.⁹

b. LEGISLATORS. — That the discharge of their duty to the public may not be interfered with at the instance of private parties, members of Parliament,¹ of Congress,² and of the state legislatures³ are privileged from arrest in civil actions while going to, attending, and returning from the sessions of the bodies to which they respectively belong.

Duration of Privilege. — In Great Britain the privilege of members of Parliament exists not only during the session, but also for forty days before and forty days after each meeting of Parliament.⁴ In the United States members of Congress are privileged only during the sessions of Congress and for a reasonable time for going and returning.⁵

c. ELECTORS. — On the day of an election voters are privileged from arrest while voting and going to or returning from the polls.⁶

d. SOLDIERS AND SAILORS — POLICE. — Soldiers while engaged in the performance of their military duties are by statute in most states privileged from arrest.⁷ It seems, however, that there is no such exemption except when secured by statute.⁸

Marines. — By Act of Congress marines are exempt, when enlisted in the marine corps, from all personal arrest for debt or contract.⁹

Policemen. — In New York city policemen are protected from arrest in civil cases while actually on duty.¹⁰

e. FEDERAL OFFICERS. — It seems that an officer of the United States is

Under a statute exempting a member of the legislature from arrest during his attendance upon and while going to or returning from the sessions of the body, providing the time of such going or returning does not exceed fourteen days, a member is not entitled to his privilege after he has reached home, although within the fourteen days. Colvin v. Morgan, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 415; Corey v. Russell, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 204.

6. Electors. — Consult the constitutions of the several states. See also Swift v. Chamberlain, 3 Conn. 537.

In Swift v. Chamberlain, 3 Conn. 537, it was held that an elector who, having voted, waited in a house while the officers were counting the votes was attending to the business of the election, and therefore was privileged from arrest, under the Constitution of Connecticut.

The privilege does not begin until the elector actually sets out for the polls. Hobbs v. Getchell, 8 Me. 187, 23 Am. Dec. 497.

7. Soldiers Privileged. — Consult the statutes of the several states, and see Rev. Stat. U. S., § 1237; Greening v. Sheffield, Minor (Ala.) 276; Ray v. Hogeboom, 11 Johns. (N. State Militia in Service of United States. — A statute exempting from arrest members of the state militia while in the line of their military duty applies to such members notwithstanding they have been mustered into the service of the United States. People v. Campbell, 40 N. Y. 133. But a state statute exempting militia from arrest while in the service of the state does not exempt a soldier in the service of the United States but not of the state. White v. Lowther, 3 Ga. 307.

A Soldier on Furlough is not privileged. Ex p. McRoberts, 16 Iowa 600.

Exemption from Service of Process. — A statute which exempts officers and soldiers from arrest does not exempt them from the service of process where bail is not required. Hart v. Flynn, 8 Dana (Ky.) 190.

not liable to arrest upon civil process while engaged in the performance of his official duty, and if so arrested the federal court in its discretion may order his release. But the mere fact that the defendant is an officer of the United States does not secure to him immunity from arrest in civil cases when not engaged in the performance of his duty as such officer.¹

f. PERSONS IN ATTENDANCE UPON COURT — (1) Judicial Officers and Jurors. — In order that the due administration of justice may not be impeded or delayed, judicial officers, such as judges,² magistrates,³ coroners,⁴ and jurors,⁵ are privileged from arrest while engaged in the discharge of their public duties or in attendance upon the court.

Sheriffs are not privileged in the absence of a statute so providing.⁶

(2) Parties — (a) Generally. — Parties to suits are privileged from arrest while going to, attending, and returning from court on business connected with their suits.⁷

(b) In What Tribunals. — The protection extends to all legal tribunals of a judicial character, whether strictly courts of record or not, recognized by the laws of the state and having power to pass upon the rights of persons attend-

And cases cited infra, this subsection, In What Tribunals.

A party who has attended his cause all day in court, and retires in the evening to dine with his attorney and witnesses at a tavern, is privileged, causa redeundi. Lightfoot v. Cameron, 2 W. Bl. 1113. So also of a party waiting in the vicinity of the court for the trial of his cause. Childerston v. Barrett, 11 East 439; or after trial to hear judgment pronounced, Newton v. Harland, 8 Scott 70, 3 Jur. 679.

Party Arrested in Another Cause. — It has been held that the privilege of a party does not exist where he has been surrendered by his bail in another cause and is in actual custody at the time of his arrest. Davis v. Cummins, 3 Yeates (Pa.) 387. But where a person arrested on the civil process of a federal court was taken to the place of holding court, and being thus brought within the jurisdiction of the local court was arrested on civil process issuing therefrom after he had been released from the first arrest, but before he could leave the place, it was held that he was entitled to be discharged. Watson v. Judge, 40 Mich. 729.

The Service of a Writ of Capias ad Respondendum on a party has been held not a violation of privilege. Huntington v. Shultz, Harp. L. (S. Car.) 452, 18 Am. Dec. 660.

ing them.¹ Thus proceedings in bankruptcy before commissioners of bankruptcy are of such a nature as to privilege from arrest an interested party attending such proceedings.² So also a party attending a reference to arbitrators is privileged in the same manner as if he were attending a trial at court.³

(c) Duration of Privilege. — The privilege of a party from arrest continues during the time of his necessary attendance at court and for a reasonable time thereafter during which to return home, and not longer.⁴ It is held, however, that liberality will be exercised in regard to the reasonableness of the time for going, attending, and returning.⁵

Deviation from Direct Route When Returning Home. — A reasonable indulgence, not only as to the time within which he must return, but also as to his route, is allowed to a party to a suit returning from court. He is not required to return by the shortest and most direct route; a slight deviation will not result in a forfeiture of his privilege.⁶ But any unreasonable deviation or delay will result in such forfeiture.⁷

(a) Defendant in Criminal Proceedings. — There is no privilege from arrest in civil cases in favor of a defendant in criminal proceedings immediately after discharge or sentence.⁸ But it is otherwise if the apprehension of the defendant

Bail attending court for the purpose of justifying are privileged. Rimmer v. Green, 1 M. & S. 638.

The privilege from arrest exists in the case of all proceedings in their nature judicial, whether taking place in court or elsewhere. Watson v. Judge, 40 Mich. 729.

Though a party comes from a distance an unreasonable length of time before the trial, so that if then arrested he could not claim his privilege, yet if not arrested until after his case has been set for hearing he will be discharged. Persse v. Persse, 5 H. L. Cas. 671.

7. Privilege Lost by Unreasonable Deviation from Direct Route. — Where a party to a suit, privileged from arrest, while returning from court went to a place out of the direct route to his home for the purpose of attending the funeral of his son, it was held that he had forfeited his privilege. Chaffee v. Jones, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 260.

on a criminal charge was merely a contrivance to get him in custody in a civil suit.¹

The Question Whether a Person Brought into a Jurisdiction under Extradition Proceedings can be arrested in a civil suit has been elsewhere discussed.²

(3) Witnesses. — In order to insure the attendance of witnesses at the trial of causes in cases in which they might otherwise be reluctant to attend court,³ and in accordance with the general policy of the law to protect all persons necessarily in attendance at court or upon judicial proceedings, witnesses in the cause are privileged from arrest.⁴

Whether Subpœna Necessary to Entitle Witness to Protection. — It has been held that a witness who voluntarily attends court without being subpœnaed or summoned is not so privileged.⁵ In other cases the contrary has been held,⁶ and this latter doctrine would certainly seem to be the more consonant with reason, for the main object of the subpœna is to secure the attendance of the witness, and the administration of justice would be obstructed by his arrest when

Must Attend as Witness. — A person attending before a court or officer is not entitled to a witness's privilege from arrest unless he attends as a witness. Cole v. McClellan, 4 Hill (N. Y.) 59.

A Witness at Liberty on Bail is not privileged from arrest by his bail for the purpose of being surrendered. Ex p. Lyne, 3 Stark. 132, 14 E. C. Duration of Privilege. — A witness is privileged from arrest for a reasonable time to prepare for his departure and return to his home as well as during his actual attendance upon the court, but the privilege does not extend throughout the term at which the cause is marked for trial, nor will it protect the witness while engaged in transacting his general private business after his discharge from the obligations of the subpœna. *Smythe v. attending voluntarily to as great an extent as though he came under subpœna.

(4) Attorneys at Law. — An attorney at law is exempt from arrest on civil process while engaged in the trial of a cause and in attendance upon the court for that purpose, and while going to and returning from the trial. A full discussion of the privilege of attorneys will be found elsewhere in this work.¹

g. FREEHOLDERS. — It is held in New York that the defendant in an action of tort is not liable to arrest where he is a householder and freeholder residing in the county.² And in Pennsylvania a freeholder is exempt by statute from arrest in civil cases.³

h. PERSONS UNDER DISABILITY — (1) Infants. — It seems that at common law a person enjoyed no immunity from arrest in a civil action on account of infancy.⁴ In New York it is now provided by statute that an infant under the age of fourteen years, if arrested, may be discharged from arrest, as a privileged person, in the discretion of the court.⁵

(2) Insane Persons. — At common law a debtor is not privileged from arrest and imprisonment on account of his insanity,⁶ nor is the fact that he has become insane since his arrest a sufficient ground for his discharge.⁷ In several states statutes have been enacted providing for the discharge of insane debtors from imprisonment and their commitment to insane asylums.⁸ In New York a lunatic or an idiot, if arrested, may be discharged from arrest, as a privileged person, in the discretion of the court.⁹

(3) Females. — At Common Law there seems to have been no privilege from arrest in favor of unmarried females.

1. Attorney at Law. — See the title ATTORNEY AND CLIENT, vol. 3, p. 293.

A solicitor who is proceeding to court to attend his professional business there pending is privileged from arrest. Atty.-Gen. v. Leather-Sellers' Co., 7 Beav. 157. See also Williams v. Webb, 2 Dowl. N. S. 904, 5 Scott N. R. 898.

Attorney for Bail. — In Jones v. Marshall, 2 C. B. N. S. 615, 89 E. C. L. 615, 26 L. J. C. Pl. 229, it was held that an attorney who attended on the occasion when his client became bail for a defendant in an action in the lord mayor's court, and who acted there only as the attorney and adviser of such bail, and not as the attorney and adviser for either of the parties to the cause, was not privileged from arrest in going to or returning from the court on such occasions.

A Married Woman might be imprisoned, either with or without her husband, upon an execution against both,¹ but she could not be held in custody upon mesne process.²

Discharge on Motion. — Under the later practice it was the custom of the courts in the exercise of a sound discretion to discharge upon motion a married woman taken into custody upon an execution against herself and her husband, where it appeared that she had no separate estate.³ But such discharge would not be granted where the wife had a separate estate,⁴ or where the judgment was obtained against her alone.⁵

Statutes Exempting Females from Arrest. — In a number of states statutes exempting females from arrest in certain cases have been enacted.⁶ Thus it is provided in some states that no female shall be arrested in any action founded on contract⁷ or for any debt contracted by her.⁸ In other jurisdictions no female can be arrested except for injuries to person, character, or property.⁹ An

Action to Recover Penalty. — If a penalty for an infringement of a liquor law is recoverable by an action of debt, such action is in the nature of a civil action, and not a criminal prosecution; and a capias on a judgment therein cannot, under a statute prohibiting the arrest of females, issue against a female defendant in such proceedings. Strickland v. Bartow, 27 Mich. 68.

Contempt for Nonpayment of Costs. — A statute which enacts that it shall not be lawful to arrest the person of any female by virtue of any mesne process or process by execution in any civil action does not apply to proceedings for contempt, and an attachment for contempt in failing to pay costs in certiorari brought unsuccessfully by a woman to review the laying out of a highway may be issued. *Clark v. Under this statute a woman cannot be arrested in an action for debt on the ground of fraud in contracting it, Wheeler v. Hartwell, 4 Bosw. (N. Y.) 684; nor in an action for breach of promise to marry, Siefke v. Tappey, (C. Pl.) 3 Code Rep. (N. Y.) 23.

injury to property within the meaning of such a statute includes not merely an injury to the thing itself, but also an injury to the property of the owner therein.¹

i. DEBTOR BROUGHT INTO JURISDICTION BY FRAUD. — A debtor who has been brought into the jurisdiction from another state by means of false pretenses, for the purpose of being sued by his creditor, and has been arrested in such suit, is entitled to be discharged, this being a fraud upon the debtor of which the creditor will not be permitted to take advantage.²

2. Extension of Privilege to Codefendant. — It has been held that the exemption from arrest of one of two co-obligors on a joint and several obligation does not extend to the other in an action on the obligation against him.³ But it seems that if a man enters into a contract with two persons one of whom he knows is privileged, he thereby extends the exemption to the other.⁴ It is held, however, that if a person privileged is sued jointly with one not privileged, the privilege is lost.⁵

3. Waiver of Exemption — a. GENERALLY. — The exemption from arrest is a personal privilege which may be waived.⁶ The cases so holding are those in which the person privileged was a private person, by whose arrest and imprisonment no interference with public business would have been caused. It would seem that where the exemption exists by reason of the party's official position or duty to the public, the privilege is attached to the office and is not a personal privilege, and therefore cannot be waived. And it has been so declared with reference to representatives of foreign governments.⁷

b. WHAT CONSTITUTES WAIVER — Proceeding with Case. — Where a person privileged from arrest, upon being arrested, fails to claim his privilege, and proceeds to take steps in the defense of the case, this ordinarily constitutes a waiver.⁸

Costs. — Hovey v. Starr, 42 Barb. (N. Y.) 435; Maloy v. Dagnal, 1 Thomp. & C. (N. Y.) 10, addenda.

Arrest of Husband for Wife's Torts Allowed. — Soloman v. Waas, 2 Hilt. (N. Y.) 179. Compare the earlier case, Anonymous, 1 Duer (N. Y.) 613, 8 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 134.

1. Injury to Property Includes Injury to Owner's Right. — Duncan v. Katen, 6 Hun (N. Y.) 1, affirmed 64 N. Y. 625; Egypt v. Bolenius, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 2 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 193; Muser v. Miller, (N. Y. Super. Ct. Spec. T.) 3 Civ. Pro. (N. Y.) 388, 12 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 305, note; People v. Davidson, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 3 Civ. Pro. (N. Y.) 389, note. See also Northern R. Co. v. Carpentier, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 3 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 259, 4 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 47, 13 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 222.

Thus, under a statute authorizing the arrest of a female in an action for damages for a wilful injury to property, a warrant of arrest may issue against a female defendant who has induced another to deliver to her the property of a third person, and has converted it. Duncan v. Katen, 6 Hun (N. Y.) 1, affirmed 64 N. Y. 625. So a woman who has borrowed money on worthless security falsely represented to be good may be arrested. Egypt v. Bolenius, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 2 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 193. Compare Tracy v. Leland, 2 Sandf. (N. Y.) 723, 3 Code Rep. (N. Y.) 47.

A female may be arrested in an action to recover possession of personal property where the property is concealed, removed, or disposed of so that it cannot be found or taken by the sheriff. Starr v. Kent, (C. Pl.) 2 Code Rep. (N. Y.) 30.

A party attending court may avail himself of the protection from arrest which the law affords; but if he submits he cannot afterwards object to the imprisonment as unlawful. Brown v. Getchell, 11 Mass. 11.

7. No Waiver Where Privilege Is Due to Official Position. — Barbuit's Case, Cas. 1 Talb. 281.

8. Privilege Waived by Taking Steps in Case. — Stewart v. Howard, 15 Barb. (N. Y.) 26; Green v. Bonaffon, 2 Miles (Pa.) 219.

A plea in bar constitutes a waiver. Randall v. Crandall, 6 Hill (N. Y.) 342.

A motion to reduce bail is not a waiver.

Giving Bail. — There is some conflict in the decisions as to whether by submitting to arrest and giving bail a party privileged from arrest waives his privilege. According to the weight of authority this does not constitute a waiver.¹

Laches in Claiming Privilege. — Laches on the part of the person privileged in claiming his privilege constitutes a waiver thereof.²

4. Action for False Imprisonment for Arrest of Person Privileged. — At common law an action for false imprisonment does not lie for the arrest on legal process of a person at the time privileged from arrest.³

VIII. WHO MAY EXERCISE RIGHT OF ARREST — General Rule. — From the various statutes authorizing the arrest of the defendant in a civil action in certain cases the general rule follows by necessary implication that the right of arrest exists in favor of the plaintiff in any case coming within the provisions of the statutes. This rule is subject to the operation of certain principles now to be considered.

Plaintiff Must Have Present Right to Bring Action. — In order to entitle the plaintiff in an action to have the defendant arrested it must not only appear that he holds a valid claim against the defendant in a case in which the defendant might be arrested, but he must also have the right to commence a suit thereon.⁴

Right of Action Must Exist in Favor of Plaintiff and Not of Third Person. — The plaintiff cannot have the defendant arrested where it appears that the wrong complained of and constituting the ground of arrest was committed not upon the plaintiff, but upon some third person. In such case the right of arrest exists in favor of such third person alone.⁵ It is otherwise, however, if the claim has been assigned to the plaintiff.⁶

Nonresidents. — In the absence of a statute providing otherwise it seems that the right to arrest a defendant in a proper case is not affected by the fact that the plaintiff is a nonresident of the state.⁷

Partners. — It has been held that a partner cannot have his copartner arrested, this being forbidden by the very nature of the partnership.⁸

IX. WAIVER OF RIGHT OF ARREST. — The plaintiff may waive his right to Dobson v. Fitzpatrick, 2 W. N. C. (Pa.) 186. Nor is the privilege waived by a voluntary appearance for the purpose of making a deposition. Stone v. Sommerick, 2 Pa. Co. Ct. 309.

1. Privilege Not Waived by Giving Bail. — Larned v. Griffin, 12 Fed. Rep. 590; Farmer v. Robbins, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 47 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 415; Mackay v. Lewis, 7 Hun (N. Y.) 83; *U. S. v. A privilege from arrest is waived by giving a prison-bonds bond. Tipton v. Harris, Peck (Tenn.) 414.

2. Laches. — Wilson v. Nettleton, 12 Ill. 61; Cable v. Cooper, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 152; Farmer v. Robbins, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 47 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 415; Wood v. Kinsman, 5 Vt. 588; Prentiss v. Com., 5 Rand. (Va.) 697, 15 Am. Dec. 782.

The Mere Silence of an elector at the time of his arrest is not a waiver of his constitutional privilege. Swift v. Chamberlain, 3 Conn. 537.

Allen*, 6 L. C. Rep. 478. These cases deny the sufficiency of an affidavit for a capias founded on a claim of personal indebtedness where the claim is contingent or not reduced to certainty.

5. Where Wrong Is Committed Against Third Person. — Dunbar v. Hughes, 6 La. Ann. 466; Hart v. Grant, 8 S. Dak. 248.

6. Right of Assignee to Arrest. — King v. Kirby, 28 Barb. (N. Y.) 49. See also Winning v. Fraser, 13 L. C. Jur. 167; Quinn v. Atcheson, 4 L. C. Rep. 378; Laidlaw v. Burns, 16 L. C. Rep. 318.

7. Burrows v. Dumphy, 2 Harr. (Del.) 308.

In Louisiana it was provided by the Act of March 28, 1840, § 9, that no citizen of another state should be arrested in Louisiana at the suit of a nonresident creditor except where the debtor had absconded from his residence. See Broadnax v. Thompson, 1 La. Ann. 382; Conrey v. Elbert, 2 La. Ann. 18.

arrest the defendant either expressly¹ or by his conduct,² as by entering into a settlement with the defendant.³ Thus where a defendant has been guilty of fraud in contracting a debt so that he would be liable to arrest in an action for its recovery, but the plaintiff, with full knowledge of the fraud, settles the debt by taking the defendant's note therefor or by entering into any other new contract free from fraud, the defendant is not liable to arrest in an action on the new contract on account of the original fraud.⁴ But the acceptance by a creditor of worthless notes or bills in payment of a debt fraudulently contracted is not a waiver of the right to arrest the debtor in an action on the debt where such acceptance was brought about by means of false representations on the part of the debtor.⁵ Nor is the right to arrest a debtor affected by the acceptance by the creditor of security for the debt.⁶

Joinder of Causes of Action. — The arrest of a defendant must be on account of the plaintiff's entire cause of action, and not on account of a portion of it; and if the plaintiff joins a cause of action in which the arrest of the defendant is authorized with one in which the defendant is not liable to arrest, or embraces in his action demands in which he is not entitled to the defendant's arrest with those in which he is entitled to arrest the defendant, he will be deemed to have waived his right of arrest, and the defendant cannot be arrested on mesne or final process in the action as brought.⁷

Waiver by Election. — Where the plaintiff may bring his action either in tort

The defendant cannot be taken in execution in an action on a note containing a stipulation exempting the maker from arrest. Chickering v. Greenleaf, 6 N. H. 51.

Thus in an action on a judgment upon two claims, one for money due upon a sale and the other for a loan, the defendant is not liable to arrest upon an affidavit merely averring fraud in relation to the sale and not as to the loan. Goodale v. Finn, 4 Thomp. & C. (N. Y.) 432, 2 Hun (N. Y.) 151.

Rule Qualified. — Ordinarily an execution against the person will not issue upon a judgment in an action in which several causes of action are combined, if either of such causes is one upon a judgment on which an execution could not issue; but this rule does not apply where it appears from the verdict that the judgment was rendered only upon a cause of action which would support a judgment upon which an execution might issue. Hormann v. Sherin, 8 S. Dak. 36, 59 Am. St. Rep. 744.

or on contract, by electing to sue in contract he waives any right he might have had to imprison the defendant in an action for the tort.¹

X. EXECUTION AGAINST THE PERSON — 1. Generally — Grounds for Execution. — Except in cases where the king was plaintiff,² an execution against the body, capias ad satisfaciendum, lay at the common law only in actions of trespass vi et armis.³ But a series of statutes, beginning at an early period, gave the right of arrest on mesne process in a variety of actions,⁴ and the effect of this was to permit execution against the person in all such cases, for it was a doctrine of the common law that wherever a capias lies in process before judgment, it will lie in execution upon the judgment itself.⁵

Under Modern Practice the right to issue an execution against the body of a judgment debtor is dependent entirely upon statutes expressly authorizing executions against the body or authorizing arrest on mesne process.

Grounds for Execution. — As at common law, the general rule deducible from the decided cases and the various statutory provisions on the subject is that the body of a defendant may be taken in execution upon a judgment against him in all cases in which he might have been arrested before judgment and in no other.

Actions of Tort. — Thus executions against the body may issue in actions of tort,⁶ such as actions for injuries to property⁷ or person, as trover,⁸ ejectment,⁹ unlawful detainer,¹⁰ replevin,¹¹ for assault and battery,¹² or for seduction.¹³

4. "At common law the defendant was not liable to be arrested, upon mesne process, for civil injuries unaccompanied with force. This immunity of the defendant's person, in case of peaceable though fraudulent injuries, producing great contempt of the law in indigent wrongdoers, a capias was allowed to arrest the person in actions of account, though no breach of the peace was suggested, by the statutes of Marlbridge (52 Hen. III.), c. 23, and Westminster 2 (13 Ed. I.), c. 11, in actions of debt and detinue by statute 25 Edw. III., stat. 5, c. 17, and in all actions on the case by statute 19 Hen. VII., c. 9." Tidd's Pr. Coercive Imprisonment (contrainte par corps) is a mode of executing judgments under the laws of Quebec, and is not to be confounded with imprisonment for contempt of court. Côté v. Vermette, 9 Quebec 340. As to when it lies, see Code Civ. Pro. Quebec (1897), § 833.

10. Toal v. Clapp, 64 Wis. 223.

11. Replevin. — Imprisonment on an execution in replevin is not imprisonment for debt, and is not unlawful when authorized by common law or by statute; but a capias ad satisfaciendum on a judgment in replevin, not being authorized by common law, cannot be issued in the absence of a statute so providing. Fuller v. Bowker, 11 Mich. 204. And see Purchase v. Bellows, (N. Y. Super. Ct. Spec. T.) 23 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 421.

In Wisconsin, where a defendant who has prevailed in an action of replevin elects to take judgment for damages instead of for a return of the property replevied, he cannot enforce such judgment by an execution against the body of the plaintiff. Pomeroy v. Crocker, 3 Pin. (Wis.) 378, 4 Chand. (Wis.) 174.

In Cases of Fraud. — So also an execution against the body may issue where the defendant has been guilty of fraud in contracting the debt sued on¹ or in attempting to avoid its payment,² or of fraud in a fiduciary capacity,³ or of neglect in a professional employment.⁴

Where Defendant Could Not Have Been Arrested Before Judgment. — An execution cannot issue against a judgment debtor in a cause of action in which the defendant could not have been arrested on mesne process.⁵

Execution for Costs. — An execution to enforce the payment of costs may ordinarily issue against the person of the party in a civil action against whom judgment for costs has been rendered, in actions in which the defendant might have been arrested before judgment.⁶

2. Effect of Execution — Execution as Satisfaction of Judgment. — The rule is laid down in some of the cases that at common law the taking of the body of a defendant in execution amounts to a satisfaction of the judgment.⁷ According to the weight of authority, however, imprisonment on a body execution does not absolutely extinguish the judgment, but operates as a satisfaction thereof so long as the imprisonment continues, and suspends for the time being all other remedies of the creditor against the debtor. While it continues the creditor cannot have any other or different satisfaction for the same debt.⁸

Set-off. — The taking of the body in execu-

Moreover, where the person of the judgment debtor is in custody in satisfaction of the judgment an action cannot be maintained by the creditor against one standing as surety for the debtor to enforce collateral securities for the payment of the debt.¹

Execution Against One of Several Defendants. — In case of a judgment against several defendants jointly, the taking of one defendant in execution does not affect the plaintiff's right to proceed against the others.² But the imprisonment of one of the defendants, so long as it continues, is a good defense to a joint action on the judgment against all the defendants.³

Death of Debtor in Custody. — By the early common law, if a debtor taken in execution on a ca. sa. died while in custody, the creditor was not entitled to any further satisfaction for the debt.⁴ This rule was later changed by a statute providing that in case of the death of the debtor while in custody the creditor might proceed against his property for the debt just as if the debtor had not been taken in execution.⁵

Effect of Execution on Judgment Lien. — According to the weight of authority the taking of a debtor in execution operates as a suspension of the lien of the judgment, and any rights in or liens upon the property of the debtor acquired by third persons, by judgment or otherwise, during the imprisonment take precedence over the judgment on which the ca. sa. was issued.⁶

XI. DISCHARGE FROM ARREST AND IMPRISONMENT — 1. Defendant Arrested on Mesne Process — a. GENERALLY — Unauthorized Arrest. — A defendant arrested on civil process in an action in which an arrest is unauthorized is obviously entitled to his discharge.⁷ So also where the defendant is privileged from arrest.⁸

Where Arrest Was Authorized. — Again, a defendant arrested in a civil action upon affidavits showing a case in which an arrest would be authorized will be

Bill in Equity to Set Aside Fraudulent Conveyance. — A plaintiff in a judgment at law having his debtor in custody under a ca. sa. may file a bill in equity to have a previous conveyance by the debtor and a previous judgment confessed by him set aside for fraud. Pettus v. Smith, 4 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 197.

In Massachusetts a creditor does not, by committing his debtor, necessarily relinquish his claim on the attaching officer for the value of goods attached. Twining v. Foot, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 512. See also Lyman v. Lyman, 11 Mass. 317.

Where several judgments are entered against a debtor on the same day, each operating as a lien on his land, and one of the creditors takes the body of the debtor on a ca. sa., he thereby postpones his lien to that of each of the other creditors, and the relative priority of the liens is not affected by the discharge of the debtor under the insolvency law. Rockhill v. Hanna, 15 How. (U. S.) 193.

On a Joint Judgment Against Several, the service of a ca. sa. upon one does not extinguish the lien of the judgment upon the land of the others. Leake v. Ferguson, 2 Gratt. (Va.) 419.

discharged where it appears that the allegations contained in such affidavits are not supported by the evidence,¹ and this although a valid cause for arrest in fact existed at the time when the arrest was made.² So also where the cause of action for which the defendant was arrested has been subsequently extinguished or modified so that a valid cause for arrest no longer exists.³

Confession of Judgment. — It has been held that a confession of judgment by a debtor imprisoned for debt does not authorize his discharge from imprisonment.⁴

Discharge on Account of Plaintiff's Laches. — At common law a defendant imprisoned in a civil action is not entitled to his discharge on account of the plaintiff's delay in filing his declaration.⁵ He is entitled to his discharge, however, where the plaintiff is nonsuited for failure to appear.⁶ Under statutes so providing a defendant is entitled to be discharged from arrest if the declaration be not filed or the trial of the cause begun within the period limited by the statute.⁷

b. EVIDENCE. — Where the affidavits presented by the plaintiff make out a prima facie case against the defendant of a cause of action authorizing an arrest, the court will not set aside an order of arrest except where the evidence adduced by the defendant is clearly preponderating; a mere denial by the defendant is not sufficient.⁸ But the order will be vacated where the preponderance of the evidence is in the defendant's favor.⁹

Defendant in Custody under Ca. Sa. — Where a defendant in an action of debt was arrested and held to bail upon an affidavit charging fraud in concealment of property, and the allegation of fraud was denied in the answer, and by consent judgment was entered for the debt only, the issue of fraud not being tried, it was held that the defendant, being in custody under a ca. sa., was entitled to his discharge. *Claffin v. The existence or nonexistence of a ground of arrest, like any other fact, must be decided by the weight of testimony. Southworth v. Resing, 3 Cal. 377.

The Question upon a Motion to Vacate an Order of Arrest is whether upon the whole case, as made by the affidavits on both sides, the court, if called upon to act upon the application as res nova, would grant the order. If so, the motion to vacate should be denied; but if, after hearing both parties, it should appear that a case for arrest had not been made out,

A Distinction Is Made, however, in this connection between cases in which the facts constituting the ground of arrest are extrinsic to those constituting the cause of action and cases in which the facts upon which the order of arrest is issued and those constituting the cause of action are identical. In the former case the court, on a motion to vacate an order of arrest, will pass upon the facts in dispute and render judgment thereon according to the general rules of evidence governing the determination of questions of fact.¹ But where the facts constituting the cause of action and those authorizing the arrest are identical, the evidence in favor of the defendant necessary to cause the court to vacate an order of arrest must be such as would oblige the judge at the trial either to nonsuit the plaintiff or direct a verdict for the defendant.² The order in such case will not be vacated upon conflicting affidavits. The court will not try the merits of the case upon affidavits on a preliminary motion to discharge from arrest.³

Evidence of Nonexistence of Cause of Action or Ground for Arrest. — Where the right of arrest is derived from the nature of the action the defendant will not be permitted to introduce affidavits to show that there is no cause of action.⁴ But when the arrest is founded upon extrinsic facts wholly independent of the cause of action, as where the defendant has removed or disposed of his property, or is about to do so, with intent to defraud creditors, then the defendant may contest the truth of the facts upon which the arrest was ordered, and if he satisfies the court, either by his own affidavit or otherwise, that there was no sufficient ground for the arrest, he is entitled to be discharged.⁵

In Welsh v. Hill, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 100, it was held that a court might in its discretion admit or reject counter-affidavits on the part of the defendant, according to circumstances, but that where the plaintiff swore positively to a cause of action it would be improper to receive them.

Facts Unknown to Plaintiff When Arrest Was Made. — When the defendant has been arrested for secreting property, the plaintiff, on a motion to quash the writ of capias, may present evidence of facts tending to show that the defendant was guilty of secreting his property, although such facts were unknown to him when he swore out the process. Alcan v. Giroux, 18 Rev. L&G. 289.

6. Discharge on Payment. — Rogers v. McDearmid, 7 N. H. 506.

A Reasonable Opportunity to Tender Property sufficient to discharge the debt must be allowed

b. WITH CONSENT OF PLAINTIFF — Discharge with Plaintiff's Consent Satisfaction of Judgment. — It is the well-settled rule of the common law that the discharge, with the consent of the plaintiff, of a defendant taken in execution upon a judgment against him, operates as an absolute satisfaction of the judgment.¹

Intention of Plaintiff Immaterial. — And in such case the intention of the plaintiff in consenting to the discharge is immaterial.²

Effect of Contrary Agreement Between Parties. — Moreover, the rule applies notwithstanding any agreement between the parties to the contrary; and no new execution can issue upon the judgment, even though the defendant was discharged upon an express undertaking on his part that the plaintiff's rights should not be affected by the discharge, and that the defendant should be liable to be again taken in execution upon his failure to comply with the terms upon which he was discharged.³ Upon default by the defendant in such case the plaintiff's remedy is upon the new agreement and not upon the judgment debt.⁴

Voluntary Return to Imprisonment. — But where a debtor in custody upon execution procures a conditional liberation under an agreement to return to prison if the terms of the agreement are not complied with, and voluntarily returns into custody in pursuance of the agreement, he may be again imprisoned upon the judgment.⁵

Discharge of One of Several Defendants. — If one defendant taken in execution upon a joint judgment against two or more defendants be discharged with the plaintiff's consent, such discharge operates as a satisfaction of the judgment to a debtor taken in execution. Gilbert v. Rider, Kirby (Conn.) 180.

Qui Tam Action. — While in a mere private action the discharge by the plaintiff of the defendant in custody upon a ca. sa. is a discharge of the debt, in a qui tam action such discharge, so far as it relates to the moiety of the people, is void. Minton v. Woodworth, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 474.

Imprisonment for Fine. — Imprisonment for the nonpayment of a fine not being a satisfaction of the judgment, unlike the case of a private judgment, a discharge from the imprisonment is not a release or satisfaction of the fine. State v. Richardson, 18 Ala. 109; State v. Dodge, 24 N. J. L. 672.

as to all the defendants.¹ So also where two or more defendants are sued separately for the same cause of action and a separate judgment is recovered against each, the discharge of one defendant taken in execution operates as a satisfaction of all the judgments.²

Common-law Rule Changed by Statute. — The rule of the common law that the discharge of a judgment debtor from imprisonment operates as a discharge or satisfaction of the debt or judgment has in some jurisdictions been abolished by statute.³

No Satisfaction where Discharge Is Without Plaintiff's Consent. — In order that the discharge of a judgment debtor from imprisonment may operate as a satisfaction of the judgment, such discharge must be with the voluntary⁴ consent of the creditor.⁵ Thus the judgment is not satisfied by the escape of the debtor.⁶ So also where an imprisoned debtor procures his discharge by fraud or abuse of the forms of law.⁷

c. DISCHARGE BY ATTORNEY, AGENT, OR OFFICER. — Where the body of a debtor has been taken in execution it is held in New York that the creditor's attorney, in his general character as such, has no power to discharge the debtor without the consent of the creditor, unless there has been an actual satisfaction of the debt by the payment of the amount due.⁸ In Pennsylvania and Vermont the contrary has been held.⁹

Discharge by Special Agent. — The authority of a person as agent for the plaintiff to discharge a defendant from custody on execution without satisfaction of the debt must be clearly and fully proved and strictly pursued.¹⁰

Discharge by Officer. — The officer who has taken the debtor in execution has no authority to discharge him from custody without actual payment.¹¹

A defendant, having been held to bail and a judgment rendered against him in one state, cannot be held to bail in another state in an action on that judgment. Lambert v. Moore, 6 N. J. L. 131. But see Peck v. Hozier, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 346.

Vexatious Arrest. — A second arrest for the same cause of action will not be permitted when vexatious. Wheelwright v. Joseph, 5 M. & S. 93; Young v. Weeks, 7 Daly (N. Y.) 115.

Reinstatement of Order of Arrest. — When the defendant, after arrest, is discharged upon the dismissal of the complaint in the action, the judgment supersedes the order of arrest, and though an appeal has resulted in a new trial and a verdict for the plaintiff, the former order of arrest cannot be reinstated, though perhaps a new order might be obtained upon which an arrest might be had. *Bowman v. So also where the plaintiff has made a mistake in the form of action, and discontinues the action on that account and brings a second action, the defendant may be arrested a second time. Bates v. Barry, 2 Wils. C. Pl. 381.

The defendant may be arrested a second time where he has himself been guilty of fraud or contrivance to defeat the effect of the first process. Puckford v. Maxwell, 6 T. R. 52; Olmus v. Delany, 2 Stra. 1216; Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Vurhis, 39 Hun (N. Y.) 24.

So also where the first action was defeated through the fault of the officer a second arrest is proper. Housin v. Barrow, 6 T. R. 218.

In Cartwright v. Keely, 7 Taunt. 192, 2 E. C. L. 192, a second arrest was allowed after judgment in the first action had been reversed.

The Rule Against a Second Arrest Does Not Apply where no bail was given in the former action, Field v. Colerick, 3 Yeates (Pa.) 56; or where the process on which the first arrest was made was absolutely void, Schadle v. Chase, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 16 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 413; or where the party was discharged from the first arrest because privileged at the time, Petrie v. Fitzgerald, 1 Daly (N. Y.) 401; or where the original action was determined in the defendant's favor, but not on the merits, Gardner v. Lindo, 1 Cranch (C. C.) 592.

A Defendant Arrested on a Defective Order may be discharged from arrest and rearrested upon a new order based upon the same affidavit. Matter of Bowen, 20 Wis. 300, 91 Am. Dec. 404.

A Defendant Discharged Because of the Insufficiency of or Defects in the Affidavit for arrest may be rearrested. Peltier v. Washington Banking Co., 14 N. J. L. 391; Meucci v. Raud- third¹ time, in the same cause of action, where such arrest is not vexatious, or where the plaintiff has not been guilty of oppression or laches. But a second arrest is in all cases prima facie unlawful, and it must be so taken by the court unless the contrary appears from the facts and circumstances of the case.² Whether a second arrest would or would not be vexatious is a question to be determined upon the particular facts and circumstances of each case.³ And in every case of this kind the court must exercise a sound discretion.⁴

A Further Discussion of this branch of the subject will be found elsewhere in this work.⁵

In Cases of Escape. — Where a party held in custody in a civil action escapes therefrom, the general rule is that he may be retaken by the sheriff when he was detained on mesne process, but not where he was in custody under final process.⁶

Discharge on Security. — Where a party arrested in a civil action is discharged on giving bail, but the bail fail to justify, whereby the sheriff himself becomes bail, such party may be rearrested by the sheriff.⁷ But a sheriff who has discharged a debtor on bail or other security cannot rearrest him on the ground that the bail or security is insufficient.⁸

XIII. ARREST AND ATTACHMENT FOR SAME CAUSE OF ACTION — Arrest and Attachment in Same Action. — The plaintiff cannot ordinarily arrest the person of the defendant and attach his property in the same execution.⁹ Thus at common law, while a plaintiff in execution may take out executions against the person and the property of the defendant at the same time, only one process may be executed.¹⁰ But the plaintiff may take the property of the defendant and his body also where both remedies are necessary to insure the satisfaction of the judgment.¹¹ In some states it is provided by statute that an execution against the person of a defendant cannot be issued unless an execution against his property has been previously issued and returned unsatisfied.¹

Arrest in Separate Action. — A defendant arrested on mesne process is not entitled to his discharge merely because the plaintiff has previously commenced another suit against him for the same cause of action and has attached his property therein.² So also the defendant's property may be attached although he has been previously arrested on bail process for the same cause of action.³ But the plaintiff cannot sue out an attachment against the defendant, and at the same time, for the same cause of action, institute another suit against him in which bail is required.⁴

Mobs. (See also the titles COUNTIES, vol. 7, p. 949; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.) — In an act making municipalities liable for damages caused by mobs, but denying the benefits of the act to those through whose own illegal or improper conduct the damage was caused, improper means "that which is 'not suitable,' 'unfit,' 'not suited to the character, time, and place.'" Chadbourne v. Newcastle, 48 N. H. 106. That improper conduct is "such as a man of ordinary and reasonable care and prudence, under the circumstances, in plaintiff's situation, would not have been guilty of," is a correct charge to the jury. Palmer v. Concord, 48 N. H. 211, 97 Am. Dec. 605.

In Allegheny County v. Gibson, 90 Pa. St. 416, it was said: "It has never yet been held that the assertion of a legal right in a legal manner, in pursuit of a legal and ordinary business, was such 'improper conduct' as would prevent the owner of property destroyed by a mob from recovering its value under the Act of 1841 or similar statutes." See also Hermits of St. Augustine v. Philadelphia County, Bright. (Pa.) 116; St. Michael's Church v. Philadelphia County, Bright. (Pa.) 121; Donoghue v. Philadelphia County, 2 Pa. St. 230.

Improper Navigation. (See also the titles MARINE INSURANCE; NAVIGATION.) — An association of steamship owners agreed by deed to indemnify each other in respect of ships entered by them in the association against loss or damage by reason of improper navigation to goods carried on board such ships. In construing this deed Willes, J., said: "Improper navigation, within the meaning of this deed, is something improperly done with the ship or part of the ship in the course of the voyage. Suppose the ship were anchored in a place where she ought not to have been anchored without a light, and a collision took place in consequence, clearly that would be a damage arising from improper navigation — an omission properly to navigate the ship. Here, the bilgecock having been opened for the purpose of getting water out of the ship, and having been negligently left open, the seacock was opened for the purpose of getting in water to work the ship. The omission to close the bilgecock was clearly improper navigation within the meaning of this deed." Good v. London Steamship Owners' Mut. Protecting Assoc., L. R. 6 C. P. 563.

So in Carmichael v. Liverpool Sailing Ship Owners' Mut. Indemnity Assoc., 19 Q. B. D. 249, approving Good v. London Steamship Owners' Mut. Protecting Assoc., L. R. 6 C. P. 569, Fry, L. J., said: "Without attempting to define all the cases which may come within the words 'improper navigation,' I think those words as used in this rule do include every case where something is omitted to be done which ought to be done before the departure of the ship in order to enable the ship to carry the cargo safely from the port of departure to the port of arrival, and where that omission leads to the cargo not being safely and properly so carried."

A cargo of wheat was damaged while in the hold of the plaintiffs' ship, owing to a taint communicated to the wheat through the ceiling and limber boards of the vessel having been saturated with a composition which had leaked from the previous cargo. The ceiling and limber boards had not been properly cleaned before the wheat was stowed. It was held that the damage was not caused by "improper navigation," Canada Shipping Co. v. British Shipowners' Mut. Protection Assoc., 23 Q. B. D. 342.

In construing the same phrase, as used in an act limiting the liability of a shipowner for damages to another ship by reason of the "improper navigation of the former, Brett, M. R., said: "Improper must be considered as synonymous with wrongful. The case falls within this proposition: all damage wrongfully done by a ship to another whilst it is being navigated, where the wrongful action of the ship by which damage is done is due to the negligence of any person for whom the owner is responsible, is comprised within the statute." Inability to steer because of a screw "improperly inserted in the steering gear was held to be within the act. The Warkworth, 9 P. D. 145, 53 L. J. Adm. 65, affirming 9 P. D. 20.

Improper Removal, with intent to make the county chargeable, in an act relating to paupers, means "without legal authority." Foster v. Cronkhite, 35 N. Y. 145. See generally the title POOR AND POOR LAWS.

Improperly — Attachment. (See also the title ATTACHMENT, vol. 3, p. 181.)—In an attachment act requiring a bond for costs and the damages which the defendant might sustain in consequence of the writ's being sued out "improperly, this word "has a broader signification than a mere irregularity, and * * * it is insufficient to allege as a breach of the condition, although in the express words of the bond, that it was improperly issued. * * * It is only improperly issued when the plaintiff has no meritorious cause of action, of that class of actions in which the law authorizes a resort to the remedy against the defendant, or, having such a cause of action, the ground alleged in the affidavit for its issue is untrue, or not one of the grounds enumerated which must exist before it can be obtained." Steen v. Ross, 22 Fla. 480.

1. Improvement Defined.—Traver v. Merrick County, 14 Neb. 333; Chase v. Sioux City, 86 Iowa 606, quoting 10 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW (1st ed.) 243.

In Tucker v. Judd, 3 Hawaii 203, it was said: "The term improvements, according to Bouvier, applies principally to buildings, 'though generally it extends to amelioration of every description of property, whether real or personal.'"

Improve.—"Worcester defines the word improve to mean, 'to make good use of; to employ advantageously; to increase, augment, or enhance, as to that which is evil;' while Webster defines it, 'to make better; to advance in value; to use or employ to good purpose; to make productive; to turn to profitable account; to use for advantage.'" Vandall v. South San Francisco Dock Co., 40 Cal. 90.

Plural.—The fact that an ordinance in some sections speaks of the improvement to be made as improvements, is not sufficient of itself to show that several distinct improvements are proposed. Wilbur v. Springfield, 123 Ill. 395.

Realty.—In Ames v. Trenton Brewing Co., 56 N. J. Eq. 317, it was said: "The thing done which is held to be an improvement is done to the realty. The word itself conveys this meaning. In order that there might be an improvement, there must previously have been something to be improved."

Improvements and Appurtenances. (See also APPURTENANT, vol. 2, p. 520.)—A deed contained the following words: "The following described lands, * * * with all the mills, machinery, tools, fixtures, appurtenances pertaining to the same." In construing this provision the court said: "This means substantially (according to our view of it) the same as the expression, 'and all the improvements thereon'—a phrase of common use in our Western country to denote whatever has the character of a physical fixture at the time, and is generally comprehended in the words 'appurtenances,' 'hereditaments,' etc., and in this case made to come under the last designation expressly in the habendum clause." Bemis v. First National Bank, 63 Ark. 625.

Improving Real Estate — Purposes of Incorporation.—In Vandall v. South San Francisco Dock Co., 40 Cal. 84, it was held that where a corporation was formed to buy, improve, lease, sell, and otherwise dispose of real estate, the term improve included the performance of any act, whether on or off the land, the direct and proximate tendency of which was to benefit the property or enhance its value.

Improving Trust Property.—Property was left in trust for a particular purpose, and the particular mode of improving the donation was left to the discretion of the trustees. In construing this provision Shaw, C. J., said: "Possibly it may be argued that the term improving may be used in a restricted sense, and confined to investing, increasing, and bettering the fund. But we are inclined to believe that the term, as used at that period, was used in a larger sense, as to use, occupy, and appropriate, limiting it, if used in that sense in the present case, to the means; the end being designated with sufficient precision." Greene Foundation v. Boston, 12 Cush. (Mass.) 57.

In considering a trust to improve and manage real estate, Senator Maison in Coster v. Lorillard, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 359, said: "I know not what the trustees could not do with this estate, under the head of improvements; anything, everything, which will tend to enhance its value." And see Greene Foundation v. Boston, 12 Cush. (Mass.) 57.

Trust Estate. — A statute of New York authorized trustees to sell the trust estate to raise money to make improvements where necessary. It was held that the improvements contemplated were of the real estate, not of the trust fund, and that the sale of the land to improve the balance of the estate and income or principal was not authorized by the statute. Matter of Roe, 119 N. Y. 509.

Repairs and Improvements Distinguished. (See also REPAIRS.) — In Walsh v. Wilson, 131 Mass. 535, it was held that repairs of premises in which dower was claimed, made by tenants for the purpose of keeping the house in tenable condition, were not improvements. See also Clark v. Smith, 34 Barb. (N. Y.) 140.

The charter of a city provided that the city should not be liable for a failure to establish streets and sidewalks, or for failing to alter and improve such streets. It was held that improve as thus used referred to the betterment of the streets and sidewalks which had already been established, and putting them in proper condition, and not to such repairs and improvements as were necessary to keep and make them reasonably safe. Birmingham v. Starr, 112 Ala. 98, citing Bieling v. Brooklyn, 120 N. Y. 98.

Improvements and Fixtures. (See also the title FIXTURES, vol. 13, p. 658.) — The word improvements as used in a lien expresses every addition, alteration, erection, or annexation made by the lessees during the demised term. The first-used word is more comprehensive than the word "fixtures," which is necessarily embraced in it. French v. New York, (Supm. Ct. Gen. T.) 16 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 220; Chase v. Sioux City, 86 Iowa 606.

Temporary Structures. — A covenant provided that certain restrictions upon the use of land should cease "whenever either of the said lots of ground shall be improved by buildings, which shall be built in accordance with the spirit of this agreement." In construing this provision the court said: "The spirit of the agreement evidently contemplated the improvement of the ground by the erection of permanent buildings. That is the popular and ordinary sense of the word improved. It does not refer to mere temporary structures, intended only to answer the purposes of present use, however long that use might continue." St. Andrew's Lutheran Church's Appeal, 67 Pa. St. 519. See generally the title BUILDING RESTRICTIONS AND RESTRICTIVE AGREEMENTS, vol. 5, p. 1.

Improved and Inclosed. — In an action against a railroad company for killing stock, the declaration, in stating the excepted places specified in the statute, which a railroad company is not required to fence, used the word unimproved instead of "uninclosed" as used in the statute. It was held that this averment was sufficient. The exception having been stated larger and the obligation of the company less than it was, the defendant could not complain. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Wade, 46 Ill. 115.

Improved Land — Occupied. — Land in a deed was described as improved land. In construing this deed the court said: "The word improved is not a technical word, having a precise legal meaning. Indeed, there is no very good authority for its use in the sense in which it is not unfrequently employed in familiar speech. It seems quite probable that, Gridley Putney living with his brother Rodney, and working with him upon the land, it was supposed that their possession of it was a joint possession; or that the conveyancer may have supposed that their connection with the land might be well enough expressed by the word improved." Bond v. Fay, 8 Allen (Mass.) 215.

Same — Cultivate. — In Clark v. Phelps, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 203, the court, in speaking of the terms "improved or cultivated land," as used in the law as to laying out highways, said: "These terms are to be taken in the popular sense, according to the general understanding of the community, when distinguishing what is called wld land, or land in a state of nature, from that which has been cultivated and improved. The terms to 'improve or cultivate' may be considered synonymous. To cultivate is defined 'to improve the product of the earth by manual industry.' When speaking of improved land it is generally understood to be such as has been reclaimed, is used for the purpose of husbandry, and is cultivated as such, whether the appropriation is for tillage, meadow, or pasture." See also Voight v. Meyer, 42 N. Y. App. Div. 353.

Improved was held to be synonymous with "converted into arable ground or meadow," in Ross v. Smith, 1 B. & Ad. 911, 20 E. C. L. 508.

Within the Minnesota statute relating to division fences, it has been held that the word improve was not used in the same sense as "cultivate." Boenig v. Hornberg, 24 Minn. 310. See also the title FENCES, vol. 12, p. 1050.

Same — Highway. — A statute was directed against trespasses upon the garden, orchard, or other improved land of another. It was held that the highway could not be considered as the improved land of an adjoining proprietor, and that the words did not apply to land within the limits of a highway. People v. O'Brien, 60 Mich. 13. See generally the titles HIGHWAYS, vol. 15, p. 343; TRESPASS. See also Rohrer v. Rohrer, 18 Pa. St. 367.

But a private lane may be improved land within a statute relating to line fences. Odenwelder v. Frankenfield, 153 Pa. St. 526.

Highways. (See also the titles HIGHWAYS, vol. 15, p. 343; STREETS AND SIDEWALKS.) — In State v. Hopping, 18 N. J. L. 423, it was held that the word improvements as used in a New Jersey statute concerning roads meant inclosures or inclosed fields — lands fenced in as distinguished from wastes or commons.

A power to improve the course of roads includes the power to lower and raise roads, to fill up hollows, and to level hills. Boulton v. Crowther, 2 B. & C. 703, 9 E. C. L. 227.

Same — Vacation of Street. — Within a statute requiring that notice of improvements be given before the passage of an ordinance authorizing them, it was held that the vacation of a street was an improvement. Cook v. Chambersburg, 39 N. J. L. 257.

Same — Grading. — In Chase v. Sioux City, 86 Iowa 603, it was held that the filling or grading of a city lot to accord with the established grade of a street was an improvement within the meaning of a statute making the city liable for damages to property resulting from a change in the grade of a street, where improvements had been made thereon according to a grade previously established.

Same — Establishment of Highway. — A statute provided that before the commissioners of any county should order any improvement, a petition should be presented to them by a majority of the landowners. It was held that the word improvement related not only to the improvements of an existing road, but also to the establishment and construction of a new road. Putnam County v. Young, 36 Ohio St. 292.

Barn or Dwelling House. — In State v. Smith, 21 N. J. L. 92, it was held that a barn or dwelling house was not such an improvement as was required to be laid down in the map annexed to the return of the surveyors of highways. See also State v. Hopping, 18 N. J. L. 423.

Floor. — In Harris v. Kelly, (Pa. 1888) 13 Atl. Rep. 527, an additional floor put into a building intended for use as a skating rink by the tenant was held to be an improvement within a provision that all improvements were to remain part of the property. See also Doran v. Chase, 2 W. N. C. (Pa.) 699.

Milldam. — In Currie v. Adams, 14 Quebec 169, it was held that a dam, though not actually working the mill, but constructed to provide a reserve supply of water for the millpond, was an improvement.

Water Mains. — For purposes of taxation, water mains, pipes, and hydrants in the streets of a city are improvements. Colorado Fuel, etc., Co. v. Pueblo Water Co., 11 Colo. App. 352.

Dower. — As to the mode of assigning dower as affected by improvements, see the title DOWER, vol. 10, p. 175; as to allowances for the widow's improvements, see the title DOWER, vol. 10, p. 199; as to damages, see the title DOWER, vol. 10, p. 191; as to the deduction of improvements from profits, see the title DOWER, vol. 10, p. 196; as to the time of valuation of the estate, see the title DOWER, vol. 10, p. 189.

Wills — Fee Simple. (See also the title WILLS.) — A testator devised the improvement of a farm to a sister and provided that the farm should be equally divided between her legal heirs at her death. The court said that the use of the word improvement might have "a considerable tendency to show that a fee simple was not intended to be given." Bowers v. Porter, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 204.

But in Anonymous, 3 Dall. (Pa.) 477, it was held that a devise "to my son James the improvement whereon I now live" gave an estate in fee to him.

A testator gave to his wife "the improvement of all my estate, personal or real, which improvement to belong solely to herself, for her own use and benefit." In construing this gift, Shaw, C. J., said: "The word improvement must be construed according to the subject-matter. Of land, it would constitute a freehold estate, for the devisee's life; of plate, pictures, furniture, it would be the possession and use; of money or securities or stocks, it would be the income." Lamb v. Lamb, 11 Pick. (Mass.) 376.

Eminent Domain. (See also the title EMINENT DOMAIN, vol. 10, p. 1158.) — The Constitution of Ohio provided that the jury, in assessing damages in condemnation proceedings, should not take into consideration any advantage that might result to the owner on account of the improvement for which the property was taken. In construing this provision where land was taken for a public road the court said: "In short, whatever benefit results to the land on account of the improvement is covered by the provision. The use of the word improvement has peculiar significance in this connection. It relates to the work done, the road itself when constructed, as well as to its uses and purposes. The express language, therefore, of the constitution covers benefits accruing on account of the road itself, as well as on account of its uses." Frederick v. Shane, 32 Iowa 256.

Internal Improvements — Eminent Domain. (See also INTERNAL IMPROVEMENTS.) — In West Virginia Transp. Co. v. Volcanic Oil, etc., Co., 5 W. Va. 387, it was said: "It has been decided time and time again, and is therefore settled by the best authority, that the construction of railroads, turnpikes, canals, ferries, telegraphs, wharves, basins, etc., creating the necessary facilities for intercommunication, constitutes what is generally known by the name of 'internal improvements,' and gives occasion for the exercise of the right of eminent domain."

Ditches — County Improvements. — In Wallace v. Skagit County, 8 Wash. 457, it was held that the construction of a local ditch was not such an improvement as to require the county commissioners to take a bond from the contractors.

Municipal Improvements. (See also the titles MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS; SPECIAL ASSESSMENTS.) — The provision in the charter of the city of Trenton that requires that "all contracts for doing work, furnishing materials for any improvement provided under this act," etc., shall be given to the lowest bidder, applies only to contracts relating to the streets, etc., and not to a contract to furnish rubber hose for the fire department. Trenton v. Shaw, 49 N. J. L. 638.

Public Lands. (See also the titles PUBLIC LANDS; STATE LANDS.) — In Simpson v. Robinson, 37 Ark. 137, it was said: "An improvement under our land system does not mean a general enhancement of the value of the tract from the occupant's operations. It has a more limited meaning, which has in view the population of our forests and the increase of agricultural products. All works which are directed to the creation of homes for families, or which are substantial steps towards bringing lands into cultivation, have in their results the special character of improvements, and under the land laws of the United States, and of the several states, are encouraged."

A statute provided that it should not be lawful within twelve months after the passage of the act for any person to enter into a quarter-section which had been improved by any actual settler. It was held that any improvement, however small, was within the protection of the act. Johnson v. Gresham, 5 Dana (Ky.) 547.

Clearing Land — Distinction Between Improvement and Settlement. — In Bixler v. Baker, 4 Binn. (Pa.) 217, it was said: "In our Acts of Assembly and in common parlance there is a difference between an improvement and a settlement. An improvement may be made by clearing land and cultivating it without residing on it. A settlement requires an actual residence."

Patents. (See also the title PATENTS.) — The owners of letters patent for a new and useful improvement in cigarette machines assigned a third interest therein and also in any improvements, renewals, or reissues of said cigarette machines or letters patent. It was held that the term improvements did not include a new invention. Allison Brothers Co. v. Allison, 144 N. Y. 29, reversing 70 Hun (N. Y.) 33. See also Geiser Mfg. Co. v. Frick Co., 92 Fed. Rep. 191.

Same — Improved Construed New. — Where, under a statute providing that patents might be granted for new and original designs, a patent was granted for a new and improved design, no prior design being mentioned, the term improved was construed to mean new and distinctive, and improved as compared with others; and in connection with "new," to mean original. Wood v. Dolby, 7 Fed. Rep. 475.

Trademark. (See also the title TRADEMARKS.) — In a trademark case it was held that the introduction of the word improved by the defendant into the name of an article manufactured by him did not justify the use of the name if without the introduction of such word the plaintiff had a right to object to such use. Russia Cement Co. v. Le Page, 147 Mass. 206, 9 Am. St. Rep. 685.

Mechanics' Liens. (See also the title MECHANICS' LIENS.) — In Koenig v. Mueller, 39 Mo. 165, it was held that if the improvements placed upon leasehold property are such as a tenant could remove at the end of the term, they are not improvements within the meaning of the mechanics' lien law.

In Schmidt v. Armstrong, 72 Pa. St. 355, it was held that the word improvement in the mechanics' lien law covered only useful and important erections constituting part of the works placed there by the tenant.

Same — Engines and Boilers. — In Collins v. Mott, 45 Mo. 100, it was held that the term improvement as used in a mechanics' lien law did not include engines and boilers, but was synonymous with "buildings." See also Baylies v. Sinex, 21 Ind. 45.

Same — Windmill. — In Phelps, etc., Windmill Co. v. Baker, 49 Kan. 434, it was held that a windmill was an improvement within the law.

Same — Coal Mine. — In Central Trust Co. v. Sheffield, etc., Coal, etc., Co., 42 Fed. Rep. 106, a coal mine was held to be an improvement within the meaning of the mechanics' lien law.

Collieries. — The Pennsylvania Act of February 27, 1868, extending the Mechanics' Lien Act of 1836, to improvements, etc., for oil or other refineries, does not apply to leases for the ordinary purposes of residence, etc. See also Esterley's Appeal, 54 Pa. St. 195. But compare Thomas v. Smith, 42 Pa. St. 73.

Same — Breaking Prairie. — In Brown v. Wyman, 56 Iowa 452, 41 Am. Rep. 117, it was held that breaking the prairie was not an improvement in land for which a mechanics' lien would lie.

Same — Independent Structure. — A mechanics' lien law provided that a lien for work or materials should attach to buildings, erections, or improvements for which they were furnished. It was held that the statute did not give a mechanics' lien for repairs upon an existing building to the prejudice of rights previously acquired by a mortgagee. Getchell v. Allen, 34 Iowa 559; Haeussler v. Thomas, 4 Mo. App. 468. So in Meistrell v. Reach, 56 Mo. App. 243, it was said that the words "building" and improvement "are used in the mechanics' lien statute as synonymous terms."

The term improvement has been generally held not to apply to the addition or betterment of a building, but to some independent structure on the land. Neilson v. Iowa Eastern R. Co., 44 Iowa 77; Equitable L. Ins. Co. v. Slye, 45 Iowa 615; Collins v. Mott, 45 Mo. 102; Richardson v. Koch, 51 Mo. 270. Compare Wimberly v. Mayberry, 94 Ala. 240.

I. DEFINITION AND SCOPE OF ARTICLE — 1. Definition. — An improvement is defined as an amelioration in the condition of real or personal property, effected by the expenditure of labor or money, for the purpose of rendering it useful for purposes other than those for which it was originally used, or more useful for the same purposes.¹

Confined to Real Property. — The term is, however, ordinarily used only in reference to real property,² and in this article improvements to real property only will be treated.

Betterment. — The term "betterment," which has exactly the same meaning as improvement so far as the present article is concerned, is defined as an improvement made upon real estate, more extensive in its nature than a mere repair,³ and which increases in a substantial degree the value of the property.⁴

2. Scope of Article. — This article will be strictly confined to a treatment of the right of an occupant of land who has placed improvements thereon to be compensated therefor, either directly or indirectly. The reader is referred to other portions of this work for a treatment of such subjects as the improvement of highways,⁵ or of navigation,⁶ special or local improvements,⁷ the right to real property arising from improvement thereof,⁸ or the lien on property arising from the erection of improvements thereon by one claiming neither the title thereto nor the right to possession thereof.⁹

The Line of Demarcation Between Improvements and Fixtures seems rather vague until the subject is given a close study. The true distinction is that observed in this work, viz.: the law of improvements relates to the right of the occupant to compensation for his additions to the property, while the law of fixtures relates to the right of such occupant to remove his additions.¹⁰

II. GROWTH OF THE DOCTRINE OF COMPENSATION — 1. Original Common-law Rule. — By the English and American common law, the true owner of land might recover it in ejectment without any liability to pay for improvements which might have been made upon it by an occupant without title. Improvements annexed to the freehold the law deemed a part of it, and they passed with the recovery; and every occupant made improvements at his peril, even

1. Definition. — Bouv. L. Dict.

"Improvements," as used in a contract to purchase land and improvements of the plaintiff, "must be construed to mean work and labor generally of the plaintiff enhancing the value of the premises." Spencer v. Tobey, 22 Barb. (N. Y.) 260, per Strong, J.

The Term Improvements "Is a More Comprehensive Word than 'Fixtures,' and necessarily includes it, and such additions as the law might not regard as fixtures. It would be difficult to select a more comprehensive word; and where the parties say that all improvements which may be placed on the premises shall belong to the lessors, it is difficult to say what, if anything, would be excluded." French v. New York, (Supm. Ct. Gen. T.) 16 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 220. See also West v. Blake-way, 2 M. & G. 729, 40 E. C. L. 598. And see generally the title FIXTURES, vol. 13, p. 594.

Not Necessarily Buildings. — An improvement within the meaning of the California statute with reference to adverse possession does not necessarily mean buildings or other structures on the land. Allen v. McKay, 120 Cal. 332.

2. Ordinarily Confined to Real Property. — Black's L. Dict.

3. Definition of "Betterment." — Vol. 4, p. 7.

if he acted under a bona fide belief of ownership.¹ This rigid rule was founded upon the idea that the owner should not pay an intruder, or disseisor, or occupant, for improvements which he never authorized.² It was supposed to be founded in good policy, inasmuch as it induced diligence in the examination of titles,³ and prevented intrusions upon and appropriations of the property of others.⁴

2. Modification in Equity. — Chancery, borrowing from the civil law,⁵ made the first innovation upon the common-law doctrine. And it came at length to be held in equity, that when a bona fide possessor of property (for equity no more than law would aid a mala fide possessor) made meliorations and improvements upon it in good faith, and under an honest belief of ownership, and the real owner was for any reason compelled to come into a court of equity, that court, applying the familiar maxim that he who seeks equity must do equity, and adopting the civil-law rule of natural equity, would compel him to pay for those improvements or industrial accessions, not the cost indeed, but so far as they were permanently beneficial to the estate and enhanced its value.⁶

Mather, 14 Tex. 235, it was said that the right of the possessor in good faith to be remunerated on eviction, for his improvements, was a principle of the laws of Spain which were in force up to the adoption of the first statute on the subject of improvements. Cited with approval in Saunders v. Wilson, 19 Tex. 194, in which case Hemphill, C. J., further discussed the Spanish law on the subject.

3. Rule Adopted in Courts of Law. — The courts of law next modified the strict rule of the common law (which makes the occupant of land which is owned by another, no matter how good the faith of the occupant may be, liable for the rents and profits) to this extent, that where such owner brought his action for mesne profits, which the courts of law treated as an equitable action, the bona fide occupant might set off or recoup the value of his permanent improvements to the extent of the rents and profits demanded, but no further.¹

Whether a Complainant May Obtain Relief. — In Putnam v. Ritchie, 6 Paige (N. Y.) 390, the plaintiff, in the honest belief that his title was good, improved the estate, and was afterwards sued in ejectment for the recovery thereof. Thereupon he filed his bill to restrain the further prosecution of the action, or to be allowed for his improvements; but Chancellor Walworth dismissed the bill. See also Pegley v. Woods, 14 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 47; Parsons v. Moses, 16 Iowa 440; Butler v. Butler, 164 Ill. 171, affirming 61 Ill. App. 51; Williams v. Vanderbilt, 145 Ill. 238, 36 Am. St. Rep. 486.

This decision is in harmony with the doctrine laid down by Judge Story in his work on Equity. But the question some years afterwards arose and was differently decided in Bright v. Boyd, 1 Story (U. S.) 478. There relief was granted the complainant, against whom a judgment in ejectment had been recovered for the possession of certain land, which he had previously purchased at a judicial sale, and upon which he had put expensive improvements, supposing his title to be good. To the same effect are the following cases: Thomas v. Thomas, 16 B. Mon. (Ky.) 420; Valle v. Fleming, 29 Mo. 152, 77 Am. Dec. 557; Union Hall Assoc. v. Morrison, 39 Md. 281; Hatcher v. Briggs, 6 Oregon 31. See also Effinger v. Hall, 81 Va. 94.

But in Wharton v. Moore, 84 N. Car. 479, 37 Am. Rep. 627, the Supreme Court of North Carolina said, in reference to the case of Bright v. Boyd, 1 Story (U. S.) 478, and those of Mathews v. Davis, 6 Humph. (Tenn.) 324, and Herring v. Pollard, 4 Humph. (Tenn.) 362, 40 Am. Dec. 653, in which it was followed: "These cases pressed the doctrine further than we have found it carried in any other state except in this."

Circumstances under Which Equity Would Not Require Compensation for Improvements. — In a case where the plaintiff in an action to recover two adjoining lots obtained a judgment for one, but as to the other the defendant was adjudged to have acquired title by possession, it was held that the plaintiff was not accountable in equity out of the lot which he recovered for improvements. Griffin v. Lee, 90 Ga. 224.

4. Universal Recognition of Right to Compensation. — The right of a bona fide occupant who has made lasting and permanent improvements upon land which has turned out to be another's, to be compensated therefor, has thus come to be universally recognized.¹

Apparently Conflicting Cases Explained. — There are several cases in which it has been said that the right of an occupying claimant to compensation for improvements is entirely of statutory origin, and does not exist independent of statute. *Chapman v. But it is considered that these cases meant to refer merely to the right to recover for such improvements in an affirmative action, and in this view they are not in conflict with the statement in the text.

c. CONSTITUTIONALITY OF STATUTES — (1) General Rule — Statutes Constitutional — (a) Rule Stated. — That statutes allowing compensation to occupants of land under color of title, for improvements made thereon by them in good faith, are constitutional, is well established.³

In Tennessee the doctrine has been announced that the acts of assembly allowing the value of improvements to be recovered at law are reconcilable with the constitution to this extent and no further: that a bona fide possessor of land, from whom the same has been recovered, is entitled to such improvements as have permanently improved the land, provided the value thereof does not exceed the value of the rents and profits; but where a party improves land, with knowledge or notice of a better title in another, he is not entitled either in law or in equity to any diminution from the rents and profits by reason of said improvements. M'Kinly v. Holliday, 10 Yerg. (Tenn.) 477.

And in Nelson v. Allen, 1 Yerg. (Tenn.) 361, the court went further and declared the acts in reference to improvements absolutely unconstitutional. But the decision seems to be founded on a mistaken view of the case of Green v. Biddle, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 1, which case is explained further on in this note.

(2) Provisions Rendering Statutes Unconstitutional — (a) Giving Occupying Claimant Option to Retain Land on Paying Unimproved Value. — But an Ohio statute giving to the occupying claimant, after a recovery against him in ejectment, the option of either retaining the land upon paying in money its value without the improvements, or being paid for his improvements, was held void, as being a palpable invasion of the rights of private property and a violation of the constitutional provision that "private property shall ever be held inviolate."²

(b) Authorizing General Money Judgment for Improvements. — In Iowa a statute authorizing the rendition of a general money judgment against the owner of the land in favor of the occupying claimant for his improvements, and the enforcement of such a judgment by a general execution, has been held to be unconstitutional on the ground that under it a judgment for improvements would be a lien upon all of the real estate of the owner and could be made out of any of his property, real or personal, and he could not escape by losing the property which had been improved.³

View of the Texas Court. — A different view would seem to be entertained in Texas.⁴

View in North Carolina. — And in North Carolina the court does not appear to have doubted the constitutionality of a statute allowing the occupant to have a occupant to take it at that price, was valid and not unconstitutional. Fisher v. Cockerill, 5 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 129.

Statute Exempting Occupying Claimant from Liability for Rents or Profits, or Damages Held Valid. — See Ross v. Irving, 14 Ill. 171.

Case Explained. — In the case of Green v. Biddle, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 1, which determined that the occupying claimant law of Kentucky of 1812 was unconstitutional, the decision was placed on the ground that the law impaired the obligation of the compact between Kentucky and Virginia relative to lands in the former state. And the same court, in the case of Hamilton Bank v. Dudley, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 492, in which the statute of Ohio for the relief of occupying claimants came under review, conceded the legislative power of the state to secure to a bona fide occupant of land a compensation for the value of his lasting improvements, and to authorize him to retain possession of the land he had improved until he should be paid that amount. See other United States cases cited supra, this note.

1. Statutes Giving Compensation for Improvements Made Before Their Enactment Held Constitutional. — Albee v. May, 2 Paine (U. S.) 74; Fee v. Cowdry, 45 Ark. 410, 55 Am. Rep. 560; Beard v. Dansby, 48 Ark. 183. See also Litchfield v. Johnson, 4 Dill. (U. S.) 551.

But compare Society, etc., v. Wheeler, 2 Gall. (U. S.) 105, in which the New Hampshire statute of June 19, 1805, was held unconstitutional in so far as it related to past improvements.

Statutes Held Not Retroactive. — The Maine Act of March 6, 1844, c. 6, § 1, authorizing a tenant for years to recover betterments as against the owners of the expectant estate, did not apply to improvements made by a life tenant before its passage. Pratt v. Churchill, 42 Me. 471.

2. Statute Giving Occupying Claimant Right to Retain Land on Paying Unimproved Value Unconstitutional. — McCoy v. Grandy, 3 Ohio St. 463.

This ruling has been approved in Stephens v. Ballou, 27 Kan. 504, and Barker v. Owen, 93 N. Car. 198. And see also Stump v. Hornback, 94 Mo. 26, reversing 15 Mo. App. 367, so far as it approved a judgment authorizing an occupant to retain the land on paying the true owner the unimproved value, the owner's consent not being required.

But a Statute Giving a Similar Option to the Owner Is Valid. — McCoy v. Grandy, 3 Ohio St. 463. See also Stump v. Hornback, 94 Mo. 26, quoted above, and cases cited supra, this section. And see generally infra, this title, X. 4. Election of Owner as to Taking Land or Receiving Unimproved Value.

3. Statute Authorizing General Money Judgment Against Owner of Land for Improvements Unconstitutional. — Childs v. Shower, 18 Iowa 261.

In Dungan v. Von Puhl, 8 Iowa 263, the court referred to the same statute but did not intimate that it was unconstitutional. It was, however, not applicable in that case.

See Further in This Connection the case of Stump v. Hornbeck, 15 Mo. App. 367, in which it was said, that "the court is not permitted to render an absolute, unconditional judgment for the value of improvements, and to enforce it by execution." To the same effect are Russell v. DeFrance, 39 Mo. 506; Malone v. Stretch, 69 Mo. 25.

4. In a Case in Texas where property which had been sold by a husband was recovered by the husband and wife, on the ground that the sale was void as being a sale of the homestead without the joinder of the wife, and the sale avoided, it was held that the trial court should have rendered a personal judgment against the husband for the increased value of the land resulting from the improvements, as the occupant was clearly entitled to recover, and a judgment for improvements could not be made a lien upon the land, nor could a personal judgment be rendered against the wife. Paris, etc., judgment for his improvements which might be enforced by execution against the property of the owner.¹

(c) Requiring Payment or Tender of Payment for Improvements Before Bringing Suit for Property. — The court of Texas has declared unconstitutional a law providing in effect that a plaintiff shall not recover lands from a possessor in good faith unless he can prove that prior to the institution of suit he had offered in good faith to refer the question of pay for improvements to arbitration, or that he tendered payment for such improvements.² But the court of Arkansas has upheld a similar statute.³

(d) Failure to Discriminate Between Innocent and Tortious Possession. — In California, a statute allowing all occupants compensation for their improvements, and failing to discriminate between an innocent and a tortious possession, has been declared unconstitutional.⁴

III. GENERAL RULE AS TO WHAT CONSTITUTE IMPROVEMENTS — 1. Rule Stated. — In order for additions to property to constitute improvements within the rule of equity and the statutes allowing compensation therefor, the additions must be permanent,⁵ must have been placed upon the land under such circumstances as to make them a part of the realty,⁶ and must enhance its value⁷

Interpreting the Phrase "Permanent Improvements" by the common law, it must be construed to mean something done to or put upon the land which the occupant cannot remove or carry away with him, either because it has become physically impossible to separate it from the land, or because in contemplation of law it has been annexed to the soil and is therefore to be considered a part of the freehold. *Stark v. 2. Improvements Must Be for Purposes for Which the Lands Are or May Be Used. — The words "valuable and permanent improvements," as used in the Wisconsin Improvement Act, have reference to the purposes for which the lands are or may be used. Pacquette v. Pickness, 19 Wis. 219.

Use to Which True Owner Intends to Put Land Immaterial. — An unsuccessful defendant in ejectment cannot be denied compensation for his improvements under How. Ann. Stat. Michigan, § 7836, on the ground that the improvements are not adapted to the use to which the plaintiff may assert it to be his intention to devote the property upon recovering it. Petit v. Flint, etc., R. Co., (Mich. 1899) 78 N. W. Rep. 554.

Nor is it necessary, to entitle an occupant to compensation, that the true owner should have desired such improvements or should be able to make a profitable use of them in his particular business. Carolina Cent. R. Co. v. McCaskill, 98 N. Car. 526. But compare People v. Campbell, 35 N. Y. App. Div. 103.

3. Illustrations of Additions Held to Be Improvements. — A lessee of store property covenanted "that all improvements of the buildings shall belong to the landlord at the expiration of the term," and put up shelves which, besides being nailed to boards or cleats which were nailed to the wall, rested on counters which were not in any way fastened to the wall or floor; and put in a furnace with hot-air flues extending to holes cut in the floor, for the purpose of heating the storeroom which he occupied with his goods. He also put up large awnings over the front windows. It was held that these were all improvements, and embraced in the covenant referred to, and passed to the landlord. Parker v. Wulstein, 48 N. J. Eq. 94.

In a New York case where the lessees of certain premises agreed to surrender to the lessees at the expiration of the term "all improvements" placed on the demised premises by them, it was held that this covenant embraced "gas pipes, burners, gas ladders, and two large and one small meters, lumber in hat room, fifteen batten doors, hinges and locks, floor of stage, large glass case, benches in gallery, benches under gallery, upholstered woodwork and canvas constituting the stage, gas pendant, under gallery, picket fence on the north and south sides of the building, fixtures and ticket office, board fence on the north side of the building." French v. New York, (Supm. Ct. Gen. T.) 16 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 220.

In West v. Blakeway, 2 M. & G. 729, 40 E. C. L. 598, the tenant had covenanted to yield up at the expiration of his term all erections and improvements made or set up during the term, and it was held that this covenant was broken by the removal of the sashes and framework of a greenhouse erected during the term, the framework of which was laid upon walls built for the purpose of receiving it, and embedded in mortar.

4. House. — "The word 'improvement' is large enough, under ordinary circumstances, to include a house or private dwelling." Schenley's Appeal, 70 Pa. St. 98. In this case it was, however, shown that the word, as used in various mechanics' liens laws of Pennsylvania, has a more restricted meaning. See also Schmidt v. Armstrong, 72 Pa. St. 355. And see generally the title MECHANICS' LIENS.

Raising House Where Necessary or Desirable Held an Improvement. — Cosgrove v. Merz, (R. I. 1897) 37 Atl. Rep. 704.

Moving House. — But the moving of a house, and other things incident thereto, as digging a cellar, and constructing the cellar wall, etc., cannot be allowed for as improvements, especially where the site from which the house was moved was an excellent one, and the site to which it was moved was in some respects not good, and the removal had not enhanced the value of the property. McMurray v. Day, 70 Iowa 671.

5. New Buildings in Place of Old. — See Robinson v. Ridley, 6 Madd. 2; Stevens v. Melcher, 152 N. Y. 551, modifying 80 Hun (N. Y.) 514.

6. Extra Floor. — An additional floor placed in a leased building by the tenants for the purpose of fitting it for their use as a skating rink

well¹ or ditches,² the erection of fences,³ the clearing of unimproved lands,⁴ and building of levees,⁵ the planting of fruit trees⁶ or clover and orchard grass,⁷ and in Kansas a sidewalk alongside of the property.⁸

But the Disclosing of Granite on the property, though by means of the occupant's operations, cannot be considered such an improvement as should be compensated for.⁹

Repairs. — Ordinary repairs to structures already on the property are not as a rule considered improvements, and will not be treated in this article.¹⁰

Burden of Proof. — Those who claim an allowance for alleged improvements must assume the burden of proving that the property has been benefited thereby.¹¹

IV. MEASURE OF COMPENSATION FOR IMPROVEMENTS — 1. General Rule Stated. — The well-established rule as to the compensation to which an occupant of land is entitled for his improvements, is that he should be allowed, not the amount the improvements have cost him,¹² nor the actual value of the and bicycle riding hall is an improvement which becomes a part of the property. Harris v. Kelly, (Pa. 1888) 13 Atl. Rep. 523.

Cases Holding Value of Improvements to Be the Measure of Compensation Explained. — In some cases it has been asserted that the value of the improvements is the measure of compensation therefor. Neesom v. Clarkson, 2 Hare 176, 4 Hare 97; Gliniski v. Zawadski, 8 Fla. 405; McGill v. Kennedy, 11 Ind. 20; Wendell v. Moulton, 26 N. H. 41. See also Fountain v. Semi-Tropic Land, etc., Co., 99 Cal. 677; Barnett v. Higgins, 4 Dana (Ky.) 505.

And it is so provided by statute in some jurisdictions. But the apparent discrepancy between such decisions and statutes and the rule stated in the text may be explained on the theory that the term "value" as so used is meant to refer, not to the absolute value of the improvements themselves, but to their value as they stand on the land in question, which must necessarily be equivalent to the amount by which they increase the value of the land. This view finds some support in the following remark of Caldwell, Circ. J., in Leighton v. Young, 10 U. S. App. 298, in reference to the measure of compensation for improvements: "The occupant is not entitled to their cost, nor to their value when new, but only to their value at the time of the trial, which must be measured by the benefits which the owner will receive from them in their then condition."

Where Improvements Consist of Clearing. — Although an occupant has gone to extraordinary expense in the clearing and improvement of land, he is not entitled to an extraordinary compensation therefor, but is entitled to only the ordinary value of clearing in the ordinary way, and such occupant should be charged with rents, in a similar manner, according to the ordinary value of such land cleared in the ordinary way. *Bell v. Enhancement of "Vendible" Value. — Some cases have asserted as the rule, that the enhancement of the "vendible" or "salable" value of the land is the measure of compensation; but this does not differ materially from the rule as stated above.¹

2. Method of Ascertaining Enhancement of Value. — The method of ascertaining the enhancement of value resulting from the placing of improvements thereon is to deduct from the value of the property as improved² its value before any of the improvements in question were placed thereon,³ and also deducting any increase of value which has resulted from causes other than the occupant's improvements.⁴

Benefit Received by True Owner. — It was considered in McMurray v. Day, 70 Iowa 671, that the allowance for improvements must be measured by the benefit which the true owner would derive therefrom.

And in Mississippi it has been considered that if the improvement does not inure to the benefit of the owner of the land, justice is done by denying the occupant the value of it. Johnson v. Futch, 57 Miss. 73; Nixon v. Porter, 38 Miss. 401.

3. Allowance Where Old Buildings Are Replaced by New. — In estimating the allowance for improvements made by a purchaser at a judicial sale which is afterwards avoided, which improvements consist of pulling down old buildings and erecting new ones, the old buildings, if incapable of repair, should be valued as old materials, but otherwise as buildings standing. *Robinson v. compensation to be allowed the occupant should be computed with reference to the time when he is ousted.¹

Deterioration After Ouster of Occupant. — And as, after such time, he has no further control of the land as owner, he cannot be held responsible for any subsequent providential visitation, such as excessive and unusual droughts which damage improvements consisting of clover and orchard grass seed sowed on the land by him, and his allowance cannot be reduced on account of such damage.²

4. Whether Allowance May Exceed Actual Cost of Improvements. — It is quite possible that the enhancement of the value of property by reason of improvements may be greater than the amount which they have cost the occupant. Under those circumstances it is usually considered that only the cost should be allowed,³ though the court of Georgia adheres to the rule that the enhancement of value is the proper measure of compensation even in such case.⁴

5. Rule Restricting Compensation to Value of Rents and Profits. — In the absence of any statute allowing full compensation according to the rule set out above, the amount which can be recovered is subject to the limitation that, as the general policy of the law, where no statute intervenes, is to allow the value of improvements only by way of set-off against or in mitigation of damages for the detention of the land, the amount allowed cannot usually exceed the amount of the true owner's damages and mesne profits.⁵ And in some juris-

6. Interest. — It has been considered that in estimating the amount to be allowed an occupant of land for his improvements, interest should not be allowed.² But after the amount of such allowance has been settled a judgment therefor may bear interest.³

V. WHAT OCCUPANTS ARE ENTITLED TO COMPENSATION — 1. General Requisites as to Occupancy. — As a general rule, in order to entitle an occupant of land to compensation for his improvements, three things must concur: (1) he must have held possession under color of title; (2) his possession must have been adverse to the title of the true owner; and (3) he must have acted in good faith.⁴ These three fundamental requisites will be discussed in the order indicated, before going on to treat of the further requirements under particular statutes and other matters.

Actual Enhancement of Value Allowed. — Previous to Fisher v. Edington, 12 Lea (Tenn.) 189, it had been the practice, and was by the bar generally thought to be the rule, to limit the allowance for betterments to the sum total of rents and profits. The reasons for this, and the danger to the title-holder from a different practice, are cogently expressed in the opinion of Judge Turney in that case.

In that case, however, the true owners, after their disabilities were removed and their rights accrued, having stood by with knowledge of their rights and seen the improvements of their estates without any objection or claim, the equity of the occupants was considered by a majority of the court to be so strong as to overcome these objections, and the full enhancement of value resulting from their improvements was decreed to them regardless of the limit of rents and profits.

This case was followed in Howard v. Massengale, 13 Lea (Tenn.) 577. See also Day v. Walker, Knoxville, 1876, cited in Smoot v. Smoot, 12 Lea (Tenn.) 274.

It will be noticed that these cases seem to have considered that the rule stated in the text should not be applied in the particular instances on account of the strong equities in favor of the occupants, rather than to have denied that rule.

The Court of Kentucky, however, has gone a step further and flatly denied the rule stated in the text. See Ewing v. Handley, 4 Litt. (Ky.) 371, 14 Am. Dec. 140. See also Hawkins v. King, 1 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 161.

The Mississippi statute (Code 1880, § 2512), allowing compensation for improvements, only applies where the right to sue for or demand mesne profits exists. Pass v. McLendon, 62 Miss. 580.

2. Interest Not Allowed. — Pugh v. Bell, 2 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 125, 15 Am. Dec. 142; Hendrix v. Nesbitt, (Ky. 1899) 49 S. W. Rep. 963; Talbot v. Todd, 7 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 456.

Contrary View. — One who has improved land under a mistaken belief of title thereto is entitled to interest on the enhanced value resulting from his improvements from the time the money was expended for them, especially where the rental is charged on the increased value. Fawcett v. Burwell, 27 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 445. See also Childs v. Shower, 18 Iowa 261.

As to charging rental on increased value, see infra, this title, XI. 5. Whether Rent Can Be Charged on Value of Property as Improved.

3. Interest on Judgment for Improvements. — Young v. Pate, 3 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 100.

Rev. Stat. Wisconsin, 1878, § 3098, provides that when the right of compensation for improvements shall be established and the amount thereof assessed, such assessment with the costs of such issue shall be set off against the sum awarded for costs and damages to the plaintiff in the action, "and if there remain any excess the judgment in such action shall provide that the plaintiff shall pay the amount thereof with interest." Neeves v. Eron, 73 Wis. 542. See generally the title INTEREST, post.

4. General Requisites as to Occupancy. — Stark v. Starr, 1 Sawy (U. S.) 15.

And see the numerous cases cited infra, this section, subsections 2. Necessity for Color of Title; 3. Necessity for Adverse Character of Occupancy; 4. Necessity for Good Faith in Occupant.

for compensation for improvements it is necessary that the occupant should have had color of title.¹

The Occupant Is Not Required to Show a Complete Chain of Title from the sovereignty of the soil, under full and complete deeds, to entitle him to compensation for improvements made in good faith, for on such a showing he would be entitled to a judgment for the land itself.²

But a Mere Trespasser is not considered to be entitled to the full benefit of the rule allowing compensation.³

b. IMPROVEMENTS MADE BEFORE ACQUIRING COLOR OF TITLE. — There is authority for the view that one who has made improvements on land to which he has no color of title does not acquire any right to compensation therefor by afterwards acquiring a colorable title.⁴ But there would seem to

Meaning of Requirement of "Color of Title in Fee." — The language of Gen. Stat. Minnesota, 1878, c. 75, § 15, "under color of title in fee," is broad enough to include color of title in fee either in the occupying claimant himself, or color of title in fee in the person under whom he claims his right, whatever it is. In either case the claimant is in "under color of title in fee." Hall v. Torrens, 32 Minn. 527, distinguishing Wheeler v. Merriman, 30 Minn. 372.

A Holding in Good Faith Is Not of Itself Sufficient, it has been said, to entitle an occupant to compensation for improvements under the California statute. His holding must also have been under color of title. Field v. Columbet, 4 Sawy. (U. S.) 523. And all the cases cited above would seem to support this view.

But, on the Other Hand, it has been held that if the occupant claims title in good faith the character of his possession is sufficient to entitle him to improvements, although he may have no color of title. Holt v. Adams, (Ala. 1898) 25 So. Rep. 716; New Orleans, etc., R. Co. v. Jones, 68 Ala. 48; Pickett v. Pope, 74 Ala. 122.

And a bona fide purchaser, who improved the property he had bought at the foreclosure of a mortgage belonging to an estate which had not been inventoried nor assigned to the administrator, has been allowed the value of his improvements though he had not acquired title or even color of title. *Miller v. Where Plea of Bona Fide Purchaser Is Not Available to Defeat Recovery. — The fact that an occupant may not be able to use the plea of bona fide purchaser without notice, to defeat a recovery by the claimants, will not deprive him of any equity he may have for an allowance of improvements, especially where relief against him is sought in a court of equity. McLaughlin v. Barnum, 31 Md. 425.

3. Trespasser Not Entitled to Compensation for Improvements. — Carpentier v. Mitchell, 29 Cal. 330; Hunt v. Pond, 67 Ga. 578; Stamper v. Bradley, (Ky. 1899) 53 S. W. Rep. 16; New Orleans, etc., R. Co. v. Jones, 68 Ala. 48. And see cases cited supra, this section.

But Trespassers Have Certain Rights in Some Jurisdictions. — See infra, this section, subsection 16, Rights of Trespassers and Wrongdoers.

be no reason why, if an occupant, who has color of title at the time the action to dispossess him is brought, has all along acted in good faith, he should not be allowed for improvements made before his color of title accrued, especially where such color of title is founded on adverse possession during the time the improvements were made; and it has been so held.¹

c. WHAT MAY CONSTITUTE COLOR OF TITLE — (1) Introductory. — There has already been given in this work some discussion of what constitutes color of title,² so it is proposed to give here only such general principles as are absolutely necessary to an understanding of this particular subject, together with other principles particularly applicable thereto.

(2) Meaning of Term. — The courts have very generally concurred in defining color of title as "that which in appearance is title, but which in reality is no title."³

(3) Color of Title Arising from Written Instrument. — Any written instrument having a grantor and a grantee and containing a description of the land intended to be conveyed,⁴ and apt words for its conveyance,⁵ will give color of title to the land described,⁶ even though the grantor had no title to Improvements by Grantor of Occupant. — A grantee does not occupy a better position, in regard to improvements made by his grantor, than the latter himself occupied. Hence, to entitle him to recover for such improvements, he must show that his grantor was within the provisions of the statute when he made the improvements. Wheeler v. Merriman, 30 Minn. 372.

Acquisition of Part Interest in Land. — One who has made improvements on land while holding the same as a naked trespasser is not entitled to any allowance therefor, and he acquires no right to compensation by a subsequent purchase of a part interest in the land. Carpentier v. Mitchell, 29 Cal. 330.

4. Lack of Description. — A deed in which a description of the lands purporting to be conveyed is lacking will not of itself support a claim for compensation for improvements. Simpson v. Johnson, 92 Tex. 159.

5. Instrument Must Apparently Transfer Title. — Wood v. Conrad, 2 S. Dak. 334.

A Bond for Title does not, ex vi termini, purport to convey the title to the obligee. It is, at most, an executory agreement, entitling him to a deed at a future day, on the performance of certain conditions. Teaver v. Akin, 47 Ark. 528; White v. Stokes, (Ark. 1899) 53 S. W. Quit-claim Deed. — An unsuccessful defendant in ejectment may have a recovery for improvements if he held possession bona fide and under a belief of a good title in himself, notwithstanding his deed was a quit-claim. Griswold v. Bragg, 6 Fed. Rep. 342.

Certificate of Homestead Entry. — A holding under a valid certificate of homestead entry is not a holding under title, and hence a holding under an invalid certificate of homestead entry cannot be a holding under color of title such as will entitle the occupant to compensation for his improvements under the Rev. Stat. Wisconsin, 1878, § 3096. Whitcomb v. Provost, 102 Wis. 278. See also Woodruff v. Wallace, 3 Okla. 355; Calhoun v. McCornack, 7 Okla. 347.

convey,¹ or was under some personal disability to convey,² or for some other reason the instrument is not effectual to pass title.³

(4) Color of Title Arising in Absence of Written Instrument. — Ordinarily, to constitute color of title to land, it is necessary that the occupant should have a paper title.⁴ But this is not invariably true.⁵ Thus, in some jurisdictions, an occupant of land may acquire a right to compensation for his improvements merely by reason of the length of time his occupancy has continued,⁶ and payment of taxes thereon.⁷

3. Necessity for Adverse Character of Occupancy — a. RULE STATED. — The second general requisite to the support of a claim for compensation for improvements is that the possession of the occupant should have been adverse to the title of the true owner.⁸ One who holds possession by permission of another,

1. Title in Grantor Not Necessary. — Field v. Columbet, 4 Sawy. (U. S.) 523; Brooks v. Bruyn, 35 Ill. 392; Woodruff v. Wallace, 3 Okla. 355.

Conveyance by Husband of His Wife's Land. — If a husband assumes to convey his wife's land, she not joining in the deed, the purchaser may have the value of the improvements erected by him in good faith, but not a lien for the purchase money paid to the husband. Garth v. Fort, 15 Lea (Tenn.) 683.

Conveyance in Fee from Life Tenant. — One who holds under a deed from a life tenant purporting to convey the land to him in fee simple, and believes himself to be the owner in fee simple, is a bona fide occupant and holds under color of title. Fee v. Cowdry, 45 Ark. 410, 55 Am. Rep. 560.

Grantor Must Have Had Possession or Color of Title. — One who enters upon land under a conveyance from one not in possession, and, so far as appears, not having any color of title, enters and improves the premises at his peril. Tripp v. Fausett, 94 Ga. 330.

2. Personal Disability of Grantor to Convey. — Krause v. Means, 12 Kan. 335.

Conveyance from Married Woman Without Joinder of Husband. — One who has, in good faith, purchased from a feme covert, paying full consideration and believing that she had power to convey the land, and who has received a deed in which the husband did not join, is entitled to compensation for improvements where the deed is set aside at the instance of the grantor on the ground of her coverture when it was executed. Hawkins v. Brown, 80 Ky. 186. But compare Smith v. Gibson, 25 U. C. C. P. 248.

Deed Void on Its Face. — Color of title, under the Wisconsin statute, in reference to improvements, may be by a written instrument having an infirmity making it absolutely void upon its face. Stewart v. Stewart, 90 Wis. 516, 48 Am. St. Rep. 949; Zwietusch v. Watkins, 61 Wis. 620. In the case first cited the court said: "Otherwise the statute would rarely afford any protection." Compare Seymour v. Cleveland, 9 S. Dak. 94.

Deed Void for Want of Delivery. — A deed which is void for want of delivery may, up to the time of the judgment declaring it void, constitute the color of title necessary to entitle the person holding thereunder to compensation for his improvements under the Wisconsin statute. Stewart v. Stewart, 90 Wis. 516, 48 Am. St. Rep. 949.

Protection of Occupant Does Not Depend upon Original Deeds Through Which Title Is Deraigned — Illinois. — Montag v. Linn, 27 Ill. 328.

4. Paper Title Ordinarily Necessary. — Lunquest v. Ten Eyck, 40 Iowa 213; Hamilton v. Wright, 30 Iowa 480.

There can be no color of title in an occupant who does not hold under any instrument, proceeding, or law purporting to transfer to him the title or to give to him the right of possession. Field, J., in Deffebach v. Hawke, 115 U. S. 392, quoted with approval in Woodruff v. Wallace, 3 Okla. 355.

Of course this occupancy must be in the claimant's own right and for his own benefit, and not in the right of another as tenant, etc. Lunquest v. Ten Eyck, 40 Iowa 213.

Under the Alabama Code of 1876, § 2951, a defendant in an action for the recovery of real property may set off against the rents the value of permanent improvements made by him, upon a suggestion of three years' adverse possession, provided his occupancy was under such color or claim of title as to be in good faith. New Orleans, etc., R. Co. v. Jones, 68 Ala. 48. See also Turnipseed v. Fitzpatrick, 75 Ala. 297; Wisdom v. Reeves, 110 Ala. 418.

whose title he recognizes, is not entitled to compensation,¹ even though the improvements were made with an honest expectation that he would subsequently acquire title from the owner.²

An Exception to the Rule Stated Above seems to have been recognized in a Kentucky case, in which it was held that where a purchaser of land had placed improvements on adjoining land of his vendor, in reliance upon the parol assurance of the latter that he should be unmolested in the use of them, he was entitled to compensation for such improvements when the vendor gained possession of them.³

b. WHAT CONSTITUTES ADVERSE POSSESSION. — The adverse character of possession necessary to support a claim for improvements does not differ materially from that necessary to put in operation the statute of limitations,⁴ save that in the former case the occupancy must have been under color or claim of title asserted in good faith.⁵

c. PRESUMPTION AGAINST CHANGE OF CHARACTER OF POSSESSION. — Where it appears that an occupant of land has at one time held such adverse possession as to entitle him to compensation for improvements, it will be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that his possession continued to be adverse down to the time the action against him for the recovery of the land was commenced.⁶ And conversely, one who has held

Under the Georgia Code, where improvements of a permanent character are made in good faith by one who has no claim of right to the possession, but is a tenant by sufferance merely, the value of such improvements may be allowed to the extent of the rent found to be due for the use of the land, but no further. *Dean v. under another must expressly assert an adverse title subsequently acquired, in order to be entitled to compensation for his improvements.¹

4. Necessity for Good Faith in Occupant — a. RULE STATED. — As a general rule it is absolutely necessary, to entitle an occupant of land to compensation for his improvements, that in holding the land and placing his improvements thereon he shall have acted in perfect good faith.²

1. Purchase of Outstanding Tax Title and Recording of Deed. — One who holds possession of property in subordination to the rights of another whose title he recognizes, cannot acquire a right to compensation for improvements merely by purchasing an outstanding tax title and recording the deed, as such recording is not of itself a sufficient assertion of an adverse title. The claim of an adverse holding under such title must be expressly asserted and brought to the knowledge of the person under whom the occupant formerly held. Paldi v. Paldi, 84 Mich. 346.

One Who, Knowing that He Has Good Title to Only Five-sixths of a Tract of Land, takes possession and improves the same, cannot, in a court of equity, on his own motion, have the land appraised irrespective of improvements and acquire the whole on paying to the other owner one-sixth of such appraised value. *Penrod v. Belief that Title in Fee Has Been Acquired. — The right of a party to betterments depends upon his bona fide supposition that he bought the title in fee. Whitney v. Richardson, 31 Vt. 300; Kendall v. Tracy, 64 Vt. 522.

Belief in Legal and Equitable Ownership Necessary — Arkansas. — Kemp v. Cossart, 47 Ark. 62; Teaver v. Akin, 47 Ark. 528; Jefferson v. Edrington, 53 Ark. 545.

Title which Occupant Does or Ought to Know to Be Defective. — In Walker v. Quigg, 6 Watts (Pa.) 87, 31 Am. Dec. 452, it was held that one who takes a title, when he knows, or ought to know, that it is defective, is not entitled to compensation for improvements as against the true owner, even though the latter saw the improvements in progress and did not object. See also Dart v. Hercules, 57 Ill. 446; Woodhull v. Rosenthal, 61 N. Y. 382; Wood v. Wood, 83 N. Y. 575; Cook v. Kraft, 3 Lans. (N. Y.) 512; Davidson v. Barclay, 63 Pa. St. 406; McKim v. Moody, 1 Rand. (Va.) 58.

The question was incidentally discussed, and the same view expressed, in Graeme v. Cullen, 23 Gratt. (Va.) 266, though the improvements for which compensation was sought in that case were made, not by the occupant of the land, but by a firm of builders, under a contract with the owner, who had previously executed a deed of trust thereon, which was duly recorded.

Belief that Title Has Been Acquired by Limitation. — Occupants are entitled to compensation for improvements placed on land after they believed in good faith that they had acquired a title thereto by limitation, the circumstances being such that men of ordinary prudence would entertain such belief. Bassett v. Sherrod, 13 Tex. Civ. App. 327.

Knowledge of Lack of Title. — "There can be no such thing as good faith in an adverse holding where the party knows that he has no title, and that, under the law, which he is presumed to know, he can acquire none by his occupation." Field, J., in Deffebach v. Hawke, 115 U. S. 392, quoted with approval in Woodruff v. Wallace, 3 Okla. 355. See also to the same effect Gaines v. Kennedy, 53 Miss. 103.

must be some reasonable grounds such as would lead a man of ordinary prudence to entertain it.¹

Deed Void on Its Face. — Thus one who holds under a deed void on its face cannot be considered a possessor in good faith, but must be held to be put upon notice of his want of title.²

Knowledge that Vendor Has No Title. — And one who purchases land with knowledge that his vendor has no title nor written contract for a title thereto does not hold the same in good faith and cannot obtain compensation for his improvements.³

Hope of Purchasing Land. — A mere trespasser, who makes no claim of right or title, and merely hopes some day to purchase the land, cannot burden it with charges for improvements.⁴

c. PRESUMPTION OF GOOD FAITH. — It has been asserted that where a person holding under color of title has made improvements it must be presumed, until the contrary is shown, that in so doing he acted in good faith.⁵ But other cases have held the view that in the first instance the burden is upon the occupant to show not only his belief that he had good title, but the reasonableness of such belief.⁶

d. EFFECT OF NOTICE OF ADVERSE CLAIM ON QUESTION OF GOOD FAITH — (1) General Rule Stated. — It is well established as a general rule that an occupant must, in order to be entitled to the privileges of a holder of property in good faith, have reasonably believed that there were no adverse claims,⁷ and have been ignorant that his title was contested by one having or

Under the Louisiana Code if the title of the defendant is what the law denominates "a just title," the possessor thereunder must be considered in good faith, unless there is some reference in the deed of sale to the title under which the conveyance is made, which destroys that good faith. But after a possessor animo acquirendi has purchased in good faith, it may be terminated, and of right ceases from the moment the defects of his title are made known to him by extraneous evidence, or by suit instituted for the recovery of the property by the true owner. *Montgomery v. 6. Burden of Proof on Occupant. — In a proceeding to ascertain the value of betterments under the Code of North Carolina, sections 473 and 480, the burden is upon the petitioner to show, not only that he believed, but that he had good reason to believe, his title to the premises was good, at least until he had made out a prima facie case, when the burden will shift. *Carolina Cent. One Who Has the Legal Title, and Is Informed of the Facts Which Constitute Equitable Title in Another, will not be allowed the value of improvements made in violation of the express orders of the equitable owner, unless, perhaps, out of the rents. Glasscock v. Glasscock, 17 Tex. 480.

claiming a superior right;¹ and that knowledge or notice of an existing title adverse to that under which he claims deprives him of all right to compensation for any improvements which he may have placed on the property after acquiring such knowledge or receiving such notice.²

Improvements by Husband on Land of Which He Believes Wife to Be Owner in Fee.—A husband who has in good faith expended money in improving land of which he believes his wife to be the owner in fee, as heiress-at-law of her father, is entitled to an allowance for improvements, where, after the wife's death, a will of her father is found, by which she is entitled to only a life estate in the property. *Fawcett v. Evidence as to Ignorance of Adverse Claim Admissible.—Upon the issues of improvements made in good faith, there was no error in permitting the defendants to show that they were ignorant of the existence of the plaintiff and her claim to the land, nor was there error in permitting the defendants to show that they paid the taxes on the land and that the plaintiff had not. Polk v. Chaison, 72 Tex. 500.

Grant Procured After Service of Declaration in Ejectment.—If after service of declaration in ejectment the defendant proceeds to make an entry and get a grant, it will not be such a title, under those circumstances, as will entitle him to payment for his improvements. *Townsend v. Purchase Pendente Lite. — Thus, one who purchases land during the pendency of a litigation in reference thereto is not entitled to compensation for his improvements when the party adverse to his grantor recovers the land, for in such case the purchaser was bound to take notice of the proceedings.¹

(2) Rule as to Constructive Notice — (a) Doctrine that Such Notice Is Insufficient. — It has very generally been considered that, if an occupant purchased and held the land in good faith believing he had obtained a perfect title, constructive notice of an adverse title such as the law will imply from the registry of a deed in the public records of the county is not sufficient to preclude him from recovering for his improvements;² and that in order to effect this it is necessary either that the occupant should have actual notice of the adverse title,³

Improvements After Adjudication Against Title. — There can be no good faith and no color of title after a direct adjudication establishing that another is the rightful owner. Craton v. Wright, 16 Iowa 133.

Improvements Made During Pendency of Appeal. — And the same is true in Texas even though such improvements are placed on the land during the pendency of an appeal by the occupant from the adjudication against his title. Norton v. Davis, 13 Tex. Civ. App. 90.

Discontinuance of Action for Possession. — In a case where a claimant of land commenced an action for the recovery thereof, but subsequently discontinued such action, and some time later brought another action for the same purpose, it was held that the occupant was entitled to compensation for improvements made before the commencement of the first action, and between the discontinuance of that action and the commencement of the second, but not for those made during the pendency of either action. O'Grady v. McCaffray, 2 Ont. 309.

The beneficent provisions of section 476 of the Code of North Carolina would be defeated by a construction which charged a bona fide claimant under a deed in form and purpose purporting to convey a perfect title with a knowledge of imperfections which might be met with in the deduction of his own title. *Justice v. or that there should be brought home to him notice of some fact or circumstance that would put a man of ordinary prudence to such an inquiry as would lead to a knowledge of the adverse title if honestly followed.¹

(b) Doctrine that Such Notice Is Sufficient. — But on the other hand, there are cases which have held that constructive notice of an adverse title is sufficient to defeat a claim for improvements,² and that an occupant cannot recover if he had full means of discovering the existence of such adverse title,³ because in order to be in the position of a holder in good faith the occupant must have used proper care and diligence in ascertaining the condition of the title upon which he bases his claim.⁴

(3) When Good Faith and Notice of Adverse Claim May Coexist. — The mere fact of notice of an adverse claim does not always and necessarily negative good faith,⁵ for in cases where the occupant, though aware of such a

Description in Recorded Deed. — If taking the description from a deed on record conveying premises to the plaintiff in an action for the recovery of land, one could go upon the land and identify the premises as the land in controversy, then the record of the deed should be held such constructive notice of the plaintiff's title as to defeat the defendant's claim for improvements. Daugherty v. Yates, 13 Tex. Civ. App. 646; Parrish v. Jackson, 69 Tex. 614.

Deed Not Entitled to Be Recorded. — Where the deed evidencing the title of the plaintiff in an action of trespass to try title was not entitled to be recorded because no seal was affixed to the certificate of acknowledgment, and therefore the record would not convey such knowledge as would put another upon inquiry, the defendant is entitled to compensation for improvements placed on the land, if they were, after due diligence to ascertain the location of the plaintiff's land, placed there in good faith without knowledge of the fact that the land was the property of the plaintiff. Daugherty v. Yates, 13 Tex. Civ. App. 646.

When the Rule as to Constructive Notice Does Not Apply. — Where the title to the land was in a feme covert who married when under age, and she and her husband executed a bond to convey the land after she became of age to a party from whom the defendant derived title by mesne conveyances, which bond was never registered, and the defendant had no actual notice of any defect in his title, which he believed to be good, it was held that the doctrine of constructive notice from registration did not apply to such party, and that he was entitled to compensation under the act — the Code, § 473 — for permanent improvements made by him upon the land. Justice v. Baxter, 93 N. Car. 405.

3. No Right to Compensation Where Occupant Had Full Means of Obtaining Knowledge of Adverse Title. — Barlow v. Bell, 1 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 246, 10 Am. Dec. 731; Harrison v. Fleming, 7 T. B. Mon. Difference Between Cases of Remote and Immediate Vendee under Defective Deed Which Is Recorded. — The fact that a deed from a husband and wife has such a defective certificate of acknowledgment that it does not pass the wife's right, and that such certificate is of record, should not be considered as affecting a remote vendee with notice of the wife's right to the land, although an immediate vendee might be thus affected. Thomas v. Thomas, 16 B. Mon. (Ky.) 420.

4. Occupant Must Have Used Proper Care to Ascertain Condition of Title. — Nunn v. Burger, 79 Ga. 705; McCown v. Terrell, (Tex. Civ. App. 1897) 40 S. W. Rep. 54; Johnson v. Schumacher, 72 Tex. 334; Parrish v. Jackson, 69 Tex. 614; Brown v. Eedinger, 72 Tex. 247; Morris v. Terrell, 2 Rand. (Va.) 6.

No Right to Compensation Where Mistake of Title Due to Negligence of Occupant. — Foley v. Kirk, 33 N. J. Lq. 170.

A Caveat Entered by the Predecessor in Title of the occupant against an adverse claim, and dismissed, operates as notice to the occupant of such claim. Nourse v. Turnham, 1 Bibb (Ky.) 62.

5. Notice of Adverse Claim Does Not Necessarily Negative Good Faith. — Griswold v. Bragg, 19 Blatchf. (U. S.) 94, citing Harrison v. Castner, 11 Ohio St. 347; Wells v. Riley, 2 Dill. (U. S.) 569.

claim, has reasonable and strong grounds for believing it to be destitute of any just or legal foundation, he may still be considered a bona fide possessor.¹

Mistake of Law. — But it has been said that one who has notice of facts rendering his title inferior to that of another, but, by mistake of law, regards his title as good, cannot be allowed for improvements.²

(4) Rule in South Carolina and Wisconsin. — Under the statutes of these two states, notice of an adverse claim does not prevent a recovery of compensation for improvements made after receiving such notice.³

e. EXISTENCE OF GOOD FAITH A QUESTION FOR THE JURY. — The question whether or not an occupant of land has held and improved the same in good faith is one of fact for the jury.⁴

5. Requirements under Particular Statutes — a. INTRODUCTORY. — Excluding for the present all consideration of the equitable rights of occupants, it is clear that one who claims compensation for improvements under a statute must bring himself within the terms thereof.⁵ And it is the purpose of this section to give a discussion of the requirements of various local statutes peculiar to the states in which they exist, without, however, attempting to discuss any which have not been passed upon or at least referred to by the courts.

b. CLAIM FOUNDED ON DESCENT OR ANY WRITTEN INSTRUMENT. — Under the Wisconsin statute the occupant must not only hold "adversely by color of title asserted in good faith," but such color of title must be "founded on descent or any written instrument."⁶

c. TITLE DERIVED FROM PUBLIC AUTHORITY. — To entitle an occupant

1. Reasonable Belief that Adverse Claim Is Invalid. — Dorn v. Dunham, 24 Tex. 366; Sartain v. Hamilton, 12 Tex. 222, 62 Am. Dec. 524; Cahill v. Benson, 19 Tex. Civ. App. 30; Parrish v. Jackson, 69 Tex. 614; Gaither v. Hanrick, 69 Tex. 92. See also Settegast v. O'Donnell, 16 Tex. Civ. App. 56. And see other cases cited in this note.

Belief that Source of Adverse Title Is Fraudulent. — Under the Iowa statute (Iowa Rev., § 2264), it cannot be said that an occupant has not made improvements in good faith simply because he knew of a partition decree which was the source of the legal title, where he nevertheless believed such decree to be fraudulent, and there is nothing in the record to show that this belief of the occupant was without any reasonable foundation. Craton v. Wright, 16 Iowa 135.

Decision Against Adverse Title. — One claiming pay for improvements as a possessor in good faith may show that he possessed the premises and improved them, after a decision by a court of competent jurisdiction pronouncing the adverse title a forgery. Gaither v. Hanrick, 69 Tex. 92.

There Must Be Reasonable Grounds for Believing Adverse Title Invalid. — Gilley v. Williams, (Tex. Civ. App. 1897) 43 S. W. Rep. 1094; Miller v. Clark, 56 Mich. 337.

2. Mistake of Law. — Williamson v. Jones, 43 W. Va. 562. See also Holmes v. McGee, 64 Miss. 129.

3. South Carolina Rule. — By the express terms of the South Carolina statute (Rev. Stat. 1893, § 1952), the condition upon which the party making the improvements is entitled to recover is declared to be that he shall have purchased a title to the land, "supposing at the time of such purchase such title to be good in fee." Templeton v. Lowry, 22 S. Car.

389; Tumbleston v. Rumph, 43 S. Car. 285; McKnight v. Cooper, 27 S. Car. 92.

The Rule Is Otherwise under Rev. Stat. 1893, §§ 1957, 1958. A full discussion and comparison of these apparently conflicting provisions is given elsewhere. See infra, this section, South Carolina Statutes.

Wisconsin Rule. — Notice of an adverse claim does not prevent a recovery for improvements made thereafter under Rev. Stat. Wis., § 3096, providing for compensation to a defendant in ejectment who has entered upon the possession of the premises under color of title asserted in good faith, and has held adversely to the plaintiff. Barrett v. Stradl, 73 Wis. 385, 9 Am. St. Rep. 795.

4. Good Faith of Occupant a Question for the Jury. — Jones v. Merrill, 113 Mich. 433; Miller v. Clark, 56 Mich. 337; Seigneuret v. Fahey, 27 Minn. 60; Traylor v. Lide, (Tex. 1887) 7 S. W. Rep. 58. See also Griswold v. Bragg, 19 Blatchf. (U. S.) 94; Luhn v. Stone, 65 Tex. 439.

Whether an unsuccessful defendant in an action for the recovery of land supposed at the time he purchased a title to the same that such title was good in fee, as is necessary under the South Carolina statute to entitle him to betterments, is necessarily a question of fact. Templeton v. Lowry, 22 S. Car. 389.

The Jury Must Judge of the Reasonableness of the Occupant's Belief that He Has Good Title. — Carolina Cent. R. Co. v. McCaskill, 98 N. Car. 526.

5. Claimant Must Bring Himself Within Terms of Statute. — Maxwell Land Grant Co. v. Santistevan, 7 N. Mex. 1; King v. Harrington, 18 Mich. 213.

6. Claim Must Be Founded on Descent or Written Instrument. — Rev. Stat. Wis. (1878), § 3096; Vilas v. Prince, 88 Fed. Rep. 682; Zwietusch v. Watkins, 61 Wis. 615; Falck v. Marsh, 88 who has been evicted to recover for his improvements under the provisions of the Nebraska occupying claimant act, it must appear that such improvements were made while he was in good faith claiming title, legal or equitable, to the premises, from some public office of the United States or of the state of Nebraska.¹ In Kentucky, also, the person claiming compensation must connect himself with a grant from the commonwealth.² And in New Mexico the occupant must "have title of the premises in dispute, either by grant from the government of Spain, Mexico, or the United States, deed of conveyance founded on a grant, or entry for the same," and consequently a defendant in ejectment, whose only right, title, or claim to the property was that growing out of his squatting on and improving it, cannot claim compensation under the statute.³

d. RECORD TITLE. — In several states the benefits of the improvement statutes are extended to occupants who can show a plain and connected title in law or equity deduced from the records of some public office.⁴

e. SIX YEARS' POSSESSION. — The Maine and New Hampshire betterment statutes require an actual possession by the occupant or those under whom he claims for six years;⁵ while those of Massachusetts and Michigan contain a like requirement with an alternative of a possession for a less time under a title which the occupant has reason to believe good, in the first named state.⁶ or in the second, under color of title and in good faith.⁷

f. POSSESSION FOR AT LEAST ONE YEAR. — The Texas statute requires

Wis. 680; Stewart v. Stewart, 90 Wis. 516, 48 Am. St. Rep. 949; Whitcomb v. Provost, 102 Wis. 278.

A Receiver's Receipt for Fees Paid on a Homestead Entry of land supposed to be a part of the public domain open to such entry is not such a written instrument as will support a claim for compensation under the statute cited above. Vilas v. Prince, 88 Fed. Rep. 652.

1. Title Derived from Public Authority.—Carter v. Brown, 35 Neb. 670; Page v. Davis, 26 Neb. 670.

2. Grant from the Commonwealth. — So held under the Kentucky occupying claimant law in force in 1863 (Rev. Stat., c. 70). Fairbairn v. Means, 4 Met. (Ky.) 323; Clay v. Miller, 4 Bibb (Ky.) 461; Lewis v. Singleton, 2 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 214.

3. Squatter Not Entitled to Compensation under New Mexico Statute. — Maxwell Land Grant Co. v. Santistevan, 7 N. Mex. 1, citing Comp. L. N. Mex., 1884, § 2270.

4. Record Title. — Montag v. Linn, 27 Ill. 328; Mettler v. Craft, 39 Ill. App. 193; Preston v. Brown, 35 Ohio St. 18.

In order for a defendant in ejectment to be entitled to improvements under the Oklahoma statute, he must show "a plain and connected title in law or equity, derived from the records of some public office, or being in quiet possession of and holding the same by deed, devise, descent, contract, bond or agreement from and under any person claiming title as aforesaid, derived from the records of some public office." Province v. Lovi, 4 Okla. 672.

What Is a Claim of Public Record. — An entry and survey is a claim of public record within the meaning of the occupying claimant laws of Kentucky, and a bond given by the person in whose name the survey was made to the occupant is sufficient to connect him with the record and entitle him to compensation for improvements. Pulliam v. Robinson, 1 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 228.

Bond from Person Claiming Title by Deed Duly Authenticated and Recorded. — One who is in quiet possession of land, and holding the same by bond from and under any person claiming title by deed duly authenticated and recorded, is entitled, under the second clause of section 601 of the Kansas Code of 1868, to the benefits of the occupying claimant law. Krause v. Means, 12 Kan. 335.

Construction of Ohio Statute. — The words "a deed duly authenticated and recorded," in Rev. Stat. Ohio, § 5786, subd. 2, do not refer to the deed to the occupant, but to the deed to the person from whom he derives title; and the deed to both the occupant and his grantor must apparently convey an estate which would justify the holder of it in making permanent and lasting improvements. But the occupant will not be presumed to know of any defects or recitals which appear in deeds prior to that under which his grantor held. Beardsley v. Chapman, 1 Ohio St. 118, overruling Glick v. Gregg, 19 Ohio 57; Young v. Mahoning County, 53 Fed. Rep. 895.

5. Requirement of Six Years' Possession — Maine. — Page v. Finson, 74 Me. 512.

New Hampshire. — Bellows v. McCartee, 20 N. H. 515.

The Six Years' Actual Possession Must Have Immediately Preceded the Dispossession in order for the occupant to be entitled to claim under the Maine statute. Page v. Finson, 74 Me. 512.

6. Massachusetts Rule. — Wales v. Coffin, 100 Mass. 177. See also Baggot v. Fleming, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 451 citing Rev. Stat. Mass., c. 101, § 20, to the same effect.

7. Michigan Rule. — Burkle v. Ingham Circuit Judge, 42 Mich. 513; Paldi v. Paldi, 84 Mich. 346; Wolf v. Holton, 92 Mich. 136. See also Jones v. Merrill, 113 Mich. 433; Martin v. O'Conner, 37 Mich. 440.

that a defendant in an action for the possession of real property, in order to sustain his claim for improvements, must aver and prove that he and those under whom he claims have had adverse possession in good faith of the premises in controversy for at least one year before the commencement of the action.¹

g. PURCHASER OF SUPPOSED TITLE IN FEE. — Under the Vermont statute the sole test of the right to an allowance for betterments is whether they were made by the purchaser of a supposed title in fee.²

h. OCCUPANT DISPOSSESSED BY LEGAL PROCEEDINGS. — The statute of Virginia is confined in its operation to cases in which a decree or judgment has been rendered against the occupant for the recovery of the land;³ and those of Indiana and Iowa apply only when the occupant has been found "in a proper action" not to be the owner of the land.⁴

i. EVICTION BY TITLE BOTH PARAMOUNT AND ADVERSE. — The Ohio act for the relief of occupying claimants operates only in cases where the person in possession has been evicted by a title both paramount and adverse.⁵

j. SOUTH CAROLINA STATUTES. — The South Carolina statutes provide for two distinct cases in either of which the occupant may recover; the first where he believed at the time of his purchase that he obtained a good title, the second where he believed at the time he erected the improvements that he had good title. These provisions are fully discussed in the note.⁶

6. Requirement of Actual Occupancy or Possession. — It is usually considered that in order for one to be entitled to compensation for improvements he must have been an occupant in actual possession of the land.⁷ But in Iowa

1. Possession for at Least One Year. — Rev. Stat. Tex., art. 4813; Whitaker v. Allday, 71 Tex. 623; Baker v. Millman, 77 Tex. 46.

Where Both Parties Claim from the Same Grantor the unsuccessful occupant cannot tack his possession to that of the common grantor in order to bring himself within the statutory requirement of possession for at least one year. Whitaker v. Allday, 71 Tex. 623.

2. Purchaser of Supposed Title in Fee. — Jones v. Steam Stone Cutter Co., 20 Fed. Rep. 477; George v. Steam Stone Cutter Co., 20 Fed. Rep. 478; Amsden v. Steam Stone Cutter Co., 20 Fed. Rep. 479; Brown v. Storm, 4 Vt. 37; Whitney v. Richardson, 31 Vt. 300.

Therefore, one who purchased land supposing the title to be good in fee is entitled to betterments though the land was in fact encumbered. George v. Steam Stone Cutter Co., 20 Fed. Rep. 478.

But it is otherwise in the case of one who purchased with knowledge of an incumbrance, though it was covenanted against in the deed. Jones v. Steam Stone Cutter Co., 20 Fed. Rep. 477.

While, in the case of a purchase and improvement by one who supposed the title to be good in fee and a subsequent conveyance by him to one who knew of the encumbrance, the latter is entitled to recover for betterments because the statute expressly covers this difference by providing for a recovery by a defendant in ejectment for betterments made by those under whom he claims, if they purchased the land supposing the title to be good in fee when they made the betterments. Amsden v. Steam Stone Cutter Co., 20 Fed. Rep. 479.

6. Discussion of South Carolina Statutes. — There is no inconsistency between the two South Carolina acts appearing respectively as sections 1952 et seq. and sections 1957, 1958 of the Rev. Stat. 1893; the difference between them being, that under the first act improvements made by the party under whom the defendant claims, as well as those made by himself, may be recovered, provided, however, that he believed when he purchased the land that he was getting a good title, while under the second act he can recover only for such improvements as were made by himself, and when at the time they were made he believed his title was perfect. McKnight v. Cooper, 27 S. Car. 92; Salinas v. Aultman, 45 S. Car. 283. Section 1957 was intended to afford relief in such cases as were not covered by section 1952; it was intended to supplement, not to supersede, the provision of section 1952. Tumbleston v. Rumph, 43 S. Car. 275; Salinas v. Aultman, 45 S. Car. 283.

it has been considered that the claimant need not have been in personal possession and that his possession by a tenant is sufficient.¹

7. Requirement of Peaceable Possession. — The betterment statutes of several of the states require that the occupant shall have had peaceable possession.²

8. Rule as to Occupants of Public Lands. — It has been asserted in some jurisdictions that one who occupies and improves public land cannot set up any claim for compensation against the government or its grantees.³ But under the Iowa statute it has been held that one who has been a settler on lands of the United States, and has received a pre-emption certificate and a patent therefor, has color of title, though the lands were not subject to entry under the pre-emption laws on account of being included in the Des Moines river grant.⁴

9. Rights of Purchasers at Tax Sale — a. GENERAL RULE. — It may be considered established as a general rule that one who has improved land which he took possession of and held by virtue of a tax deed therefor, is entitled to compensation for his improvements;⁵ and this whether the tax deed be void upon its face,⁶ or voidable because of some defect in the proceedings for the assessment and collection of the tax for which the land was sold.⁷

Texas. — Ferguson v. Cochran, (Tex. Civ. App. 1898) 45 S. W. Rep. 30.

What Constitutes an Occupation or Possession. — One who has entered upon the premises in good faith and has moved some things into the house, and has shingled a part of the roof and painted the exterior of the house, has "occupied" the premises within the meaning of 3 How. Annot. Stat. Michigan, § 7836. Jones v. Merrill, 113 Mich. 433.

A purchaser at a tax sale of unimproved land, who has cleared a few acres, surrounded it with a bush fence, and raised one or more crops there, has been sufficiently in possession to entitle him to compensation for his improvements under section 104 of the Michigan tax law of 1893. *Croskery v. Quitclaim Deed Conveying Tax Title Only. — A quitclaim deed purporting to remise, release, and convey all the grantor's interest in and to the premises, and containing the following clause: "Intending hereby to convey only my title to said land acquired by the purchase of the same for taxes for the year 1864, and previous years," — is sufficient to constitute the "color of title in fee," required by the Minnesota occupying claimant law (Gen. Stat. 1878, c. 75, § 15), to entitle to compensation for improvements. The recital in the deed that the title conveyed is only a tax title, will not, of itself, charge the grantee with actual notice of the infirmities in such title, although appearing of record. Wheeler v. Merriman, 30 Minn. 372.

6. Tax Deed Void on Its Face. — Waterson v. Devoe, 18 Kan. 223; Smith v. Smith, 15 Kan. 290; Parker v. Vinson, 11 S. Dak. 381.

Statutory Change in Wisconsin. — To entitle a tax title claimant to recover for improvements under Rev. Stat. Wis. 1858, c. 141, §§ 30, 31

b. BELIEF IN INTEGRITY OF TITLE NOT NECESSARY IN ARKANSAS. — The Arkansas law for the relief of occupying tax claimants, i. e., purchasers at tax sales, was passed subsequently to the "betterment act" and gave the claimant the right to compensation for his improvements without showing the belief in the integrity of his title which was demanded by the latter act.¹

c. IMPROVEMENTS MADE BEFORE EXPIRATION OF TIME ALLOWED FOR REDEMPTION. — In Minnesota the holder of a tax title has no right to compensation for improvements placed on the land before the expiration of the period of redemption.² And in Arkansas such an occupant is entitled to compensation only for improvements made after two years from the date of the sale.³

d. IMPROVEMENTS MADE AFTER TENDER BY ONE ENTITLED TO REDEEM. — A purchaser at a tax sale cannot claim anything for improvements made by him after a tender has been made by one entitled to redeem the land.⁴

10. Rights of Purchasers at Judicial Sale — a. GENERAL RULE. — As a general rule one who has purchased land at a judicial sale believing that he was acquiring a good title thereto, and has in good faith made improvements thereon, is entitled to compensation when the sale is avoided⁵ or the original owner is allowed to redeem.⁶ And in Minnesota such purchasers are placed on a more secure footing in this respect than other occupants.⁷

b. WANT OF JURISDICTION IN COURT ORDERING SALE. — The rule stated above would not apply where the court which pronounced the judgment or and 32, it was not only necessary that the improvements should have been made in good faith, but also that the assessment or tax upon which the deed was issued should have been "lawfully assessed." Oberich v. Gilman, 31 Wis. 495; Zwietusch v. Watkins, 61 Wis. 615.

But the words "lawfully assessed thereon," as used in the old statutes, seem to have been entirely omitted in the revision, and the general language used in section 33, supra, was enlarged and adopted so as to include improvements made by tax-title claimants. Sec. 3096, Rev. Stat. 1878. And a tax deed void for reasons going to the groundwork of the tax or assessment upon which it issued may give the color of title required by that section to entitle the occupant to compensation for his improvements. Zwietusch v. Watkins, 61 Wis. 615; Stewart v. Stewart, 90 Wis. 516, 48 Am. St. Rep. 949. In the case first cited an occupant under a tax title was held not entitled to compensation for improvements made prior to November 1, 1878, when the Rev. Stat. 1878 went into effect, but was allowed to recover for improvements made subsequent to that time.

7. Minnesota Rule. — See Pfefferle v. Wieland, 55 Minn. 202.

What Is an "Official Deed." — A county auditor's certificate of assignment of the state's right in an "official deed" within the meaning of the Minnesota statute (Gen. Stat. 1878, c. 75, 15) allowing compensation for improvements to occupants who have "taken possession of any land under the official deed of any person or officer empowered by law * * * to sell land." Pfefferle v. Wieland, 55 Minn. 202.

decree under which the sale was made was without jurisdiction, for a purchaser at a judicial sale is chargeable with notice as to whether or not the court ordering the same has jurisdiction.¹

c. EXECUTION SALE SUBJECT TO DEBTOR'S RIGHT OF HOMESTEAD EXEMPTION. — Where property of a debtor has been sold under execution, subject to his right of homestead exemption, and purchased by one of the execution creditors, he is not entitled to compensation for his improvements when, after the death of the debtor, the wife and children of the latter establish their homestead exemption in the land; for the purchaser knew that his title was disputed, and the general rule as to the effect of notice of an adverse claim must apply.²

d. REDEMPTION FROM FORECLOSURE SALE BY JUNIOR INCUMBRANCER. — One who purchases at a foreclosure sale under a senior mortgage, knowing that there is a junior mortgagee who has a legal right to redeem from such sale, is not entitled to compensation for his improvements.³

e. SALE UNDER JUNIOR LIEN. — In an Illinois case where property subject to a mortgage was sold under a decree establishing a mechanic's lien and purchased by the lienholders, who made improvements thereon, and such decree was subsequently reversed at the instance of the mortgagee, and a decree entered for foreclosure of the mortgage, it was held that the purchasers at the first sale had no valid claim for their improvements superior to the right of the mortgagee to the proceeds of the second sale; as parties to an erroneous judgment or decree are presumed to be cognizant of all errors in the record, and a reversal restores the parties to their original rights.⁴

11. Rights of Parol Vendee. — In Mississippi it has been considered that one who accepts a parol transfer of land cannot be said to believe that he thereby acquires either a title or a right to a title to the land, and therefore does not claim under any deed or contract of purchase made or acquired in good faith, as required by statute.⁵

12. Rights of Donee — a. PAROL GIFT. — One who has in good faith occupied and improved land, relying upon a parol gift from the owner, is entitled to compensation for his improvements when the owner repudiates the gift and retakes possession.⁶

b. DONATION VOID FOR WANT OF FORM. — Similarly, a son who took possession of land under a donation from his father which was void for want of form, and, believing himself to be the owner of the land, erected improvements thereon, has been held entitled to compensation therefor.⁷

c. AGREEMENT OR PROMISE TO DONATE. — And even an agreement or

1. No Right to Compensation Where Court Ordering Sale Was Without Jurisdiction. — See Chambers v. Jones, 72 Ill. 278.

2. Purchase at Execution Sale Subject to Debtor's Right of Homestead Exemption. — Andrews v. Melton, 51 Ala. 400. It is stated in the syllabus of this case that the deed to the purchaser recited that the land was sold "subject to homestead exemption."

3. Purchase under Foreclosure of Senior Mortgage with Knowledge of Junior Mortgagee's Right to Redeem — No Compensation. — Cram v. Cotrell, 48 Neb. 646, 58 Am. St. Rep. 714.

4. Sale Otherwise in Case of Subsequent Purchaser Without Knowledge of Junior Mortgage. — Ensign v. Batterson, 68 Conn. 298.

5. Sale under Junior Lien. — Powell v. Rogers, 105 Ill. 318, affirming 11 Ill. App. 98. But it was further considered in this case that as the original owner, who had been made a defendant in the action, had defaulted and made no defense, the surplus, after paying the amounts due on the mortgage and the mechanic's lien, might be decreed to the purchasers to apply upon the improvements made on the property.

6. Parol Vendee. — Citizens' Bank v. Costanera, 62 Miss. 825, decided under Miss. Code 1880, sec. 2512.

7. Rights of Parol Donee. — Hamilton v. Hamilton, 5 Litt. (Ky.) 28; Bourne v. Odam, (Ky. 1895) 32 S. W. Rep. 398; James v. McKinsey, 4 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 625; Robert v. Ezell, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 176.

Compensation to Heirs of Donee. — Where a son under a parol gift from his father entered upon and expended large sums of money in improving a tract of land, the father, having retaken possession, was decreed to compensate the heirs of the son for the improvements. Hamilton v. Hamilton, 5 Litt. (Ky.) 28.

7. Donation Void for Want of Form. — White's Succession, 51 La. Ann. 1703.

promise to donate has been held sufficient to support a claim for such compensation.¹

13. Rights of Vendees under Contract of Sale — a. AT LAW. — The possession of one who holds land under an uncompleted contract for the purchase and sale thereof cannot be considered to have that adverse character which is necessary to entitle the purchaser to compensation for his improvements at law;² nor does a bond for title convey such color of title as is necessary to give the person occupying the land by virtue thereof such a right.³

b. IN EQUITY — (1) Relief May Be Afforded. — It is not to be inferred, however, that one who has made valuable improvements upon land which he holds under a contract of sale is entirely without remedy, for equity may afford him relief.⁴

(2) Where Vendor Is Responsible for Nonfulfilment of Contract. — Thus it is considered that the purchaser, he being without fault, is entitled to compensation for his improvements when the vendor refuses to complete his contract⁵ and for any reason the vendee is unable to enforce a specific per-

Improvements Made by Son with Consent of Father and in Anticipation of Devise. — A son who enters upon and improves land of his father with the consent of the latter and in anticipation of a devise by him to the son of such land, is entitled to compensation for his improvements when he is afterwards ousted by the father. Duckett v. Duckett, (Md. 1891) 21 Atl. Rep. 323. See also in this connection Unity Joint Stock Mut. Banking Assoc. v. King, 25 Beav. 72, 27 L. J. Ch. 585, 4 Jur. N. S. 470, 6 W. R. 204.

Tax Sale Before Payment of Entire Purchase Price. — In Kansas a purchaser of school land who improved it, but allowed it to be sold for taxes after having paid two instalments of the purchase money, was not allowed the value of his improvements when ejected by the tax-sale purchaser, it being considered that he was not entitled thereto under the occupying claimant law. Newland v. Baker, 26 Kan. 341.

3. Bond for Title Does Not Convey the Necessary Color of Title. — See White v. Stokes, (Ark.

1899) 53 S. W. Rep. 1060; Teaver v. Akin, 47 Ark. 528; Felkner v. Tighe, 39 Ark. 363; Rigor v. Frye, 62 Ill. 507.

One in Possession under an Agreement to Purchase Made with the Equitable Owner, with the knowledge and acquiescence of the trustee of the legal title, and in the belief, which such purchaser is justified in entertaining, that the legal title will ultimately be conveyed to him, may be allowed for his improvements. Preston v. Brown, 35 Ohio St. 18.

Contract Rescinded. — The court of North Carolina has several times recognized the doctrine of betterments in cases where the contract for the sale of land has been rescinded. *Albea v. Improvements Made by Authority of Vendor. — In Hannibal, etc., R. Co. v. Shortridge, 86 Mo. 662, the defendant was put in possession of land of the plaintiff pending the consideration of an application by him to buy the same, upon which he had paid a cash instalment, and was authorized by the plaintiff to make improvements. It was held that he was entitled to compensation therefor when the plaintiff rejected his application and sought to recover the land. See also Minor v. Erving, Kirby (Conn.) 158.

5. Contract Rescinded for Vendor's Default. — Worthington v. Collins, 39 W. Va. 406.

Occupant Not Turned Out of Possession. — One who has taken possession of land under a parol agreement for a deed from the owner is not entitled to recover for improvements made by him merely because the owner refuses to comply with his agreement, where it does not appear that he has turned the occupant out of possession, notified him to quit, or in any way excluded him from the full enjoyment of his formance,¹ as, for instance, where the contract is a parol one and the vendor takes advantage of the statute of frauds to avoid the same.²

Inability of Vendor to Make Good Title. — And the same is true where the vendor is unable to make the vendee a good title as he undertook to do.³

(3) Where Vendee Fails to Carry Out Contract. — But the vendee is entitled to no compensation for his improvements where he loses the land through his failure to comply with the terms of his contract for the purchase thereof,⁴ or improvements; for if the occupant is still enjoying them, or may enjoy them, he should not be paid for them, and if he has voluntarily abandoned them he must be deemed to have waived all claim to compensation. *Miller v. Parol Contract for Devises of Land. — By the law of Pennsylvania, a contract for the devise of land, though not put in writing, is not entirely nugatory, but only so far as that it passes no interest in the land and cannot furnish any right in law or equity to demand a specific performance. But damages may be recovered for a breach of it in the form of compensation for all permanent improvements made upon the land with the knowledge of the contractor and of which he gets the benefit by taking back the land, deducting the value of the rents and profits during the time the land was occupied under such contract. Bender v. Bender, 37 Pa. St. 419.

Where Contract Is Denied. — If in an action brought to enforce the specific performance of a parol contract for the sale of land, or in the alternative for compensation for improvements put upon the land, the answer should deny that there was any contract, or allege that its terms differed from those set out in the complaint, then the court could grant neither relief, because the statute forbids its going into proof to establish, for any purpose whatever, a contract variant from the one admitted in the answer; and if upon that the plaintiff could get no relief, he could not get it at all. Chambers v. Massey, 7 Ired. Eq. (42 N. Car.) 286; Dunn v. Moore, 3 Ired. Eq. (38 N. Car.) 364; Sain v. Dulin, 6 Jones Eq. (59 N. Car.) 195. See also McCracken v. McCracken, 88 N. Car. 272.

Vendee Must Prove that He Was Without Default. — Rainer v. Huddleston, 4 Heisk. (Tenn.) 223, approved in Guthrie v. Holt, 9 Baxt. (Tenn.) 527.

Vendee Not Entitled to Compensation Where He Elects to Be Dispossessed Rather than Pay Purchase Money. — One who takes possession of land under an executory contract for the sale thereof cannot claim compensation for improvements where, without showing that there is any defect in the title of his vendor, he elects to be dispossessed rather than pay the purchase money. Allen v. Mitchell, 13 Tex. 373.

Agreement of Vendee to Improve Land. — A vendee who by his contract of sale has agreed to improve the land and thereby make it more valuable and better secure the payment of all of the purchase money notes, is not entitled to compensation for improvements where he has failed to carry out his contract. Watt v. Hunter, 20 Tex. Civ. App. 76.

Where the contract stipulated that time should be of the essence of the contract; that failure in making payment should avoid the contract; that by such failure the party holding avoids a performance of his agreements by pleading the statute of frauds.¹

Part Performance of Contract. — It has been held, however, that a vendee who has complied with part and only a part of his agreements may be entitled to compensation for improvements.²

(4) Where Contract Was Contingent Merely. — An imperfect contract for the purchase and sale of lands, dependent for its completion on contingencies which never happen, does not entitle the occupant thereunder to compensation for improvements; for he must be considered a mere tenant at will who made the improvements for his own accommodation, and must surrender possession on the demand of the owner.³

14. Occupants Holding Through Mistake as to Identity of Land. — It has been held that compensation or relief in some form may be accorded to occupants who have in good faith held and improved land under a mistake as to the identity thereof, it being in reality the property of another, but such mistake not being due to the negligence of the occupant,⁴ especially where, in the case of a mistake as to the boundary between land which the occupant really owns, and that of an adjoining owner to whom the land really belongs, the mistake is due to the acts or declarations of the latter in relation to the position of his line,⁵ or if such owner, knowing of the mistake, stood by and permitted the occupant to improve the land without giving him any notice thereof.⁶

Erroneous Survey. — In Canada provision is made for an allowance for improvements to one who has occupied land believing it to be his own, having been misled by an erroneous survey.⁷

under the contract should forfeit all improvements on the premises and all right to compensation therefor; and that he should cease to have any interest therein; forfeiture by failure to perform the stipulations will preclude relief under the occupying claimant act.

Provision in Contract for Forfeiture of Improvements. — Boeken v. Alderman, 26 Kan. 738. See also to the same effect Vance v. Burlington, etc., R. Co., 12 Neb. 285.

Notice that Vendor Objected to Improvements. — A vendee of land by parol, who has failed to comply with his contract and paid no part of the purchase money, but has made permanent improvements with notice that the vendor was opposed to the improvements being made, cannot hold the vendor responsible for the enhanced value of the land. Rainer v. Huddleston, 4 Heisk. (Tenn.) 223.

2. Part Performance of Contract. — And the court may refuse to put the vendor in possession until such compensation be paid. McCarty v. Moorer, 50 Tex. 287. See also Humphreys v. Holsinger, 3 Sneed (Tenn.) 228.

3. Contingent Contract. — Howe v. Logwood, 3 A. K. Marsh. (Kv.) 388.

No Right to Compensation Where Mistake Due to Negligence. — Mitchell v. Bridgman, 71 Minn. 360; Foley v. Kirk, 33 N. J. Eq. 170; Shroll v. Klinker, 15 Ohio 152; Gatlin v. Organ, 57 Tex. 13; Thompson v. Comstock, 59 Tex. 318; Brown v. Bedinger, 72 Tex. 247.

Mistake as to Identity — Relief Afforded. — In McKelway v. Armour, 10 N. J. Eq. 115, 64 Am. Dec. 445, the complainant had, by mistake, erected a valuable dwelling house on the land of the defendant, who also labored under the same mistake and did not suspect the building to be upon his lot until some time after its erection, when by actual measurement he discovered the mistake. In this state of circumstances the chancellor relieved the complainant, putting the defendant to as little inconvenience as possible.

No Compensation for Improvements Made under Belief that Land Belongs to Father of Occupant. — Anderson v. Williams, 59 Ark. 144.

5. Mistake Due to Acts or Declarations of Adjoining Owner. — Coughran v. Alderete, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 26 S. W. Rep. 109.

6. Failure of Owner to Notify Occupant of Mistake. — Gatlin v. Organ, 57 Tex. 11; Thompson v. Comstock, 59 Tex. 318.

7. Erroneous Survey. — Plumb v. Steinhoff, 2 Ont. 614, (this question was not considered in the higher courts where the judgment in the case was reversed, see 11 Ont. App. 788, 14 Can. Sup. Ct. 739); Mozier v. Keegan, 13 U. C. C. P. 547. See also Swanston v. Strong, 21 U. C. Q. B. 279.

The Occupant Must Have Been Misled by the erroneous survey. See Doe v. Campbell, 8 U. C. Q. B. 19; Doe v. Potts, 5 U. C. Q. B. 492.

Private Survey. — Compensation may be allowed the occupant although the survey by which he was misled was a private one. Campbell v. Fergusson, 4 U. C. C. P. 414; Hutton v. Trotter, 16 U. C. C. P. 367; Morton v. Lewis, 16 U. C. C. P. 485; Doe v. McConnel, 6 U. C. Q. B. O. S. 347.

15. Husband Holding Land Conveyed to Wife. — A husband who has in good faith entered upon and improved land which has been conveyed to his wife, may recover for his improvements after a judgment of dispossession has been rendered against him.¹

16. Rights of Trespassers and Wrongdoers. — Notwithstanding the well-settled rule that in order to be entitled to compensation for improvements the occupant must have acted in good faith, there are several cases in which it has been either expressly held or intimated that one who has made improvements may set them off against the rents and profits or damages for the occupation, even though he has not acted in such good faith as to entitle him to any further allowance under the statutes.²

No Such Right Is Recognized in West Virginia, for though in one case a possessor in bad faith was allowed to set off his improvements against the rents and profits, the Supreme Court, on the same case coming up before it a second time, referred to such allowance as an "inadvertence."³

In Louisiana it is considered that an occupant in bad faith owes indemnity to the owner of the property,⁴ and is not entitled to any claim for his improvements beyond that given by statute.⁵ Under the statutes of that state the owner of property which has been improved by such an occupant⁶ with materials belonging to the latter, has the right either to keep the improvements or to compel the maker to take them away or demolish them at his own expense;⁷ and if the owner of land keeps the improvements he must reimburse the occupant the value of the materials used and the price of the workmanship, without regard to the greater or less value which the soil shall have acquired by reason of the improvements.⁸ This claim for improvements may be satisfied by setting it off against the owner's claim for rents and revenues.⁹

3. Right Not Recognized in West Virginia. — Cain v. Cox, 29 W. Va. 258.

4. Possessor in Bad Faith Owes Indemnity. — Cannon v. White, 16 La. Ann. 85; Gibson v. Vaughan, 12 La. Ann. 545; Wood v. Nicholls, 33 La. Ann. 744; Aronstein v. Irvine, 49 La. Ann. 1478; Vicksburg, etc., R. Co. v. Elmore, 46 La. Ann. 1237; Walworth v. Stevenson, 24 La. Ann. 251; Bry v. Fouché, 11 La. Ann. 665.

5. Possessor in Bad Faith Has No Claim for Improvements Save That Given by Statute. — A possessor in bad faith is entitled in law to no other claim for his improvements than those stated in the first three sentences of the Civ. Code, art. 500. Cannon v. White, 16 La. Ann. 85; Gibson v. Vaughan, 12 La. Ann. 545. The sentences referred to are embodied in art. 508 (500) of Merriek's Rev. Civ. Code La. (1899).

6. Statutes Refer to Possessors in Bad Faith. — In Wood v. Nicholls, 33 La. Ann. 744, it was contended that article 508 of the Civil Code of Louisiana, referred to above, did not refer to possessors in bad faith, but the court said that it did not find even plausibility in that contention. Approved in Scott v. Scott, 42 La. Ann. 766.

7. Election of Owner as to Keeping Improvements or Having Them Removed or Demolished. — Cannon v. White, 16 La. Ann. 85; d'Armand v. Pullin, 16 La. Ann. 243.

A Possessor in Bad Faith Has the Right to Demolish His Improvements and Remove the Materials if the owner shall elect not to retain them. Jackson v. Ludeling, 99 U. S. 513.

8. Compensation to Be Paid by Owner Who Elects to Keep Improvements. — Jackson v. Ludeling, 99 U. S. 513; Aronstein v. Irvine, 49 La. Ann. 1485; Green v. Moore, 44 La. Ann. 855; Wilson v. Benjamin, 26 La. Ann. 587; Cannon v. White, 16 La. Ann. 85; d'Armand v. Pullin, 16 La. Ann. 243.

When Compensation May Be Claimed. — The occupant cannot claim compensation for his improvements before the owner of the soil has elected to keep them. Citizens' Bank v. Maureau, 37 La. Ann. 857. See also Kibbe v. Campbell, 34 La. Ann. 1163.

Improvements Inseparable from the Soil. — As to improvements by their nature inseparable from the soil, such as ditching, wells, clearings, etc., a possessor in bad faith is not entitled to compensation. Jackson v. Ludeling, 99 U. S. 513; Wood v. Nicholls, 33 La. Ann. 744; Scott v. Scott, 42 La. Ann. 766. See also Gibson v. Vaughan, 12 La. Ann. 545. But compare Green v. Moore, 44 La. Ann. 855; Wilson v. Benjamin, 26 La. Ann. 588.

9. Improvements Set Off Against Rents, etc. — Aronstein v. Irvine, 49 La. Ann. 1478. See

In Illinois it has been considered that, in a case of partition and sale of land upon which improvements have been placed by a wrongdoer, a court of equity may allow and pay the wrongdoer the amount by which the proceeds of the sale have been increased by reason of such improvements.¹

Indebtedness Incurred in Improving the Estate Protected. — And it has also been considered that where the wife of a guardian had purchased from the ward her interest in property of which the wife owned the remaining interest, under such circumstances that she was not an innocent purchaser, the estate of the ward could not be burdened, on cancellation of the deed, with payment for such improvements; but where the entire property had been mortgaged to pay for the improvements, the court might, in the exercise of its equitable powers, protect the indebtedness incurred for improvements upon the ward's estate, upon the theory that the estate had been benefited and the ward received an advantage thereby.²

VI. FOR WHAT IMPROVEMENTS COMPENSATION WILL BE ALLOWED—1. Improvements Placed on Land by Grantor or Predecessor in Title of Occupant. — As a general rule it is considered that a bona fide occupant is not confined to compensation for improvements made by himself, but may also be allowed for those which have been placed on the land by his grantor or predecessor in title,³ if the latter held the land under such circumstances that he would have been entitled to compensation therefor had he been ousted by the true owner.⁴

2. Improvements Must Belong to Person Claiming Compensation. — In order for one who has held property which turns out to belong to another to be entitled to compensation for improvements thereon, he must be the owner of such improvements.⁵

VII. AS AGAINST WHOM COMPENSATION WILL BE ALLOWED — 1. The State. — In the absence of some statute authorizing such relief, the state cannot, through the instrumentality of the courts, be required to make compensation for improvements placed on vacant land belonging to the state.⁶

South Carolina Decisions. — The rule stated in the text has been affirmed in the cases of McKnight v. Cooper, 27 S. Car. 92, and Salinas v. Aultman, 45 S. Car. 253, but denied in the cases of Gadsden v. Desportes, 39 S. Car. 131, and Aultman v. Utsey, 41 S. Car. 304.

This apparent, but not real, discrepancy, as well as some others in the South Carolina decisions, is explained by the fact that there are in that state two distinct statutes on the subject of improvements, which vary in their terms. A full discussion and comparison of these statutes are given in another part of this article, to which the reader is referred. See supra, subsection South Carolina Statutes.

Improvements by Strangers. — But the occupant cannot recover for improvements made by strangers before his entry. Parker v. Stephens, 3 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 107.

4. Predecessor in Title Must Have Held under Such Circumstances that He Would Have Been Entitled to Compensation. — See Hart v. Bodley, Hard. (Ky.) 104.

Right to Compensation Assignable. — Craton v. Wright, 16 Iowa 133; Parsons v. Moses, 16 Iowa 440.

Interest of Occupant in Improvements Divested by Judicial Sale. — A defendant in ejectment cannot avail himself of the provisions of the occupying claimant act (chap. 63, Comp. Stat. Nebraska), where all his interests in the improvements have been divested by judicial sale prior to the request for a jury to assess the value of the improvements. La Bonty v. Lundgren, (Neb. 1890) 79 N. W. Rep. 551.

6. The State Cannot, in the Absence of Statute, Be Required to Pay for Improvements. — State v. Snyder, 66 Tex. 687; Swetman v. Sanders, 85

2. Person Recovering Land. — An unsuccessful defendant in ejectment may recover compensation for his improvements from the plaintiff, and is not confined to his remedy against his grantor.¹

Improvements Made Before Plaintiff's Title Accrued. — But he cannot be allowed to recoup against the mesne profits for improvements made before the plaintiff's title accrued.²

Right to Possession Must Be Established. — And the occupant is entitled to no compensation from the adverse claimant until the right of the latter to possession of the land has been established.³

3. Person Entering Land Without Judgment and Withholding Possession. — In an action under the Maine statute to recover the increased value of the land, by reason of a possession and improvement thereof for six years or more, against those making an entry into the land without judgment and withholding the possession thereof, an entry by one having a bond from the defendants to convey the land to him, without other authority from them to enter, does not render them liable.⁴

4. Purchaser of School Lands. — Under the statutes of Washington, where one in possession of school lands has made improvements thereon, which have been duly appraised by the board of county commissioners before the sale of the lands, and at such sale the lands are purchased by a person other than the owner of such improvements, the purchaser must pay to the occupant the appraised value of the improvements.⁵

5. Infant Owner. — The right of an occupying claimant to an allowance for his improvements is in no way affected by the fact that the real owner of the land is an infant.⁶

6. Indian Owner Holding under Treaty Stipulation. — It has been held in Kansas that an Indian owner of land, held under treaty stipulations which provide that the land shall be exempt from levy, taxation, or sale, and shall be alienable in fee, or leased, or otherwise disposed of only to the United States, or to persons then being members of a specified tribe and of Indian blood, with the permission of the President, and under such regulations as the Secretary of the Interior shall direct, cannot be compelled, under the occupying claimant act, to pay for improvements on the premises.⁷

Immunity a Personal Privilege. — Such an immunity is, however, a personal privilege of the Indian owner, and if he has the right to alienate the land and does so, his grantee succeeds only to the title to the land, and has no better right than any other owner of real estate to appropriate improvements made by an occupying claimant without paying for them.⁸

Rule Applies to Grantees of State. — Swetman v. Sanders, 85 Tex. 294.

1. Unsuccessful Defendant in Ejectment May Recover Compensation from Plaintiff. — Dothage v. Stuart 35 Mo. 251.

The occupying claimants Act of Oklahoma is predicated upon the fact of title to the land being in one of the parties to the litigation. Woodruff v. Wallace, 3 Okla. 355.

Plaintiff Must Have Established Title in Fee Simple. — The Michigan statute (Comp. L., § 6252, Act 180 of 1875) allowing defendants in ejectment compensation for improvements can apply only to cases where the plaintiff establishes a title in fee simple. No provision is made for the case of interests less than the fee, and the statute is incapable of being applied to such a case. Burkle v. Ingham Circuit Judge, 42 Mich. 513.

2. Improvements Made Before Plaintiff's Title Accrued. — Bay v. Pope, 18 Cal. 694. The syllabus of this case is misleading in that it uses the word "after" in the statement of this point, instead of the word "before."

3. Right to Possession Must Be Established. — Foley v. Kirk, 33 N. J. Eq. 170.

4. Person Entering Land Without Judgment and Withholding Possession. — Biggs v. Fiske, 17 Me. 420.

5. Purchaser of School Lands Must Pay Occupant for Improvements. — Pearson v. Asnley, 5 Wash. 160.

6. Infancy of Owner. — Beard v. Dansby, 48 Ark. 183; Potts v. Cullum, 68 Ill. 217.

7. Indian Owner Holding under Treaty Stipulations Not Liable for Improvements. — Maynes v. Veale, 20 Kan. 374. See also Krause v. Means, 12 Kan. 335.

8. Immunity a Personal Privilege. — Krause v. Means, 12 Kan. 335.

7. DOWRESS. — In South Carolina it has been held that where a widow established her claim of dower in lands which had been conveyed by her husband immediately before the marriage with an intent to defeat her dower rights, no counterclaim based upon buildings erected and like improvements was a legitimate charge against her.¹

VIII. WHEN OWNER OF PROPERTY IS ESTOPPED TO DISPUTE CLAIM FOR IMPROVEMENTS. — An owner of property who has been guilty of fraud or gross laches in not making his title known to an occupant after he had notice that the latter was improving the property under a claim of title is estopped to contest the right of the latter to compensation for his improvements.² And this would seem to be true even though the occupant has not held under such circumstances as would ordinarily entitle him to compensation for his improvements.³ But where the owner has notified the occupant of his title, he is not estopped because he took no steps to prevent the latter from proceeding with his improvements, where the owner's delay in resorting to law to oust the occupant was due to certain negotiations between the parties in reference to a purchase of the land by the occupant.⁴

IX. METHODS OF OBTAINING COMPENSATION FOR IMPROVEMENTS — 1. By Interposing Claim in Possessory Action — a. THE RIGHT TO SET OFF IMPROVEMENTS — (1) Where Rents and Profits or Damages Are Claimed. — Where, in a suit or action for the recovery of real property, the plaintiff claims rents and profits or damages for the occupation of the land, the defendant may set off against such claim his claim for compensation for his improvements.⁵

Circumstances Not Constituting Acquiescence in Occupant's Possession and Improvements. — See Nunnally v. Owens, 90 Ga. 220.

Mistaken Belief of Owner as to Location of His Land. — The owner of land is not estopped from contesting an occupant's claim for improvements, because they were made with his knowledge, where it is shown that at the time they were made he was laboring under the belief that his land lay west of where the improvements were being placed. Daugherty v. Yates, 13 Tex. Civ. App. 646.

Where Owner Had No Knowledge of Improvements until After Their Completion. — If the owner had no knowledge of the fact before or at the time the improvements were made, he cannot be charged with them, although he is cognizant of the fact after they have been completed, and fails to notify the claimant of his title. Hall v. Hall, 30 W. Va. 779.

(2) Where Rents and Profits or Damages Are Not Claimed. — But where the plaintiff in a possessory action makes no such claim, the defendant cannot, in that action, be allowed for his improvements.¹

b. ACTIONS AND PROCEEDINGS IN WHICH IMPROVEMENTS MAY BE CLAIMED. — A claim for improvements may be interposed, as a rule, in any possessory action, such as ejectment,² or trespass to try title.³ But it has been considered that such a claim cannot be interposed in an action to establish an escheat,⁴ or, in Wisconsin, in an equitable action to set aside a land patent for fraud.⁵

Action Not Possessory in Its Nature. — And it is considered that such a claim cannot be interposed in an action which has not for its object the recovery of possession of the land.⁶

2. By Direct Proceedings — a. IN GENERAL. — The right to recover compensation for improvements by a direct proceeding against the owner of the property is, as has been seen, of purely statutory origin,⁷ and therefore one who seeks to recover compensation in this manner must bring himself within the statute and pursue the statutory remedy.⁸

b. TIME OF MAKING CLAIM WHEN PROCEEDING IS A CONTINUATION OF POSSESSORY ACTION. — These proceedings are frequently in the nature of an adjunct to or continuation of the action against the occupant for the recovery of possession of the property;⁹ and in such case the occupant should make his claim after the determination against his title,¹⁰ but before he is

Extent of Recovery in Possessory Action. — Under the Indiana statute, the defendant in an action for the recovery of real property cannot have relief in that action, except that, as to the damage which he has inflicted upon the plaintiff by withholding or using or injuring his property, he may set off the value of the permanent improvements made on such real estate by him. Wernke v. Hazen, 32 Ind. 431.

Rule under Alabama Statutes. — In Alabama, the period during which the defendant in an action for the recovery of land and mesne profits may be charged for the rent, and the circumstances under which he may claim pay for his improvements, are regulated by statute. See Code 1876, §§ 2951-2954 and 2966. And see Dobbs v. Hairston, 80 Ala. 594; Turnipseed v. Fitzpatrick, 75 Ala. 297; Southern Cotton Oil Co. v. Henshaw, 89 Ala. 448; Hairston v. Dobbs, 80 Ala. 589; McQueen v. Lampley, 74 Ala. 408.

Agreement to Pay for Improvements Not a Defense. — In a case where the defendants in an action of ejectment had entered upon the land in controversy upon an agreement of the plaintiff to pay them for their improvements, provided it was established that the premises belonged to them, it was held that the alleged agreement to pay for the improvements, if made, was no defense to the action of ejectment, but the remedy of the parties in such case was by a direct action upon the agreement. Norris v. Hoyt, 18 Cal. 217.

5. Action to Set Aside Land Patent for Fraud. — Prickett v. Muck, 74 Wis. 199. This case proceeded upon the view that the remedy given by the statutes of Wisconsin could be made available only in an action of ejectment.

6. Action Not Seeking Recovery of Possession. — Sanborn v. Mueller, 38 Minn. 27.

Thus in an action to quiet title the defendant cannot be allowed for improvements made by him while in possession. Buck v. Holt, 74 Iowa 294. See also Collins v. Storm, 75 Iowa 36.

And the same is true of a personal action to recover the value of property purchased at a judicial sale. Central Trust Co. v. Hubinger, 87 Fed. Rep. 3.

Action to Have Absolute Deed Declared a Mortgage. — In an action to have a deed absolute in form declared a mortgage, the court refused to allow the defendant for improvements or the plaintiff for the use and occupation of the premises. Foley v. Foley, 15 N. Y. App. Div. 276.

actually deprived of possession of the property.¹

In Wisconsin it is considered that the claim must be made within the term at which the judgment against the occupant is rendered.²

But in Kentucky the application to have a jury impaneled to fix the value of the improvements may be made by the occupant at a term subsequent to that in which the judgment against him was rendered.³

c. SET-OFF IN POSSESSORY ACTION AS A BAR TO DIRECT PROCEEDING. — It has been held that an occupant who has proved his improvements in the ejectment action to reduce rent and damages is estopped from afterwards having them assessed in the statutory mode, for he cannot have the value of the improvements twice in the same action.⁴ But in Indiana it has been said that in the action for the recovery of the real property the defendant cannot have relief except by setting off the value of his permanent improvements against the damage he has inflicted on the plaintiff by withholding, using, or injuring the property, and that any further relief the occupant can obtain only by bringing an action under the occupying claimant act after the question of title has been determined.⁵

d. WHERE OWNER HAS OBTAINED POSSESSION WITHOUT LEGAL PROCEEDINGS. — It has been asserted in Maine that an occupant who has been dispossessed by an entry without suit may bring an action to enforce his claim for improvements,⁶ but this has been denied in other jurisdictions.⁷

e. IN WHAT COURT ACTION FOR IMPROVEMENTS SHOULD BE BROUGHT. — It has been held that the language of the Missouri statute authorizing a recovery "in a court of competent jurisdiction" for improvements made in good faith upon the land of another, though quite broad, is not sufficiently comprehensive to admit of an action being brought in any other court than the one wherein the recovery in ejectment was had.⁸

f. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS. — A claim for improvements is subject to the statute of limitations,⁹ which begins to run when the right accrues by reason of the occupant being found not to be the rightful owner of the land and its recovery being awarded to another.¹⁰

X. METHODS OF ENFORCING PAYMENT FOR IMPROVEMENTS — 1. Lien of Occupant for Improvements. — In some jurisdictions it is considered that the amount

2. Right of Occupant to Retain Land until Payment for Improvements —

a. AFTER ASSESSMENT OF COMPENSATION. — It is also considered that the occupant has the right to retain possession of the land until the amount found to be due him as compensation for his improvements has been paid, before which time the courts will not issue their process to put the successful claimant in possession.²

b. DURING PENDENCY OF PROCEEDINGS FOR COMPENSATION. — And even the pendency of proceedings on behalf of the occupant to obtain compensation for his improvements may entitle him to retain possession of the land until such claim is settled.³

Lien Against Railroad Right of Way. — In a North Carolina case where the land improved was a part of the right of way of a railroad, it was claimed that the lien for improvements could not attach because the land could not be sold to discharge it. The court said: "This may, on account of public considerations, be so, but we need not now and do not decide that it is or is not." Carolina Cent. R. Co. v. McCaskill, 98 N. Car. 526.

c. USE OF LAND BY OCCUPANT WHILE RETAINING POSSESSION. — An occupant remaining in possession under the circumstances indicated above may, it has been held, use the land for such purposes as he deems proper,¹ and is entitled to the crops which he may raise thereon.² But he may properly be restrained from making any further improvements on the property while so holding.³

3. Power of Court to Extend Time for Payment for Improvements. — In Pennsylvania it has been held that the court has power to extend the time fixed by the jury for the payment by the plaintiff in ejectment of the amount assessed to the defendants as the value of improvements, where the entry of a judgment on the verdict has been delayed by reason of a motion of the defendants for a new trial.⁴

4. Election of Owner as to Taking Land or Receiving Unimproved Value —
a. RULE STATED. — In some jurisdictions it is provided that the successful plaintiff in an action for the recovery of real property may, at his election, either take the land and pay the assessed value of the improvements, or let the unsuccessful defendant retain the land and pay to him, the plaintiff, the unimproved value thereof;⁵ or if the plaintiff neglects or refuses to pay the appraised value of the improvements within a reasonable time fixed by statute, or by the court, the defendant may, upon paying to the plaintiff or into court the appraised value of the land without the improvements, become entitled to a decree vesting the title to the land in him.⁶

Possession and Improvement of Different Portions of Land by Different Persons. — Where several persons have occupied and improved different portions of a tract of land, the owner may pay off the amount awarded as compensation for improvements to some, and as to others accept payment of the value of the land and relinquish his title.⁷

Enhanced Value Greatly Disproportionate to Unimproved Value. — Under section 484 of the Code of North Carolina, if the enhanced value of the property is greatly disproportionate to the value of the land as unimproved, so that it might almost be said that the owner is "improved out of his property" he has an election to let the land go, relinquishing his estate upon payment by the occupant of its value as unimproved. *Barker v. the entry of the occupant,¹ but the justice and reasonableness of a provision that the land shall be valued as of the date of the occupant's entry seem to be clearly shown by a recent case in a federal court.²

c. ADJUSTMENT WHERE BOTH OWNER AND OCCUPANT DECLINE TO PAY — (1) Sale of Land and Division of Proceeds. — Where a statute allows the owner an election as indicated above, but makes no provision as to what shall be done when the owner declines to pay the appraised value of the improvements, and the occupant declines to pay the appraised value of the land, equity will, in such case, treat the parties as having rights in the property in proportion to the value of the lands and the improvements respectively, and will divide the property, or the fund derived from its sale, accordingly, and a court of chancery, upon the motion of either the owner or the occupant, will decree a sale of the property and distribute the proceeds of the sale as to the parties in proportion to their respective interests.³

(2) Tenancy in Common. — It has been considered in Iowa that where the owner declines to pay for the improvements, and the occupant declines to pay the unimproved value of the land, the parties may become tenants in common, each holding an interest in proportion to the value of his property as ascertained by appraisement.⁴

5. Extinguishment of Title of Owner by Failure to Pay for Improvements. — In a few of the states it has been provided by law that, upon the failure of the landowner to pay the amount awarded to the occupant as compensation for his improvements within the time fixed by statute, the rights of the owner are extinguished and the title becomes vested in the occupant.⁵

6. Extinguishment of Right of Occupant by Failure to Pay Unimproved Value. — On the other hand it has been considered that the equitable rights of the occupant are sufficiently recognized by allowing him to obtain title by paying the unimproved value of the land, in case the owner will not pay for the

4. Occupant Cannot Have Land Sold until Owner Has Refused to Make Election. — The occupant may not have the land and improvements sold to pay the parties the value of their respective interests — at least, not until a time has been fixed by the court within which the successful owner may elect whether he will accept the value of the land without the improvements, or pay the value of the improvements, and he has refused to make such election. Troxell v. Stevens, 57 Neb. 329.

5. Rule under North Carolina Statutes. — Under section 484 of the Code of North Carolina, if the enhanced value of property is greatly disproportionate to the value of the land improved, so that it might almost be said that the owner is "improved out of his property," he has an election to let the land go, relinquishing his estate upon payment by the occupant of its value as unimproved. Under section 485, if payment is not made to the occupant or into court for his use within a time to be fixed by the court, a sale may be ordered and therefrom the sum due the occupant taken, and the residue, if any, paid to the owner. And under section 479, if the owner does not exercise his right of election, the sum adjudged the occupant constitutes a lien upon the land, and this can only be made effectual and enforced, if not paid without, by a sale of the premises. Barker v. Owen, 93 N. Car. 198.

4. Tenancy in Common. — Webster v. Stewart, 6 Iowa 401.

Where Owner Had No Notice of Occupant's Possession. — An exception to the rule stated in the text was established by statute in Minnesota providing that where the occupant is in possession under color of title in fee, but not under an official deed, the successful claimant may, if he have no "notice, actual or constructive, of the occupant's possession," in time to disclose or assert his claim before the improvements in question were made, require the occupant to pay him the assessed value of the land. Jewell v. Truhn, 38 Minn. 433.

improvements, and that if the occupant will not avail himself of this privilege the legal title must prevail and the occupant will lose the benefit of his improvements.¹

7. Who Liable for Costs of Sale of Part of Land to Pay for Improvements. — It has been held in Tennessee that where the defendant to an ejectment bill lost the land, but recovered for improvements placed thereon by him, and a portion of the land was sold under the decree in the cause to pay for the improvements, the complainants were liable for the costs of such sale.²

XI. SETTING OFF RENTS AND PROFITS AGAINST CLAIM FOR IMPROVEMENTS
— 1. General Rule Stated. — Where a claim for improvements is made, the owner of the land may set off against it his claim for rents and profits,³ unless for some reason he is estopped,⁴ or the land has no rental value apart from the improvements.⁵ And improvements will not be allowed where the enhancement in value which they cause does not exceed the value of the use and occupation of the land.⁶

2. In Direct Proceedings for Compensation. — Where a defendant in an action for the possession of real property, after judgment against him, brings an action or proceeding to obtain compensation for his improvements, the owner may still set off his claim for rents and profits or damages,⁷ unless such claim

But compare Van Zandt v. Brantley, 16 Tex. Civ. App. 420, in which case it was held that where the defendant conceded the title of the plaintiff the court properly directed that if the amount allowed the defendant for improvements were not paid in six months the land should be sold to satisfy it, citing Pearson v. Cox, 71 Tex. 251, 10 Am. St. Rep. 740; Bailey v. White, 13 Tex. 114.

In Nebraska the rule stated in the text formerly prevailed, but has been abrogated by statute. Leighton v. Young, 10 U. S. App. 298. In this case Caldwell, Cir. J., delivering the opinion of the court, reviewed and explained the legislation in Nebraska on this subject.

Judgment for Improvements Does Not Merge Previous Judgment for Damages for Detention of Land — Indiana. — Hollingsworth v. Stumph, 131 Ind. 546.

4. Contract by Parol Vendor to Pay for Improvements. — Where the vendor in a parol contract for the sale of land has agreed to pay for improvements but made no stipulation as to the rents, he is not entitled to set off the rents when he is sued for the improvements upon his failure to complete the contract of sale. Thouvenin v. Lea, 26 Tex. 612.

5. Where Land Has No Rental Value Apart from Improvements. — Where the land had no rental value outside of the improvements put there by the possessor, the owner cannot offset any part of the enhanced value of the land by reason of the improvements by rents. Thouvenin v. Lea, 26 Tex. 612; Van Zandt v. Brantley, 16 Tex. Civ. App. 420.

6. Where Enhancement in Value from Improvements Does Not Exceed Value of Rents and Profits. — Folt v. Allen, 110 N. Car. 183; Crawford v. Shaft, 46 Kan. 704. See also Connor v. Parsons, (Tex. Civ. App. 1895) 30 S. W. Rep. 83.

Use of Land Held to Completely Offset Claim for Improvements. — In Pierson v. Conley, 95 Mich. 619, it was considered that where the defendant had had the benefit of the use of the land in controversy for about twenty-five years, this would offset all the improvements which he had made. It does not appear in what those improvements consisted. See also Grider v. Driver, 46 Ark. 109, where the court considered the improvements to have been fully compensated for by the use and occupation of the land up to a certain period, and ordered payment of rent for the balance of the time the land was occupied.

7. Rents and Profits May Be Set Off in Direct Proceeding for Compensation for Improvements. — Welles v. Newsom, 76 Iowa 81; Parsons v. Moses, 16 Iowa 440; Barton v. National Land Co., 27 Kan. 634.

Claim for Rents and Profits Made in Action of Ejectment but Withdrawn. — The rule stated in the text was applied though a claim for such use and occupation was made in the original action of ejectment, where such claim was

has been merged in the previous judgment in his favor.¹

3. Period for Which Rents and Profits May Be Set Off. — Against a claim for improvements the owner may set off rents and profits or damages for the occupation for a period so remote that a direct recovery would be barred by the statute of limitations.²

4. Mesne Profits Prior to Entry of Occupant. — While a defendant in ejectment is not ordinarily liable for mesne profits taken, prior to his own entry, by those under whom he claims, yet if in accounting for the profits chargeable to himself he claims credit for improvements made by his predecessors,³ such improvements must first answer for the profits taken by those who erected them.⁴

5. Whether Rent Can Be Charged on Value of Property as Improved. — The general rule is that in estimating the rents and profits to be charged against the occupant, he should not be required to account for rents and profits on the land as enhanced in value by improvements placed thereon by him, but only for those rents and profits which might properly have been charged had the improvements not been made.⁵ This rule is, however, subject to some withdrawn in open court and not determined upon in such action. Welles v. Newsom, 76 Iowa 81.

Rule in Alabama. — Where a defendant in ejectment seeks to obtain the benefit of improvements of a permanent character, under a suggestion of three years' adverse possession under Code Alabama (1876), §§ 2951-2954, the defendant is allowed full value for his improvements and the plaintiff full rent for his land, the one being adjusted by way of equitable set-off against the other. And in such case the provisions of section 2966, limiting the recovery of damages or rent, against persons holding possession and under color of title in good faith, to one year prior to suit brought, do not apply. Turnipseed v. Lindsay, 11 Ont. 520; Carroll v. Robertson, 15 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 173; Bright v. Campbell, 54 L. J. Ch. 1077; McGregor v. McGregor, 5 Ont. 617.

Value of Improvements Must Be Shown. — Mesne profits, though arising chiefly out of the exceptions, which are treated in the note.¹

Improvements Not Made in Good Faith. — The rental value of the land as improved may be allowed where the court has found that the improvements were not made in good faith.²

Rule in Mississippi. — In Mississippi rent is charged on the value of the property as improved where the occupant is allowed compensation for his improvements.³

XII. WAIVER OR FORFEITURE OF CLAIM FOR IMPROVEMENTS. — The right to recover compensation may be waived, abandoned, or forfeited by a failure to claim the same,⁴ or to comply with the statutory requirements in order to secure an allowance;⁵ by voluntarily abandoning the improvements;⁶ or, in Nebraska, by electing to remove them.⁷

XIII. RULES CONCERNING IMPROVEMENTS BY LESSEES. — It is well settled that one who has occupied land merely as the tenant or lessee of another is not entitled, as against his lessor, to any compensation for improvements which he may have placed on the demised premises in the absence of some express or implied covenant or agreement on the part of the lessor to pay therefor.⁸

improvements, and though the land, if vacant, would have been worth nothing for rent, are not to be diminished on account of the value added to the land by constructing the improvements, unless there be some evidence of what amount in value was so added. Jenkins v. Means, 59 Ga. 55.

Former Rule in Texas. — The proper construction of article 4814 of the Texas Revised Statutes is that one who had improved the land of another, being in possession bona fide, upon setting up his claim for the value of his improvements, cannot be made to account for so much of the value of the use and occupation as has accrued from the improvements so made. But rent could be charged upon improvements erected before the revised statutes went into effect, for that right under the former statute was a vested right such as was preserved by section 5 of the final title of the revised statutes. Bitner v. New York, etc., Land Co., 67 Tex. 341. See also Ebetts v. Tendick, 44 Tex. 570.

1. Improvements Consisting of Preparing Land for Cultivation. — The occupant has been required "to pay rent according to the increased adaptation of the land for the purpose for which it is used, though such adaptation is brought about by the occupant's own labors." Dungan v. Von Puhl, 8 Iowa 263. Followed in Wolcott v. Townsend, 49 Iowa 456.

Rents During Pendency of Appeal. — Where the occupant has appealed from a judgment against him in an action for the recovery of the land and given a supersedeas bond for the rental value, he may be charged rent on the improvements during the pendency of his appeal. Norton v. Davis, 13 Tex. Civ. App. 90.

Where Interest Is Allowed on Value of Improvements. — If the owner of property be decreed to pay interest on the value of the improvements, he should be allowed the value of the use of them; otherwise not. Childs v. Shower, 18 Iowa 261. See also Dungan v. Von Puhl, 8 Iowa 263; Parsons v. Moses, 16 Iowa 440; Fawcett v. Burwell, 27 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 445.

As to the propriety of allowing such interest, see supra, this title, IV. 6. Interest.

2. Improvements Not Made in Good Faith. — Gilley v. Williams. (Tex. Civ. App. 1897) 43 S. W. Rep. 1094.

3. Rule in Mississippi. — "The full rule is, allowance to defendants for improvements to the extent of the enhanced vendible value of the lands imparted by such improvements, and liability for enhanced rental value imparted by the same improvements. This rule is so just, so reasonable, so fair to both parties that we must adhere to it." Hicks v. Blake-man, 74 Miss. 459. See also Miller v. Ingram, 56 Miss. 510.

Where Compensation for Improvements Is Denied. — If the improvement does not inure to the benefit of the plaintiff, justice is done by denying the defendant the value of it; and if the defendant can get no pay for an improvement, the plaintiff should not be allowed any rent by reason of such improvement. Johnson v. Futch, 57 Miss. 73; Nixon v. Porter, 38 Miss. 401; Phillips v. Chamberlain, 61 Miss. 240. See also Tatum v. McLellan, 56 Miss. 352.

7. Election to Remove Improvements. — One who has occupied and improved school lands of the state waives his right to compensation for the improvements by electing to remove them. Luse v. Rankin, 57 Neb. 632.

A Tenant by the Curtesy Initiate of his wife's undivided interest in land may be allowed for improvements erected by him, as he presumably acted for himself and his wife, and therefore cannot be considered as a mere stranger or volunteer. Kelsey's Appeal, 113 Pa. St. 119, 57 Am. Rep. 444.

Improvements Made for His Own Benefit by Tenant in Common in Sole Possession with Acquiescence of Others. — A tenant in common, who has been in sole occupation of the land with the acquiescence of the others, whose right he recognizes, will not be allowed compensation for improvements which add little if anything premises.¹ This right is distinct and different from any right to recover a proportion of the expenses of improvements by an action of assumpsit, or any similar action against the other cotenants, and has been recognized even where the latter right is denied.²

Distinction Depending upon Knowledge of Title of Cotenants. — In South Carolina the right to an allowance for improvements has been said to depend upon whether or not the cotenant knew of the title of the other cotenants,³ but such a distinction does not prevail generally in regard to all methods of allowance.¹

Assent of Cotenants Not Necessary. — To entitle a tenant in common to an allowance on a partition in equity for the improvements made on the premises, it does not appear to be necessary for him to show the assent of his cotenants to such improvements or a promise on their part to contribute their share of the expense, nor is it necessary for him to show a previous request to join in the improvements and their refusal.⁵

2. How the Allowance Is Made — a. BY ASSIGNING IMPROVED PORTION OF PROPERTY TO MAKER OF IMPROVEMENTS. — (1) Method Adopted When Practicable. — The most equitable mode of making such an allowance is to assign to the tenant who has made the improvements that portion of the property on to the salable value of the land, and were put there for the benefit of himself alone. Hixon v. Bridges, (Ky. 1897) 38 S. W. Rep. 1046. See also Cosgriff v. Foss, 152 N. Y. 104, 57 Am. St. Rep. 500, affirming 65 Hun (N. Y.) 184, in which a tenant in common, who held exclusive possession under a lease from his cotenant, was refused an allowance for improvements made for the purpose of carrying on his business and not for the benefit of the property, the increased income resulting from the improvements benefiting the occupant alone.

Improvements Made by Tenants in Common in Reversion During the Previous Life Estate. — The fact that improvements were made by tenants in common in reversion during the previous life estate has been held no bar to an allowance to them for such improvements. Hall v. Piddeck, 21 N. J. Eq. 311; Brookfield v. Williams, 2 N. J. Eq. 341; Green v. Putnam, 1 Barb. (N. Y.) 500. See also Killmer v. Wuchner, 79 Iowa 722, 18 Am. St. Rep. 392; Broyles v. Waddel, 11 Heisk. (Tenn.) 32. Contra, Lasby v. Crewson, 21 Ont. 255.

As to the rights of life tenants, see infra, this title, Rules Concerning Improvements by Life Tenants or Tenants for Years.

When Improvements May Inure to Benefit of All Cotenants. — In Kelsey's Appeal, 113 Pa. St. 119, 57 Am. Rep. 444, Mercur, C. J., delivering the opinion of the court, said: "It may be conceded that there may be cases of partition in which the improvements should be held to inure to the benefit of all the cotenants. It is well intimated such might be the case where one cotenant undertakes to improve the whole estate as by erecting a building covering the whole of a city lot."

Action to Set Aside Sale. — When, in an action to set aside an administrator's sale, it is found that the purchaser is the owner of half the property, he should be charged with half of the rent and credited with half of the value of the improvements. Barks v. Vaughan, (Ark. 1892) 19 S. W. Rep. 754. See also Nichols v. Nichols, 79 Tex. 332.

Lien Resulting from Improvements. — There is a lien resulting to a joint owner of any real estate from improvements made upon such property for the joint benefit. Gavin v. Carling, 55 Md. 530.

1. Allowance in Addition to Pro Rata Interest in Premises. — Dean v. O'Meara, 47 Ill. 120; Kurtz v. Hibner, 55 Ill. 514, 8 Am. Rep. 665. And see also cases cited in preceding note.

2. Right to Allowance on Partition Recognized but Right to Recover Directly from Cotenants Denied. — Ballou v. Ballou, 94 Va. 350. See also Cosgriff v. Foss, 152 N. Y. 104, 57 Am. St. Rep. 500, affirming 65 Hun (N. Y.) 184; Clapp v. Nichols, 31 N. Y. App. Div. 531, 32 N. Y. App. Div. 628.

As to the right to such direct recovery, see the title JOINT TENANTS AND TENANTS IN COMMON.

3. Distinction Depending upon Knowledge of Title of Cotenants. — Johnson v. Pelot, 24 S. Car. 255, 58 Am. Rep. 253, citing 1 Story Eq. Jur., § 655; Thurston v. Dickinson, 2 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 317, 46 Am. Dec. 56; Dellet v. Whitner, Cheves Eq. (S. Car.) 223; Hancock v. Day, McMull. Eq. (S. Car.) 69, 36 Am. Dec. 293; Thompson v. Bostick, McMull. Eq. (S. Car.) 79; *Williman v. Rep. 702.

4. Distinction Not General. — See the remaining portion of this section.

5. Consent of Cotenants Not Necessary. — Ballou v. Ballou, 94 Va. 350. In this case Harrison, J., delivering the opinion of the court, said: "The allowance of compensation for improvements is, in all cases, made not as a matter of legal right, but purely from the desire of the court to do justice, and therefore the compensation will be estimated so as to inflict no injury on the cotenant against whom the improvements are charged. Freeman on Cotenancy and Partition, § 510; 3 Pomeroy's Eq. Jur. § 1389; 1 Story's Eq. Jur., § 655; Ruffner v. Lewis, 7 Leigh (Va.) 720, 30 Am. Dec. 513, note to Robinson v. McDonald, 11 Tex. 385, 62 Am. Dec. 482, and the cases there cited."

which they are situated, the division being made on the basis of the unimproved value; and this is the method which is adopted whenever the nature of the property and the improvements, and the situation of the latter, are such as to render it practicable,¹ and it can be done without injury to the other cotenants.²

Improvements Made for Personal Convenience. — In Rowan v. Reed, 19 Ill. 21, the court refused to apportion to the occupying tenant improvements made by him for his personal convenience, and not for the benefit of the estate, and of which he had had enjoyment for several years.

Improvements by Grantee of Original Cotenant. — If the improvements are made, not by the original tenant in common, but by his grantee, there is no good reason why the latter should not have the benefit of the same measure of protection which a court of equity would have afforded to his grantor if no conveyance had been made. Ferris v. Montgomery Land, etc., Co., 94 Ala. 557, 33 Am. St. Rep. 146, citing 11 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW (1st ed.) 1092, 1093; Young v. Edwards, 33 S. Car. 404, 26 Am. St. Rep. 689; *Gittings v. In Maine, in order for one tenant who has occupied and improved the premises to have his share set off so as to include his improvements without considering their value, he must show "that by mutual consent he had the exclusive possession of a part of the estate and made improvements thereon." But without such consent he is entitled to have the value of the improvements considered in assigning the shares so that he shall receive the benefit of them, though in the division some other part of the property fall to him. Reed v. Reed, 68 Me. 568; Allen v. Hall, 50 Me. 253.

the exclusive title to the property at the time he made them,¹ and without reference to the question whether or not he acted in good faith,² for the rights of the other cotenants are in no way affected by such a partition being made.³

(3) Right to Have Improved Portion Set Off Recognized, Though Right to Pecuniary Compensation Denied. — There are cases which have recognized the right of an occupant who has made improvements to have them set off to him on partition, as stated above, although they denied any right in the occupant to pecuniary compensation.⁴

(4) Distinction Depending upon Whether Improving Tenant Is Plaintiff in Partition. — In some jurisdictions the right of an improving tenant to have the improved portion assigned to him on partition has been limited to cases in which the other tenant seeks the partition,⁵ but in others the improving tenant has been considered to be entitled to receive such portion though he was plaintiff in the partition suit.⁶

(5) Right Not Dependent upon Consent of Cotenants to Improvements. — The equity of a cotenant to have the part of the common property which he has improved allotted to him on a partition is not founded upon the idea that he made the improvements with the consent, express or implied, of his cotenants.⁷

b. BY REQUIRING PAYMENT OF COMPENSATION BY OTHER COTENANTS — (1) In General. — Where such a division of the property as is indicated above is not practicable, the other cotenants may be required to pay to the Belief in Sole Title an Equitable Consideration in Favor of Occupant. — The authorities generally, both in cases where compensation for improvements is allowed and in cases where the improved portion of the estate is allotted to the cotenant who has expended his labor and capital thereon, treat the fact that the improvements were made by one who supposed himself to be legally entitled to the whole premises, as an equitable consideration in his favor. Ferris v. Montgomery Land, etc., Co., 94 Ala. 557, 33 Am. St. Rep. 146; Patrick v. Marshall, 2 Bibb (Ky.) 40, 4 Am. Dec. 670; Pitt v. Moore, 99 N. Car. 85, 6 Am. St. Rep. 489.

The Only Good Faith Required is that the tenant should have made the improvements honestly for the purpose of improving the property, and not of embarrassing his cotenants, or encumbering their estate, or hindering partition. Hall v. Piddock, 21 N. J. Eq. 311.

On partition, the part improved should be assigned to the improver, if it can be done without injury to others, but when this cannot be done, the cost of the improvement cannot be charged to him to whom it goes. Ward v. Ward, 40 W. Va. 611, 52 Am. St. Rep. 911.

5. Right to Assignment of Improved Portion Limited to Cases Where Other Tenants Seek Partition. — Swan v. Swan, 8 Price 518; Bazemore v. Davis, 55 Ga. 519; Ford v. Knapp, 102 N. Y. 141, 55 Am. Rep. 782. See also Davis v. Smith, 5 Ga. 289, 48 Am. Dec. 279, in which this difference of rights between a plaintiff and a defendant is recognized but severely criticised.

Under the Massachusetts statutes, (Gen. Stat., c. 136) a plaintiff seeking partition is not entitled to have assigned to him a portion of the land which he has improved without the knowledge or consent of his cotenants, and without including the value of the improvements in the partition. Husband v. Aldrich, 135 Mass. 317.

one who made the improvements a proportion of the enhancement of value which has resulted therefrom, equal to their interest in the property.¹

(2) Necessity for Claim of Exclusive Title and Good Faith. — But it has been frequently held that in order for a cotenant to be entitled to this relief, he must have claimed the exclusive title to the property, and have held exclusive possession thereof, at the time when he erected the improvements for which he claims compensation,² and in making such improvements should have acted in good faith.³ Thus, if a cotenant purposely covers the whole of the estate with valuable improvements in such a manner as to render it impossible to assign the shares of the others without including part of such improvements, he will be considered as a volunteer as to them, and when they were made without the consent of his cotenants he is not entitled to compensation.⁴

c. BY ALLOWANCE OUT OF PROCEEDS OF SALE OF PROPERTY. — Where the property is sold in partition proceedings, the cotenant who made the improvements is entitled to an allowance therefor out of the proceeds of sale.¹ And indeed a sale may be ordered for the purpose of making such an allowance where it is not possible to divide the property so as to assign the improvements to the tenant who made them.²

Notice of Interest of Other Tenants. — And it has been held that such an allowance may be made though the tenant in possession had notice of the interest of the other cotenants at the time the improvements were made.³

d. BY ASSIGNING AN INCREASED QUANTITY OF LAND TO MAKER OF IMPROVEMENTS. — It has been said that if, on partition, the improved portion of the land cannot be assigned to the maker of the improvements without injury to the other tenant in common, the former should be compensated by an increased quantity of land or in some other way.⁴ But the latter has the right to pay his share of the value of the improvements in money and retain his full share of the common property.⁵

e. BY SETTING OFF IMPROVEMENTS AGAINST RENTS AND PROFITS. — Improvements made by a tenant in possession may be set off against rents and profits due from him to his cotenants,⁶ and in some cases the courts have

1. Compensation Limited to Amount of Rents. — In the Alabama cases involving the claim of one tenant in common to compensation from his cotenants for improvements made by him upon the common property, such claim has not been denied, but the amount of the compensation has not been permitted to go beyond the amount of the rents charged against the improving tenant. Improvements Set Off Only Against Rents Arising from Improvements. — In Graham v. Graham, 6 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 562, 17 Am. Dec. 166, the court refused to allow improvements made by a copartner to be charged against any rents except those arising from the improvements.

Widow Holding Dower Interest. — Schaffner v. Schilling, 6 Mo. App. 42.

One Holding an Estate in Dower under the Widow cannot, after the termination of the estate, set up a claim for betterments against the reversioner. Maddocks v. Jellison, 11 Me. 482.

Rule in Maine. — In Maine the rule set forth in the text is recognized as the common-law other determinable estate in land will lose the benefit of his or her improvements when the estate comes to an end.¹

Purchasers. — The same is true of improvements made by a purchaser from one holding any such estate,² for it is presumed that such purchaser knew the title which he acquired.³

Lessees. — The lessee of the holder of such an estate has no such color of title to the premises as will give him a right to compensation for his improvements.⁴

2. Reason of the Rule. — The most satisfactory reason which has been given for this rule is that the life tenant, or one holding through or under him, does not hold in any way adversely to the remainderman or reversioner,⁵ and therefore must be held to have made such improvements merely with the view of enjoying them so long as the life estate continued,⁶ or to have intended them to be for the benefit of the remainderman.⁷

3. Acquiescence of Remainderman or Reversioner. — A mere acquiescence on the part of the remainderman or reversioner will not bind him to compensate for improvements by the life tenant. He must in general have concurred in, consented to, or connived at the ameliorations upon the estate, in order to be estopped from resisting a demand for improvements as a set-off to the rents.⁸

4. Exceptions to the Rule — a. WHERE ABSOLUTE TITLE IS CLAIMED. — It has been considered that where one possessed of a good life estate in land holds the same under a claim of title in fee simple thereto, if such latter holding be of such a character as to entitle him to compensation for his improvements, the fact that he was possessed of a valid life estate will not deprive him of such right.⁹ But on the other hand there are cases which have maintained rule. Pratt v. Churchill, 42 Me. 471; Reed v. Reed, 68 Me. 568; Varney v. Stevens, 22 Me. 331; Maddocks v. Jellison, 11 Me. 482. But under the statutes of that state the rule is otherwise, and a life tenant or his grantee or assignee is entitled to the benefit of improvements made by him. Reed v. Reed, 68 Me. 568; Pratt v. Churchill, 42 Me. 471. See also Austin v. Stevens, 24 Me. 520.

5. Possession of Life Tenant or His Grantee Not Adverse to Remainderman or Reversioner. — Barrett v. Stradl, 73 Wis. 385, 9 Am. St. Rep. 795.

The Grantee of a Life Tenant by Quitclaim Deed cannot counterclaim for the value of improvements made by him on the premises while holding under such deed as against the owner of the fee, for such a deed manifestly cannot be made the basis of an adverse holding of the fee in remainder because it does not purport to convey the remainder. *Falck v. Where Possession of Grantee of Life Tenant Becomes Adverse. — Where the grantee of a life tenant believed at the time of his purchase that he was getting a good title in fee to the premises, and has continued to hold possession under such belief, such possession is, after the death of the life tenant, adverse to the remainderman. Barrett v. Stradl, 73 Wis. 385, 9 Am. St. Rep. 795.

the strict rule that one holding under a life tenant is not entitled to compensation for his improvements, even though he held under a claim of fee simple title.¹

b. COMPLETION BY TENANT FOR LIFE UNDER A WILL, OF IMPROVEMENTS BEGUN BY TESTATOR. — It has been considered that in the case of a tenant for life under a will, who has gone on to finish improvements begun by the testator and permanently beneficial to the estate, a court of equity will hold the expenditure to be a charge upon the estate, for which the tenant is entitled to a lien.²

XVI. RULES CONCERNING IMPROVEMENTS BY MORTGAGORS OR MORTGAGEES IN POSSESSION — 1. By Mortgagors. — As a general rule all buildings and other improvements put upon the mortgaged premises by the mortgagor after the execution of the mortgage become a part of the freehold, and as such inure to the benefit of the mortgagee by enhancing the value of his security.³ Therefore the mortgagor cannot be allowed for such improvements as against the mortgagee in a suit for foreclosure;⁴ nor can he claim the benefit of such

The Possession of a Tenant May Be So Far Adverse as to Entitle Him to Compensation for Betterments, although he holds a limited estate which entitles him to the possession at the same time, so that his possession does not constitute a disseisin of the tenant in remainder, if his holding is not in fact and intent under the partial and rightful title, but under a claim of the entire interest. *Plimpton v. The Compensation for the Improvements Should Be Computed with Reference to the Time of the Termination of the Life Estate. — McKibbin v. Williams, 24 Ont. App. 122.

1. Exception Denied. — A tenant for life cannot lay out money in building on the land and charge it on the estate in remainder or make it a personal charge against the remainderman. Nor does it seem to make any difference that he made improvements upon the false assumption that he had absolute title to the property. Henry v. Brown, 99 Ky. 13. See also Johnson v. Stewart, 8 Ky. L. Rep. 857; Church v. Fithian, 16 Ky. L. Rep. 591.

Georgia Doctrine. — In Taylor v. Kemp, 86 Ga. 181, it was held that a purchaser of a life estate was not entitled, as against the remaindermen, to be paid for any permanent improvements which he had made upon the land except as a set-off against the mesne profits, although he might have been mistaken as to the title which he obtained and have thought that he got a fee simple title, and the remaindermen having abandoned their claim for mesne profits the purchaser was allowed no compensation for his improvements.

Covenant in Mortgage for Allowance. — Of course, if the mortgage contains a covenant for an allowance to the mortgagor for improvements in case of foreclosure, such allowance should be made.²

2. By Mortgagees in Possession — a. IN THE UNITED STATES — (1) General Rule Stated. — As a general rule it is considered that a mortgagee in possession of the mortgaged premises is not entitled, as against the mortgagor, to be compensated for improvements made thereon,³ and the same is true where the mortgagee has bought in the equity of redemption under such circumstances that the transaction will not be sustained in equity.⁴

(2) When Compensation May Be Allowed — (a) Belief of Mortgagee that He Has Acquired Complete Title. — It has been considered that where the mortgagee is in possession of the mortgaged premises under such circumstances that he reasonably can and actually does believe that he has acquired the complete title to the property, he has a right to be compensated for his improvements.⁵

A Purchaser under the Foreclosure of a Senior Mortgage, the Junior Mortgagee Not Having Been Made a Party to the Foreclosure Proceedings, and such purchaser having constructive notice of the junior mortgage, occupies in this respect, as towards the junior mortgagee, the same position as though such purchaser were the original mortgagor. Catterlin v. Armstrong, 79 Ind. 514.

A Mortgagee Who Has Wrongfully Entered upon the Premises and ousted the mortgagor therefrom cannot be allowed for improvements placed on the premises by him while so wrongfully in possession and holding adversely to the mortgagor. And this is true even though it may appear that the mortgagor would have made the same improvements if he had not been ousted from possession. Mahoney v. Bostwick, 96 Cal. 53, 31 Am. St. Rep. 175.

Where a Mortgagee Purchased at His Own Sale and took possession and made betterments, and in an action to recover possession by the mortgagor the latter was adjudged entitled thereto upon payment of the mortgage debt, the mortgagee was held to be not entitled to allowance for such betterments, since he was charged with notice of the defect in his title. Southerland v. Merritt, 120 N. Car. 318.

Where Junior Incumbrancer Seeks to Redeem. — In Connecticut it has been held that a junior incumbrancer, seeking to redeem from a mortgagee in possession, who has improved the property, must pay the value of the betterments. Wheat v. Griffin, 4 Day (Conn.) 419; Ensign v. Batierson, 68 Conn. 298.

(b) Consent or Acquiescence of Mortgagor. — The consent or acquiescence of the mortgagor to or in the making of improvements by the mortgagee may impose upon him a liability to compensate the latter for such improvements.¹

(3) Rents and Profits. — The mortgagee should not, as a rule, be charged with such rents and profits as are directly the product of permanent improvements made by him and which arise exclusively from such improvements.²

b. IN ENGLAND AND CANADA. — In England and Canada the rule seems to be that a mortgagee in possession should be allowed compensation for his improvements.³ But it has been said that a person who has made improvements under the belief that he was the absolute owner of the property will be allowed therefor more liberally than a mortgagee who knew himself to be such when spending his money.⁴

Measure of Compensation. — In such case it has been held in Iowa that the mortgagor should be held to account for what the improvements cost, in the absence of evidence showing that the cost was so great as to indicate that the mortgagee intended thereby to prevent any redemption. Gleiser v. McGregor, 85 Iowa 489.

Where Mortgagee Not in Actual Possession. — In Brighton v. Doyle, 64 Vt. 616, the town, believing itself to have derived an absolute title to certain land, but having in fact only a mortgagee's interest after condition broken, suffered the grantor of its title (its mortgagor in fact) to remain in possession of the property and enjoy the rents and profits, but during this continued occupancy of the mortgagor the town erected buildings upon the premises with the approval of the mortgagor. It was held that the town was entitled to compensation for these improvements in a suit proper for the allowance of a claim of that character.

But the Improvements Must Be Reasonable and not such as to unduly hinder the exercise by the mortgagor of his right to redeem. Sandon v. Hooper, 6 Beav. 246, 12 L. J. Ch. 309, affirmed by 14 L. J. Ch. 120.

Extent of Allowance — General Rule and Exception. — While a mortgagee in possession is ordinarily entitled to be allowed for necessary improvements only to the extent that they enhance the value of the property, yet where such a mortgagee obtained a release of the equity of redemption giving back a memorandum by which he agreed to reconvey the property to the mortgagors if they should pay within a given time a certain amount "and also all costs of improvements" made by the mortgagee upon the lands, it was held that the mortgagors could redeem only by paying the cost of such improvements. Brotherton v. Hetherington, 23 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 187.

A Second Mortgagee in Possession is not entitled, as against the first mortgagee, to a charge on the property for improvements made by him. Landowners West of England, etc., Drainage etc. Co. v. Ashford, 16 Ch. D. 411, 50 L. J. Ch. 276, 44 L. T. N. S. 20.

Where Consent Is Necessary. — In Kerby v. Kerby, 5 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 587, a mortgagee in possession of a grist mill and other property erected a carding and fulling mill upon the premises, and for this improvement an allowance was refused, the court saying: "It is not an improvement that a mortgagee under the circumstances could make without consent, and no consent is proved."

4. Allowance to Mortgagee Less Liberal than to One Who Claimed Absolute Title. — Carroll v. Robertson, 15 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 173; Fawcett v. Burwell, 27 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 445.

XVII. RULES CONCERNING IMPROVEMENTS BY TRUSTEES AND OTHER FIDUCIARIES. — Trustees and other fiduciaries may, within certain limits, be allowed compensation for improvements which they have made upon the property held by them.¹

When No Allowance Should Be Made. — But no such allowance should be made where the trustee has wrongfully retained possession of and used the property in violation of a direction to sell contained in the trust instrument,² or has been guilty of actual fraud,³ or has derived sufficient benefit from his possession of the property to compensate him for his improvements.⁴

XVIII. RULES CONCERNING IMPROVEMENTS BY ONE SPOUSE ON LAND OF OTHER — 1. As Between the Parties — a. VIEW THAT NO COMPENSATION SHOULD BE ALLOWED. — It has been repeatedly held that a husband who expends his money or labor in making improvements on land which is the separate property of his wife does not acquire any right to compensation therefor as against the wife or her heirs.⁵

1. Allowance May Be Made for Improvements — England. — Williamson v. Taber, 3 Y. & C. Exch. 717; Lawder v. Lewis, 1 Y. & C. Exch. 427; Bridge v. Brown, 2 Y. & C. Ch. 181.

And see other cases cited throughout this section.

A trustee is entitled to be remunerated for the actual amount of money or labor bestowed on such improvements as are necessary to preserve the property or to render it permanently more beneficial, but not on ideal or unsuccessful experiments. Myers v. Myers, 2 McCord Eq. (S. Car.) 214, 16 Am. Dec. 648.

A Trustee Ex Maleficio was allowed compensation for improvements in Thornton v. Ogden, 41 N. J. Eq. 345.

2. No Allowance Where Possession of Property Was Wrongfully Retained. — Tatum v. McLellan, 56 Miss. 352.

Rents Not Charged on Improvements. — But even in such case the trustee should not be charged an increased rent on account of the additions to the land for which he is denied compensation. Tatum v. McLellan, 56 Miss. 352.

Equity Will Not Imply a Promise by the Wife to pay her husband for improvements or repairs on her land while possessed, used, or enjoyed by him in virtue of his marital rights, but, on the contrary, a presumption arises in all such cases that the consideration and motive of the husband were that he would be reimbursed by use and enjoyment of the land. Nall v. Miller, 95 Ky. 448.

Marriage May Cancel Claim for Improvements.

— It has been held in Missouri that where a woman had entered into a contract to convey certain property to a man in consideration of his supporting her during her life and the parties subsequently married, if anything was owing to the man for improvements made on the woman's property under the supposed agreement the marriage canceled the debt. Rogers v. Wolfe, 104 Mo. 1, citing Smiley v. Smiley, 18 Ohio St. 543; Chapman v. Kellogg, 102 Mass. 246; Long v. Kinney, 49 Ind. 235.

Heirs of Husband May Be Allowed Improved Portion on Partition. — In Kentucky it has been held that on a partition between a widow and the heirs of her deceased husband, of lands which had been owned by the husband and wife in common, the heirs should be assigned the portion of the land which contained permanent improvements made by the husband. Dehoney v. Bell, (Ky. 1895) 30 S. W. Rep. 400.

6. VIEW THAT COMPENSATION SHOULD BE ALLOWED. — On the other hand there are cases which have considered that the spouse who has made improvements is entitled to compensation for such improvements.¹

2. As Against Creditors. — The placing of improvements on his wife's land by a husband does not necessarily constitute a fraud upon his creditors or give them any rights as against the property so improved.² But it may be otherwise when the circumstances show an actual intent to defraud creditors;³ and it has also been held that such expenditures may be charged on the land for debts existing when the improvements were made.⁴

IMPROVIDENCE. (See also the title EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, vol. 11, pp. 781, 824.) — Improvidence is defined to be want of care and foresight in the management of property.⁵

That a man is a professional gambler furnishes a presumption of his improvidence. McMahon v. Harrison, 6 N. Y. 443.

In an act authorizing the superseding of an executor upon the ground of improvidence, mismanagement or misconduct in his trust is not improvidence, nor is illiteracy, nor the fact that he is of small pecuniary means. Improvidence "evidently refers to habits of mind and conduct which become a part of the man and render him generally and under all ordinary circumstances unfit for the trust or employment in question." Emerson v. Bowers, 14 N. Y. 454, reversing 14 Barb. (N. Y.) 658.

6. Impunity—Impunitive. — "A new trial should have been granted in this case. The verdict of the jury was unintelligible. Our English word impunity, which applies to something which may be done without penalty or punishment, comes from the Latin word impunis, which is a derivative from the word pæna with the prefix in, and means without punishment or penalty. We have no such word in our language as impunitive; it cannot, then, be a proper finding for the jury to say, 'We, the jury, find for the plaintiff one hundred dollars impunitive damages.'" Dillon v. Rogers, 36 Tex. 152.

7. Chimney in House. — Where an act makes it penal to erect to any building an addition having in it a chimney or fireplace, an addition warmed from a chimney or fireplace built solely in the old part of the building, but for the exclusive accommodation of the new part, is not within the inhibition. Daggett v. State, 4 Conn. 60.

Fire Insurance. — As to the effect of a policy upon chattels contained in a certain building, etc., see the title FIRE INSURANCE, vol. 13, p. 122 et seq.

In and From—Larceny. — An indictment charging that the defendant "feloniously took and carried away from" a dwelling house does not charge larceny in a dwelling house, but, being mere matter of description, it does not affect the sufficiency of the indictment. Moore v. State, 40 Ala. 49.

In a House—Will. — (See also the title WILLS.) — In general, a legacy of a certain class of goods in a house will carry all goods of that class which are usually in the house, although at the time they have been temporarily removed. In re Johnston, 26 Ch. D. 538. But where the testator had removed entirely from the house mentioned in the will, it was held that his household chattels did not pass. Spencer v. Spencer, 21 Beav. 548.

In the City—Taxation. (See also the title TAXATION.)—In Ogden v. St. Joseph, 90 Mo. 522, it was held that a statute making property in the city subject to taxation included intangible property, such as shares of stock owned by a resident of the city.

Same—Outside of Corporate Limits.—In Wichita v. Barleigh, 36 Kan. 41, it was said: "The plaintiff in error now claims that at the time when the act was passed there was no 'Gilbert's addition in the city of Wichita,' or in the town of Wichita, upon which the act could operate. This addition, however, to the city of Wichita may in fact at that time have been in the town or city of Wichita, considering the collective body of people in that vicinity as the town or city, and not merely the corporate limits; for the town or city as thus considered may in fact have extended beyond its corporate limits. And it does not appear that there was any other Gilbert's addition in or near to the town or city of Wichita."

In a County—Will. (See also the title WILLS.)—A bequest of the testator's goods in a certain county or locality will pass debts due to him from residents of such county. Arnold v. Arnold, 2 Myl. & K. 365; Horsfield v. Ashton, 2 Jur. N. S. 193; Guthrie v. Walrond, 22 Ch. D. 573; Nisbett v. Murray, 5 Ves. Jr. 149; Tyrone v. Waterford, 1 De G. F. & J. 613.

Same—Taxation.—In Conley v. Chedick, 7 Nev. 341, it was held that to constitute property in any particular county so as to make it assessable therein, "it must be in such situation as to make it a part of the wealth of that county; it must belong in it; must be incorporated with the other property of the county."

Elections—Voting in Precinct of Residence.—The election precincts of a town were laid off from the court house, the court house not being included in any precinct. The voting was conducted in several rooms of the court house. It was held that this did not violate a constitutional provision that the electors should vote in the precinct of their residence. Ex p. White, 33 Tex. Crim. 504.

1. Payment. (See also the titles BILLS OF EXCHANGE AND PROMISSORY NOTES, vol. 4, p. 92; PAYMENT.)—Where a bond was conditioned for the payment of a certain sum in five years from date, the court said that "the natural acceptance is that it may be paid inside of the five years, and must be paid at the end thereof. But this would not warrant the payment in instalments without Post's [the obligee] consent." Verdine v. Olney, 77 Mich. 320. See also Horstman v. Gerker, 49 Pa. St. 283.

A promise was to pay a sum of money within a certain time. The court said in construing it that there was but a slight difference in phraseology between such a note and one payable in a certain time, though perhaps commercial usage may have construed the latter as a promise to pay at the expiration of the period. It was accordingly held that tender might be made at any reasonable time within the specified period. Buffum v. Buffum, 11 N. H. 456.

But a bond payable "in twenty-five years after date" was held not to be payable within that time. Allentown School Dist. v. Derr, 115 Pa. St. 446, 6 Cent. Rep. 887. See also In re Hofmann, 14 W. N. C. (Pa.) 563.

Same—Delivery.—A contract for the sale of thirty bales of goat wool provided that the goods were to be paid for by cash in one month. It was held that the vendee was entitled to have the goods delivered to him immediately, or within a reasonable time, but was not bound to pay for them until the expiration of the month. Spartali v. Benecke, 10 C. B. 212, 70 E. C. L. 212.

2. In Any Street in the Sense of Upon Any Street.—Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Dunbar, 100 Ill. 137.

In and Across.—Where the charter of a railroad company authorized the construction of the road "upon and over such streets," naming the streets, "except in" certain of the streets therein mentioned, "as shall be from time to time fixed and determined by the city council," it was held that this did not preclude the company from crossing the excepted streets. State v. Newport St. R. Co., 16 R. I. 533, citing Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Dunbar, 100 Ill. 137.

Termini.—The charter of the defendants contained the following clause. "The president and directors of the said company be and they are hereby authorized and invested with all the rights and powers necessary and expedient to survey, lay out, and construct a railroad from some suitable point in the township of Orange, in the county of Essex, to some suitable point in Orange street, or some street north of said street or south of Market street, in the city of Newark." It was held that this enactment related not to the route but to the termination of the road, and that thereby the road of the company was not excluded from being located in or through Market street. McFarland v. Orange, etc., Horse Car R. Co., 13 N. J. Eq. 17.

In and About the Rails.—A street-railroad company contracted with the city to pave the streets whereon its tracks were laid "in and about the rails." It was held that the words "in and about the rails" included so much of the street service outside the rails as was disturbed in laying the track; and in the absence of evidence as to how far that space extended, it was a reasonable presumption that it included as much as one foot outside the rails. McMahon v. Second Ave R. Co., 75 N. Y. 231, affirming 11 Hun (N. Y.) 347, followed in New York v. Second Ave. R. Co., 102 N. Y. 572, 26 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 546, in which case it was held that the contract extended to the entire space between the rails.

In the Pillory.—Standing erect upon the pillory is not being set in it. Rex v. Beardmore, 2 Burr. 795.

In a Street.—A., by his will, devised all his message or dwelling house, with the appurtenances, in High street, in the town of H., and all and every his buildings and hereditaments in the same street, to his mother for life and after her death to C. D. A. had only one house in High street, but behind that house he had two cottages fronting a lane called Bakehouse lane. There was no thoroughfare through that lane, the only entrance into it being from High street. It was held that the two cottages passed under the will. Doe v. Roberts, 5 B. & Ald. 407, 7 E. C. L. 150.

at;¹ of.² For its use adjunctively, in connection with other words, see note 3.

1. At and In Synonymous. (See also At, vol. 3, p. 167.)—Graham v. State, 1 Ark. 171; State v. Cox, 35 N. J. L. 302; Augustine v. State, 20 Tex. 450; Williams v. Ft. Worth, etc., R. Co., 82 Tex. 553.

But where a statute required that notice of sales be posted "in at least four public places" in the county, an affidavit that notice had been posted "at," etc., was held insufficient to show a compliance with the requirement. Hilgers v. Quinney, 51 Wis. 62.

In Ray v. State, 50 Ala. 173, it was said: "It will be seen that these sections of the code [Code Ala. 1867, §§ 3620, 3622] make a distinction between playing with cards in a place and at a place. Webster, in his dictionary, defines 'at' to mean nearness in place or time. To be at church does not necessarily mean to be in the church; and to be at home does not require a party to be in the homestead domicile. Webster's Dict. Unabr., word 'at.' Then, as in the sections of the code above referred to, the words 'at' and 'in' are both used to signify position in place, there will be no sound reason for this distinction, unless they also expressed a difference in place. This would authorize the court to construe 'at' as 'near to.'"

In and At His Tavern.—A conviction that one G. P., of, etc., innkeeper, "after the hour of seven in the evening and before the hour of twelve of the clock of the night of Saturday, * * * in and at his tavern, * * * being a place where * * * intoxicating liquors are allowed to be sold by retail, did unlawfully sell and otherwise dispose of, and permit and allow to be drunk, * * * one glassful of beer," etc., was held bad, as not necessarily bringing the defendant within the class of persons designated by the statute 32 Vict., c. 32, § 24, O., viz.: "The person or persons who are the proprietors in occupancy, or tenants or agents in occupancy of the said place or places;" for the word "innkeeper" only amounts to a mere description, and not to an averment of his filling such a character, and the words "in and at his tavern" would not necessarily mean the proprietor in occupancy, etc., to whom the license is granted, and who alone is liable, but would also include the owner or proprietor even if he were not the occupant. Quere, whether the conviction charges three distinct offenses. Reg. v. Parlee, 23 U. C. C. P. 359.

2. Of.—"Rivers, bays, or waters in" the state of New Jersey is equivalent to "rivers, bays, or waters of" the state of New Jersey. Kean v. Rice, 12 S. & R. (Pa.) 205.

"In" in the Sense of Proximate Cause. — Upon the question of the interpretation of the words "in case he shall die * * * in the known violation of any law," the court said: "It seems to be clear that a relation must exist between the violation of law and the death, to make good the defense; that the death must have been caused by the violation of law to exempt the company from liability. It cannot be the true meaning of the proviso that the policy is to be avoided by the mere fact that, at the time of the death, the assured was violating the law, if the death occurred from some cause other than such violation." Bradley v. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co., 45 N. Y. 428. See also the titles ACCIDENT INSURANCE, vol. 1, p. 320; LIFE INSURANCE.

To in the Sense of In. — See Delorme v. Ferk, 24 Wis. 203.

In and To — Conveyance. — A deed of trust in the nature of a mortgage set out in full a contract between the mortgagor and certain parties for the conveyance of several parcels of land to the former, and then conveyed to the mortgagee all the right, title, and interest which the mortgagor had or might thereafter acquire in and to the lands embraced by the contract. It was held that the conveyance was in legal effect an assignment of the contract. Shoecraft v. Bloxham, 124 U. S. 730.

"In" in the Sense of For. — See Maguire v. Board of Revenue, 71 Ala. 421.

3. In an Indictment under an act punishing embezzlement by certain officers employed in the Bank of the United States, "being then a bookkeeper in," etc., is an insufficient description. U. S. v. Forrest, 3 Cranch (C. C.) 56.

Deal In, Etc. — See DEAL — DEALER, vol. 8, p. 846.

In or About. — Exploding torpedoes in a completed oil well, to quicken the flow, gives a lien under statute as labor "in or about the sinking, drilling, or completing" an oil well. Gallagher v. Karns, 27 Hun (N. Y.) 375. See generally the title MECHANICS' LIENS.

The statement that a bastard was born "in or about the year 1833" was held not sufficient where it was material that the birth should have been before August 14, 1834. The use of "in or about" signified that "about" did not mean in, and might mean in 1832 or 1834. Reg. v. St. Paul, 7 Q. B. 232, 53 E. C. L. 232.

In Accordance with the Form. — An English Bills of Sale Act provided that bills of sale must be "in accordance with the form" prescribed by statute. In Consolidated Credit, etc., Corp. v. Gosney, 16 Q. B. D. 24, it was said: "We must put on these words a reasonable interpretation and hold that substantial though not literal accordance with the form is sufficient." See also Melville v. Stringer, 13 Q. B. D. 398; Davis v. Barton, 11 Q. B. D. 540; Ex p. Stanford, 17 Q. B. D. 269.

In Action. — See CHOS IN ACTION, vol. 6, p. 2.

In Actual Service. — In Leathers v. Greenacre, 53 Me. 561, it was held that the terms "in actual service" and "engaged in an expedition" were synonymous. This case was upon the question of who might make a nuncupative will. See also the title NUNCUPATIVE WILLS.

In Addition. (See also ADDITION — ADDITIONAL, vol. 1, p. 608.) — Where a statute gives a civil remedy "in addition to" a criminal one, these words "do not carry with them any idea of sequence or order of time;" they are "synonymous with 'also,' 'moreover,' 'likewise.'" Com. v. Avery, 14 Bush (Ky.) 636.

"The words 'in addition' do not in themselves add anything to the effect of a simple bequest without these words. The legacies would be additional without them." And it is doubted whether the use of these superfluous words in a bequest requires less than its proper operation to be given to another bequest in the same will wherein they are not used. Lee v. Pain, 4 Hare 218. See generally the title WILLS.

In Aid. — A testator charged his general realty "in aid of my personal estate and in exoneration of my other real estate with the payment of my just debts and testamentary expenses." It was held that debts in this provision did not include a mortgage debt on realty specifically devised. In re Newmarch, 9 Ch. D. 12. See also Buckley v. Buckley, 19 L. R. Jr. 555.

In His Aid. — A North Carolina statute provided that actions against a public officer for acts done by him by virtue of his office, or against a person who, by his command, or in his aid, should do anything touching the duties of such officer, should be tried where the cause arose. It was held that an indemnity bond did not bring the obligors within the words "in his aid." Harvey v. Brevard, 98 N. Car. 93. See generally the title INDEMNITY CONTRACTS, post.

In Arms. — A Canadian statute enacted that citizens of a foreign state, at peace with Canada, taken in arms against the Canadian government, should be guilty of a capital offense. It was held that it was not necessary in order to render a party amenable to the statute that he should actually have arms on his person, it being sufficient that he should be present and concerned with those who were armed, even though he did not carry arms himself. Reg. v. Slavin, 17 U. C. C. P. 210.

In Arrears. — See ARREARS, vol. 2, p. 830.

In Bales. — See BALE, vol. 3, p. 768.

In Barn or in Fields. — A policy insured two barns and certain articles "contained therein," and also a horse "in barn or in fields." It was held that the horse was insured, although in a barn not one of those specified. Trade Ins. Co. v. Barracloiff, 45 N. J. L. 544.

In That Behalf. — See Garby v. Harris, 7 Exch. 501, 21 L. J. Exch. 160.

In Behalf Of. — In Wanner v. Emanuel's Church, 174 Pa. St. 466, it was said: "The notes are said to have been executed, etc., 'in behalf' of the corporation. That means 'for' it. Anderson's Law Dict., ad verb. 'for.' A note, however, executed by one 'for' another is executed by the former as agent for the latter." Citing Campbell v. Baker, 2 Watts (Pa.) 83; Wright v. Weakly, 2 Watts (Pa.) 89. And see Hoffa v. Homestead Bldg. Assoc., 3 Pa. Dist. 567.

In Being. — Within the meaning of an act restricting the entailment of real estate, it has been held that a child in utero at the testator's death was in being. Phillips v. Herron, 55 Ohio St. 478. See also Starling v. Price, 16 Ohio St. 29; Turley v. Turley, 11 Ohio St. 173; McArthur v. Scott, 113 U. S. 340.

In Blood. — In In re Fitzgerald, 58 L. J. Ch. 662, it was held that the addition of the words "in blood" to "next of kin" made the latter phrase stronger against a widow taking under it. See generally NEXT OF KIN.

In Case. (See also CASE, vol. 5, p. 756.) — This phrase, in a bequest, implies a condition as explicitly as "if," "upon," and the like. Roberts's Appeal, 59 Pa. St. 70, 98 Am. Dec. 312.

In Case of or in Event of Decease. (See also the titles LEGACIES AND DEVISES; WILLS.) — Where a testator provides for a gift over in event of or in case of the decease of the legatee or devisee, it has been held that in event of the decease of the legatee meant the decease of the legatee before the decease of the testator. Phelps v. Phelps, 55 Conn. 359; White v. White, 52 Conn. 518; Coe v. James, 54 Conn. 511; Briggs v. Shaw, 9 Allen (Mass.) 517; Ewing v. Winters, 34 W. Va. 23. See also In re Potter, L. R. 8 Eq. 52, 4 Ves. Jr. 160; Lowfield v. Stoneham, 2 Stra. 1261; Smart v. Clark, 3 Russ. 365; Tilson v. Jones, 1 Russ. & M. 553; Bowen v. Scowcroft, 2 Y. & C. Exch. 640; Cambridge v. Rous, 8 Ves. Jr. 12; Home v. Pillans, 2 Myl. & K. 20, 21; Schenk v. Agnew, 4 Kay & J. 406. Compare Douglas v. Chalmer, 2 Ves. Jr. 501.

In Hill v. Hill, 5 Gill & J. (Md.) 96, the court declared that the words "in case of" manifested that there was some contingency in the mind of the testator, and refused to construe them as "at" or "upon."

But in Naundorf v. Schumann, 41 N. J. Eq. 14, where a testator gave all his property for the sole use and benefit of his wife, and in the event of her death, then over, it was held that the wife took a life estate, and that the words "in the event of her death" meant "upon her death."

In Ewing v. Winters, 34 W. Va. 23, it was held that the devise over in case of the death of the first devisee was equivalent to a devise over upon the death of the first devisee.

Same — Vesting of Legacy. — A grandfather, by his will, gave to his granddaughter a legacy, to be at her own disposal in case she married with the consent of J. E. The granddaughter died at the age of fourteen, unmarried. It was held that as the vesting of the legacy related to the event of the marriage, and that never happened, the legacy did not vest. Elton v. Elton, 3 Atk. 507. See also Roberts's Appeal, 59 Pa. St. 70, 98 Am. Dec. 312. And see the title LEGACIES AND DEVISES.

In Any Case. — The Revised Statutes of the United States authorized the issuance of a dedimus potestatem to take testimony in any case where it was necessary in order to prevent a failure or delay of justice. It was held that this provision applied only where the courts had jurisdiction. U. S. v. Hom Hing, 48 Fed. Rep. 637.

In Cash. (See also CASH, vol. 5, p. 757; and see the title PAYMENT.) — Under a statute requiring that a payment shall be in cash, it has been held that anything which would sustain a plea of payment in point of law, as distinguished from mere accord and satisfaction, will satisfy the requirement; and, therefore, if there be money due to the person who has to make the payment, and that money be set off against what he has to pay, that will be a payment in cash. Stroud's Jud. Dict.; In re Harmony, etc., Tin, etc., Min. Co., L. R. 8 Ch. 407; In re Pen' Allt Silver Lead Min. Co., L. R. 8 Ch. 270; In re Government Security F. Ins. Co., 12 Ch. D. 517; In re Land Development Assoc., 39 Ch. D. 259; In re Jones, 41 Ch. D. 159. But the debt must be presently payable. In re Land Development Assoc., 39 Ch. D. 259.

In Charge. (See also CHARGE, vol. 5, p. 888.) — The plaintiff's son, as it was getting dark, was taking three horses along a road which crossed the defendant's railway, riding one, leading another, and driving the third. This last horse, being from sixty to one hundred feet in front, attempted to cross the track as the train approached, and was killed. It was held that the horse was not in charge of any person. Markham v. Great Western R. Co., 25 U. C. Q. B. 572. See also Cooley v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 18 U. C. Q. B. 96.

In the Clear. — See CLEAR, vol. 6, p. 109.

In Close Proximity. — In an action against a railroad company, the court instructed that it was negligence in the company to allow weeds or bushes to grow near to or in close proximity to the track. In holding this to be error the appellate court said: "'Near,' in common parlance, is understood, and by lexicographers is defined, to mean either 'close' or 'at no great distance;' while 'in close proximity' or 'in the immediate vicinity' are equivalent terms." Ward v. Wilmington, etc., R. Co., 109 N. Car. 363. See generally the title CROSSINGS, vol. 8, p. 392.

In Commission. — One provisionally appointed colonel by the war department, who does not pass the examining board and is not confirmed by the senate, is neither "in commission" nor "in service," though under such appointment he awaited the order of discharge for several weeks. Greer v. U. S., 3 Ct. Cl. 182. See generally the title MILITARY LAW.

In Common. (See also the title JOINT TENANTS AND TENANTS IN COMMON.) — In Walker v. Dunshee, 38 Pa. St. 439, it was said: "They are to take also 'in common,' and this indicates equality where nothing is said to the contrary."

In the Conduct of a Suit. — In Re Emanuel, 9 Q. B. D. 408, it was held that the words "in the conduct of suit," in a statute providing for costs, did not include anything to be done before or after the action.

In Confidence. — See the title PRECATORY TRUSTS.

In Congress. — "Representative in Congress" is synonymous with "member of Congress." Butler v. Hopper, 1 Wash. (U. S.) 501.

In Custodia Legis. — See CUSTODY OF THE LAW, vol. 8, p. 532; and see the titles ATTACHMENT, vol. 3, p. 181; CONTEMPT, vol. 7, p. 25; EXECUTIONS, vol. 11, p. 604; EXEMPTIONS (FROM TAXATION), vol. 12, p. 266; INJUNCTIONS, post; JURISDICTION; PRIVATE INTERNATIONAL LAW; RECEIVERS; REPLEVIN; SHERIFFS, MARSHALS, AND CONSTABLES; UNITED STATES. As to the payment of money into court, see the title PAYMENT.

In Custody. — A defendant in a criminal prosecution who has given bail for his appearance at the next term of court, and is thereby entitled to his freedom, is not entitled to the writ of habeas corpus as being in custody, within the meaning of a statute. Spring v. Dahlman, 34 Neb. 692.

In Debt. — In Massey v. Walker, 10 Ala. 290, it was said: "We think, with the plaintiff's counsel, that to say one is in debt is just as much a conclusion as to say that one is embarrassed with debts."

In Default. — See DEFAULT, vol. 9, p. 167.

In Due Form. — This phrase, within an Act of Congress providing for the authentication of the records in judicial proceedings in state courts, has been held to mean the mode of attestation in use in the state from which the form comes. Ducommun v. Hysinger, 14 Ill. 250. See also Haynes v. Cowen, 15 Kan. 643. See generally the titles JUDGMENTS AND DECREES; RECORDS.

In the Employ. (See also the titles INDEPENDENT CONTRACTORS, post; MASTER AND SERVANT.) — In State v. Emerson, 72 Me. 456, a person who operated a machine to manufacture shingles by the thousand for the owners or lessees of a mill was held not to be in the employ of the mill owners.

In Extremis. — See the titles DYING DECLARATIONS, vol. 10, p. 359; GIFTS, vol. 14, p. 1056.

In Failing Circumstances. — In Dodge v. Mastin, 5 McCrary (U. S.) 412, it was said: "The phrase 'in failing circumstances,' used in the constitution and statutes, when applied to a bank, must be taken to mean a state of uncertainty whether the bank will be able to sustain itself, depending on favorable or unfavorable contingencies, which in the course of business may occur, and over which its officers have no control. Thus, for instance, an individual may be said to be in failing circumstances when he is put to unusual shifts to meet his liabilities, such as borrowing money at unusual rates of interest, [or] makes sacrifice, in the disposition of his property, which he would not do but for his condition. Such a condition of things may exist regarding a bank, and when this is the case a bank, like an individual, may be said to be in failing condition."

In the Field, in reference to the military service, means in the service for the purpose of carrying on war. Sargent v. Ludlow, 42 Vt. 726.

In the First Place, in the Next Place, etc., in a will, mark only the order in which the items occurred to the testator, and not the order of the payment of legacies. They do not, in the absence of a contrary intent, create a preference. Nash v. Dillon, 1 Molloy 236; Beeston v. Booth, 4 Madd. 161; In re Hardy, 17 Ch. D. 805; Blower v. Morret, 2 Ves. 420; Perrine v. Perrine, 6 N. J. L. 137; Duncan v. Alt, 3 P. & W. (Pa.) 386. Otherwise of "to be paid in the first place." Duncan v. Alt, 3 P. & W. (Pa.) 382. See also the title LEGACIES AND DEVICES.

In Form Following. — "The words 'in form following' are used in the records, civil and criminal, and all writs of error, as representing the record of the court of original jurisdiction.

They do not imply a copy, or secondary evidence of the thing, but the body of the writing itself." Gardner v. State, 25 Md. 151.

In Fraud. — In an act punishing the removing of revenue stamps from tobacco, "in fraud of the internal revenue laws" means "in violation of," etc. Quantity of Tobacco, etc., 5 Ben. (U. S.) 410.

In Full. (See also the titles PAYMENT; RECEIPTS; and see FULL, vol. 14, p. 560.) — In Watts v. Baker, 78 Ga. 628, a receipt in full given by an administrator de bonis non was held open to explanation. The court said: "The words 'in full,' etc., ought to be interpreted with reference to the subject-matter of the settlement on which the instrument was founded. Assets of the testator's estate which came to the hands of the administratrix of the executor, and assets which the executor had wasted in his lifetime, would be wholly different subject-matters."

The words "in full compensation" have a clear, distinct, and well understood signification, and cannot be overlooked or argued out of the statute. They "were introduced into these appropriation acts for the very purpose of reducing, for the respective years for which the appropriations were made, the compensation of those officers for whom the appropriations were less than the salaries established by previous laws." Fisher's Case, 15 Ct. Cl. 323. See generally the title PUBLIC OFFICERS.

In Day v. McLea, 22 Q. B. D. 610, it was held that the sending of a check in full of all demands does not amount to an accord and satisfaction, although the check is kept and placed to the sender's credit.

In Good Faith. — See GOOD FAITH, vol. 14, p. 1078.

In Good Order — In Apparent Good Order. — See GOOD, vol. 14, p. 1077; and see the titles BILLS OF LADING, vol. 4, pp. 526, 529; RECEIPTS.

In Gross. — See GROSS, vol. 14, p. 1118.

In Hand Paid. — A policy conditioned to be void on failure to pay "any notes or other obligations given for premium" purported to be issued in consideration of a certain sum "in hand paid" and of annual premiums for a like amount. Of the said sum only a part was paid in cash, and for the balance a note was given. The note set forth on its face that, if not paid when due, the policy should be void in accordance with the conditions of the policy. It was held that the policy was forfeited by failure to pay this note when due, and that the amount of this note must be deducted from the net value of the policy in determining the premium of temporary insurance under the statute of 1861, c. 186. Pitt v. Berkshire L. Ins. Co., 100 Mass. 500.

In the Hands. — A statute exempted from levy any pension money in the hands of the pensioner. It was held that when a pension check was deposited in a mutual savings bank, of whose assets the pensioner became a proportional part owner, it was exempt. Price v. Savings Soc., 64 Conn. 362.

In the Heat of Passion. — See the titles MURDER and MANSLAUGHTER; SELF-DEFENSE.

In the Last Sickness. (See also the title NUNCUPATIVE WILLS.) — In Harrington v. Stees, 82 Ill. 50, it was held that the words "in the time of the last sickness" of the deceased, as used in the Illinois statute relating to nuncupative wills, meant merely that the will must be made in the sickness of which the testator subsequently died, and did not mean that the will must have been made in extremis, or that the testator must not have had time to reduce it to writing.

In Liquidation. — A note given by a firm contained as an addition to the signature the words "in liquidation." It was held that the omission of these words from a declaration upon the note did not amount to a variance. Fairchild v. Grand Gulf Bank, 5 How. (Miss.) 604. See also Burr v. Williams, 20 Ark. 188.

In Like Manner. — See LIKE MANNER.

In Loco Parentis. — See LOCO PARENTIS.

In the Name Of. (See also the title NAME.) — A man invests in his own name when he invests openly for himself, though he receives the investment only by manual delivery. A written transfer is not necessary to such an investment. Carpenter v. Carpenter, 12 R. I. 548.

A Chinese exclusion act provided that where a Chinaman sought to enter the United States on the ground that he was formerly engaged in business in this country, he must show that he carried on business in his own name. It was held that under this act a Chinaman might be excluded where it appeared that his business was carried on under a firm name of which his name formed a part. In re Quan Gin, 61 Fed. Rep. 395. See generally the title CHINESE EXCLUSION ACTS, vol. 5, p. 1101.

In the Nature. — See NATURE.

In Need. — Of the words "in need of immediate relief," as used in a poor law, the court said: "A person may have property and yet fall into distress, and be in need of immediate relief, from inability to avail himself of it. On the other hand, a person may have no property, and yet, if he is supported by relatives or friends, would not be in need of immediate relief, within the meaning of the statute." Templeton v. Winchendon, 138 Mass. 110.

In Numero — Action of Debt. — In Thompson v. French, 10 Yerg. (Tenn.) 455, it was said: "By eo nomine and in numero is only meant that a specific sum is sought to be recovered which is improperly detained, and that the action does not sound in damages as does the action of assumpsit."

In Office. (See also the title PUBLIC OFFICERS; and see OFFICE.) — A statute prohibited a board of supervisors of the county of New York from creating any new office or increasing the salaries of "those now in office." In construing this provision the court said: "Whether we look into the dictionary of our language, the terms of politics, or the diction of common life, we find that whoever has a public charge or employment, or even a particular employment affecting the public, is said to hold or be in office." Rowland v. New York, 83 N. Y. 375.

In State v. Borowsky, 11 Nev. 119, it was held to be a misdemeanor in office for a public administrator to embezzle money received ex officio after his term of office had expired.

In Operation. — A statute declaring in full force all the ordinances of a state in operation at its date was held not to embrace an ordinance which had been judicially announced to be inoperative before the passage of the statute in question. Allen v. Savannah, 9 Ga. 286.

In Order To. — A testatrix, after disposing of all her property except a house and lot, provided that "in order to pay" any of her debts or any of the aforesaid legacies, her executors should sell the house and lot. In construing this will the court said: "We do not think this was intended as a limitation on the power, as though she had said, 'But the sale shall not be made unless it becomes necessary to the payment of my debts and pecuniary legacies.' She made no alternative disposition of the house and lot as would have been natural if she had contemplated the possibility of its sale not being necessary to carry out the provisions of her will. If the power is not unconditional but may be defeated in the manner proposed, then the testatrix becomes intestate as to this house and lot, and her intended bounty to her sisters fails." Adams's Estate, 148 Pa. St. 394.

In Her Own Right. (See also the title SEPARATE PROPERTY OF MARRIED WOMEN.) — A conveyance of land to a married woman "in her own right" is not a sufficient conveyance "to her sole and separate use, free from the interference or control of her husband," within the Massachusetts Separate Property Act. Merrill v. Bullock, 105 Mass. 486.

In His Own Right. — In Weston v. Landgrove, 53 Vt. 375, it was held that when one had purchased and occupied a farm, though he held it by a bond conditioned that he should have a deed thereof on payment of the sum specified in it, he held such farm in his own right, within the provisions of a pauper law.

Where the articles of association of a company provided that no person should be eligible as a director unless he held "as registered member in his own right capital of the company of the nominal value of five hundred pounds, at least," it was held that beneficial ownership was not necessary for qualification. Pulbrook v. Richmond Consol. Min. Co., 9 Ch. D. 615. But in Bainbridge v. Smith, 41 Ch. D. 462, the case above cited was considered, and the observation of Jessel, M. R., as to the meaning to be attached to the words "in his own right" was questioned by Cotton, L. J., who held that the meaning of holding shares "in his own right" is that the holder must not only have a legal right to deal with them, but must have a beneficial ownership of them, although such ownership may be encumbered. In the same case, Lindley, L. J., said that he was not prepared to dissent from the view taken by the master of the rolls. See also Gill v. Continental Union Gas Co., L. R. 7 Exch. 332.

In Pais. (See also the title ESTOPPEL, vol. II, p. 420.) — In the country. This phrase, as applied to a legal transaction, primarily means that it has taken place without legal proceedings. "Matters in pais" is used sometimes in distinction from "matters of record," sometimes from "matters in writing." Sweet's Law Dict.

In Pari Delicto. — Equally in fault; equally guilty.

In Pari Materia. — The words in pari materia are used as a phrase applicable to public statutes or general laws made at different times and in reference to the same subject. Such laws are to be construed together as forming a united system, and as one statute; otherwise the system might be unharmonious and inconsistent. Plummer v. Murray, 51 Barb. (N. Y.) 202. See also the title STATUTES.

In Perfect Order. — Where a lease recited that the house was now in perfect order, it was held that this statement referred to the condition of the house as an edifice in perfect repair, not to the present or future purity of air within it. Foster v. Peyser, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 242, 246.

In Person in the Sense of In Body. — See Calloway v. Laydon, 47 Iowa 458; Mulford v. Clewell, 21 Ohio St. 166; and see PERSON.

In Personam and In Rem. (See also the titles EQUITY, vol. II, p. 167; JUDGMENTS AND DECREES; KES JUDICATA.) — These terms have been adopted from the terminology of the Roman law. There an actio in personam was an action against a particular person to enforce the plaintiff's right to an act or forbearance on the part of the defendant. An actio in rem was either an impersonal action or an action against a thing. In the former sense it was an action which was not based on a mere claim against the defendant personally; which did not raise the question of the existence of an obligation between plaintiff and defendant, and therefore of a personal duty of action or forbearance on the defendant's part for the plaintiff's satisfaction. As meaning an action against a thing it was an action wherein the plaintiff claimed some corporeal thing as his own, or made a direct claim to one of those rights, other than obligation, called res incorporales. 4 L. Quar. Rev. 304 et seq. The English division of actions into real and personal is derived from this, but is based upon a different principle of classification, viz., the nature of the remedy sought.

The terms are used in something of their original meaning to describe rights, proceedings, and judgments. As applied to rights, they signify the distinction between those which are available against particular persons and those which are available against the world at large. Rapalje & L. Law Dict. And judicial proceedings are said to operate in rem or in personam. Chancery acts only in personam, because its decrees operate by compelling defendants to do what they are ordered to do, and not by producing the effect directly. Penn. v. Baltimore, 3 Har. & W. Lead. Cas. 767, Bisp. Eq. 47. Judgments in personam are adjudications of individual rights pronounced against particular persons, upon whom alone they are binding. Judgments in rem are adjudications pronounced upon the status of some particular subject-matter by a tribunal having competent authority for the purpose. Notes to Kingston's Case, 2 Smith Lead. Cas. 784; Best's Evidence, § 593. They decide and determine a status or make a final and conclusive transfer of property. State v. Central Pac. R. Co., 10 Nev. 47. Among them are decrees in divorce, Cheever v. Wilson, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 108; Hood v. Hood, 110 Mass. 463; probate decrees, Grignon v. Astor, 2 How. (U. S.) 319; Tompkins v. Tompkins, 1 Story (U. S.) 547; and decrees in admiralty, The Mary, 9 Cranch (U. S.) 126; Magown v. New England

Marine Ins. Co., 1 Story (U. S.) 157; The Slavers, 2 Wall. (U. S.) 383.

In Port. (See also PORT; and see the title MARINE INSURANCE.)—A ship insured for a voyage to any port of discharge in the United Kingdom, and while in port during thirty days after arrival, arrived at Greenock, discharged her cargo, and was placed in a dock for repairs. Within thirty days after her arrival she left the dock in ballast for the port of Glasgow, in tow of a steam tug, to proceed on a new voyage, and had reached the fairway of the channel of the Clyde, her stern being about five hundred feet distant from the harbor works, when she was capsized by a sudden gust of wind, and sustained damage. It was held, affirming the decision of the Court of Session (14 Ct. Sess. Cas., 4th series 544), that the ship at the time of the accident was not in port within the meaning of the policy, and that the underwriters were not liable. Hunter v. Northern Marine Ins. Co., 13 App. Cas. 717.

In His Possession.—See POSSESSION.

In Their Presence.—Abusive, insulting, or vulgar (i. e., obscene) language uttered in a public highway, near enough to the premises of the prosecutor to be distinctly heard, and actually heard by his family, or by any member thereof, must be regarded as uttered in their presence, and as a violation of Code of Alabama (1876), § 4203 (Crim. Code 1896, § 4306). Henderson v. State, 63 Ala. 193.

In the Presence Of.—See the title WILLS.

In Progress.—A statute provided that all work involving a certain expenditure should be by contract, "excepting such works now in progress as are authorized by law or ordinance to be done otherwise than by contract." It was held that where, for the purpose of laying a sewer, a street was divided into sections and subsections, commencement of work on one of the subsections was not a commencement on the other sections; therefore the work was not in progress on the other sections, within the meaning of the statute. Boas v. New York, 85 Hun (N. Y.) 311.

In Smith v. New York, 82 Hun (N. Y.) 570, affirmed 145 N. Y. 641, it was held that work was in progress if begun on the day previous to the taking effect of the statute. See generally the title MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

In Pursuance.—See PURSUANCE.

In the Rear.—See REAR.

In Rem.—See supra, this note, In Personam and In Rem.

In Restraint of Trade.—See the title RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

In the Same Manner.—See MANNER.

In Session. (See also the title SESSION.)—In People v. Fancher, 50 N. Y. 288, it was held that where a state senate took a long adjournment, although the session was continued, the senate was not in session within the meaning of the constitution, and that the appointment of a judge to fill a vacancy, made by the governor during such adjournment, was invalid. The court said: "The words 'in session,' as used in the clause under review, indicate a present acting or being of the senate as a body."

In McMullen v. U. S., 146 U. S. 360, it was held that, for the purpose of determining the amount of compensation to be paid to the United States marshals for attending court, the court is in session only when it is open by its order for the transaction of business; and that if it be closed by its own order for a day it is not in session, although the current term may not have expired.

In the State.—A statute taxing the gross receipts of railroads "doing business in the state" includes a road only a small part of which is within the state. It is to that extent in the state. Erie R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 492. See generally the title TAXATION.

In Store.—Although a receipt for wheat stated that the wheat was received in store, it was said that it was competent for the plaintiff to prove that there was a sale, notwithstanding the words "in store." Isaac v. Andrews, 28 U. C. C. P. 40; McBride v. Silverthorne, 1 U. C. Q. B. 545. See also Erwin v. Clark, 13 Mich. 10.

But it has been held that a written instrument acknowledging the receipt of a quantity of wheat "in store" imports a bailment and not a sale. Goodyear v. Ogden, 4 Hill (N. Y.) 104. See also the titles RECEIPTS; SALES.

In Substance.—See SUBSTANCE.

In Term. (See also TERM.)—A statute provided that judgments confessed in vacation should have the same force and effect as judgments entered "in term." In construing this statute the court said: "What is understood by the words 'in term'? They mean that the judgments confessed in vacation shall have the same force and effect as those entered in the term time of court. We see that a judgment may be confessed in court in vacation as well as at the session." Highway Com'rs v. People, 4 Ill. App. 391.

In Trade.—In Woods v. Dial, 12 Ill. 72, it was held that a contract, payable in trade, without time or place for payment, was payable on demand, or within a reasonable time thereafter, according to the nature of the thing demanded.

In His Trade or Business.—In In re Jenkinson, 15 Q. B. D. 441, it was held that this phrase in the Bankrupt Act did not include property unconnected with the bankrupt's business, although he had mortgaged it for money to be used in his business. Following In re Pryce, 4 Ch. Div. 685. See Colonial Bank v. Winney, 11 App. Cas. 426, reversing 30 Ch. D. 280.

In Transitu.—See the title STOPPAGE IN TRANSITU.

In Trust.—Where the plaintiff, a judgment creditor, showed that the judgment debtor kept a bank account under his own name, adding the words "in trust," without further designating the character of the trust or naming the beneficiary, it was held that the claim against the bank was a chose in action in favor of the judgment debtor personally, and, in the absence of further facts, the plaintiff was entitled to appropriate this chose in action. Green v. Griswold, 57 N. Y. Super. Ct. 24, affirmed 127 N. Y. 682.

Same—Fire Insurance.—See the title FIRE INSURANCE, vol. 13, p. 116.

In Trust For.—"There is no peculiar potency in the word 'benefit' which the terms 'in trust for' and 'for the use of' do not possess."

INABILITY. — See note 1.

INACCURATE. — See note 2.

INADEQUATE. — See note 3.

INADEQUATE DAMAGES. — See the title DAMAGES, vol. 8, p. 628.

INADVERTENCE. — See note 4.

Every gift, either to a third person directly, or in trust for him, is for his benefit, whether or not it is so declared in totidem verbis; and the word, so far as the legal effect of the instrument is concerned, is a mere expletive, neither limiting nor enlarging the estate of the beneficiary." O'Neil v. Teague, 8 Ala. 345.

In Twelve Months After Date. — In an action on a promissory note, the declaration described the note as payable "in twelve months after date," while the one offered in evidence was payable "twelve months after date." This was held no variance. Tipton v. Utley, 59 Ill. 25.

In the Usual Course of Business. — As applied to commercial paper, the phrase "in the usual course of business" means "according to the usages and customs of commercial transactions." Kellogg v. Curtis, 69 Me. 212. See also the title BILLS OF EXCHANGE AND PROMISSORY NOTES, vol. 4, p. 282.

In Value. — A bankruptcy act required that a deed or arrangement between a debtor and his creditors, in order to bind nonconsenting creditors, should be assented to in writing by the majority in number representing two-thirds in value of the creditors of such debtor. It was held that in determining whether the requisite majority in value of the creditors had assented to the deed, the value of securities held by secured creditors was not to be deducted. Whittaker v. Lowe, L. R. 1 Exch. 74. See the title INSOLVENCY AND BANKRUPTCY, post.

In the Vicinity. — See VICINITY.

In Virtue of His Office. — See VIRTUE OFFICIAL.

In a Word. — For "in a word" in the sense of "to sum up," see Clopton v. Cozart, 13 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 368.

In Writing. (See also WRITING.) — In Re Lewis, 1 Q. B. D. 726, Lord Coleridge, C. J., said: "An 'agreement in writing' * * * must be an agreement by both parties, and both parties must sign their names upon the agreement." See also In re Malaga Lead Co., 44 L. J. Ch. 617, L. R. 20 Eq. 524; Re New Eberhardt Co., 59 L. J. Ch. 73; Pooley v. Driver, 5 Ch. D. 458.

1. Pecuniary Embarrassment. — The statute 9 & 10 Vict., c. 95, § 24, authorized the judge of a County Court, subject to the approval of the lord chancellor, to remove the clerk of the court "in case of inability or misbehavior." It was held that pecuniary embarrassment or insolvency did not in itself constitute inability within the meaning of the act. Reg. v. Owen, 15 Q. B. 476, 69 E. C. L. 476.

A Charter-party of affreightment provided that in case of the "ship's inability to execute and proceed on the service," certain persons should be at liberty to make such abatement out of the freight as they should think reasonable. It was held that an inability of the ship to proceed to sea for want of men to navigate her was within the proviso, even though such want of men arose from no fault or neglect of the shipowner, but from an act of God. Beatson v. Schank, 3 East 233.

A justice of the peace was authorized to take jurisdiction of an action only in case of the "absence, sickness, or other inability" of a municipal judge. It was held that the fact that such judge declined to act in the cause did not give jurisdiction to the justice. Klaire v. State, 27 Wis. 462.

Judge. (See also the title JUDGE.) — A statute provided that it should be the duty of the mayor of a city to designate one of the justices of the peace of that city to act as city judge in case of sickness, absence from the city, or inability of the city judge to act. It was held that inability did not mean physical inability alone, and that where the city judge was engaged in the removal of his family from his summer resort to his home in the city, the justice of the peace was authorized to act in his place. People v. Schirmer, 55 Hun (N. Y.) 160, affirmed 119 N. Y. 625.

Trustees. (See also the title TRUSTS AND TRUSTEES.) — In In re Lemann, 22 Ch. D. 633, it was held that the words inability and "incapable" as used in a statute prescribing the qualification of trustees were convertible, and applied to personal incapacity from acting, such as age or infirmity, as distinguished from unfitness. See also Re Watts, 9 Hare 106; In re Bignold, L. R. 7 Ch. 223; In re Moravian Soc., 26 Beav. 101. But in Mesnard v. Welford, 1 Smale & G. 426, Stuart, V. C., said: "How can Mr. Welford perform the duties of a trustee of property situate at Somers Town and in Paddington, if he is a resident in New York? I think that a trustee domiciled at New York can hardly be capable of acting as a trustee of the property in question."

Inability and Incompetency. — See Armstrong v. Union School Dist. No. 1, 28 Kan. 349.

2. Inaccurate Description. — This term was held not to apply where one place was correctly described instead of another. Reg. v. Coward, 16 Q. B. 819, 71 E. C. L. 819. See also Rogers v. Lewis, 7 C. B. N. S. 30, 97 E. C. L. 30.

3. Inadequate Price. (See also the titles CONSIDERATION, vol. 6, p. 694; FRAUDULENT SALES AND CONVEYANCES, vol. 14, pp. 292, 516.) —

Inadequate price is defined to be a term applied to indicate a want of sufficient consideration for a thing sold, or such a price as under ordinary circumstances would be insufficient. State v. Purcell, 131 Mo. 312.

4. Inadvertence. — The omission in good faith of a stamp, the parties believing that none was required, was held to be an inadvertence within an Act of Congress providing that it should be lawful for a collector to affix a stamp within twelve months and remit the penalty, where it was shown to him that because of inadvertence the instrument had not been duly stamped. Green Mt. Cent. Institute v. Britain, 44 Vt. 13. See generally the title STAMP ACTS.

Judgments. (See also the title JUDGMENTS.)

INAPPRECIABLE. — See note 1.

INBOARD. — See note 2.

INCAPABLE — INCAPACITY. — See note 3.

INCAPACITATED. — See IMPEDE — IMPEDIMENT, vol. 15, p. 1073.

INCENDIARISM. (See also the title ARSON, vol. 2, p. 917.) — See note 4.

— In Russell v. Colyar, 4 Heisk. (Tenn.) 154, it was held that a statute allowing a court after the term to vacate or correct mistakes in judgments given through inadvertence or oversight did not apply to any judgment which was given upon the deliberate consideration and judgment of the court, though the court might have since adopted a different ruling as correct.

Bankruptcy. (See the title INSOLVENCY AND BANKRUPTCY, post.) — In In re Piers, (1898) 1 Q. B. 627, it was held that where a creditor omitted to value his security, by reason of erroneous information leading him to suppose it to be worthless, there was no omission to value the security which arose from inadvertence within the meaning of the English Bankruptcy Act. See also Ex p. Clarke, 40 W. R. 608; In re Lister, (1892) 2 Ch. 417. In In re Piers, (1898) 1 Q. B. 631, Smith, L. J., said that inadvertence and mistake were not convertible terms, and that the former word meant the opposite of deliberate election, and did not include a deliberate election, though based upon false grounds.

1. Inappreciable. — In Embrey v. Owen, 6 Exch. 366, Talford, J., ad nisi prius, had defined an inappreciable abstraction of water to mean so inconsiderable an amount as to be incapable of value or price. Parke, B., in delivering the opinion of the court on appeal, said: "We are not prepared to say that the learned judge ad nisi prius was correct in his interpretation of the word inappreciable when connected with the word 'quantity,' nor sure that he was not; for the word inappreciable, or 'unappreciable,' is one of a new coinage, not to be found in Johnson's Dictionary or Richardson's. The word 'appreciate' first appears in our dictionaries in the last edition of Johnson, by Todd, 1827, with the explanation 'to estimate,' 'to value;' and assuming that to be the true meaning, which we suppose it is, the compound adjective signifies that the quantities were not capable of being estimated or valued, and in that sense the fourth plea was not proved." See also Sampson v. Hodinott, 1 C. B. N. S. 604, 87 E. C. L. 604.

2. Inboard. — A marine policy insured certain goods "inboard cargo of boat W. S. Alden." The court said: "Inboard is used in contrast to 'outboard.' It does not necessarily mean under deck, but seems to mean a cargo not projecting over the rail of the vessel. No evidence explanatory of its meaning was given or offered at the trial. Under all the circumstances it is therefore but fair to hold, and especially as the policy was general and permitted any mode of lading usual in canal navigation, and expressly provided that the rules applicable to ordinary marine policies should not apply, that if the defendant intended by the certificate to limit the insurance to the cargo under deck, it should have said so in clear terms." Allen v. St. Louis Ins. Co., 46 N. Y. Super. Ct. 175. See generally the title MARINE INSURANCE.

3. Incapable of Acting — Public Officer. (See also the title PUBLIC OFFICERS.) — A statute provided that if the mayor of any borough should at any time be incapable of acting, the council of such borough should forthwith elect one of the aldermen to act in place of the mayor. In a borough not divided into wards the mayor, being returning officer, offered himself for re-election as town councillor, and the council elected one of the aldermen to act at the election in the place of the mayor; the mayor was re-elected a town councillor. It was held that the mayor was not disqualified as a candidate, but he could not act as returning officer; that he was incapable of acting within the meaning of the section; and consequently that the appointment of the alderman as substitute and the election were valid. Reg. v. White, L. R. 2 Q. B. 557. See also Reg. v. Owens, 2 El. & El. 86, 105 E. C. L. 86; Fanagan v. Kerman, 8 L. R. Ir. 44.

It has been held that a trustee who went to reside abroad came within a description of a trustee incapable to act. Mesnard v. Welford, 1 Smale & G. 426, 1 Eq. Rep. 237. But this doctrine has been doubted. See also Lewin on Trusts (8th ed.) 659; In re Rignold, L. R. 7 Ch. 223; INABILITY, ante, p. 131; and see the title TRUSTS AND TRUSTEES.

In Matter of Munger, 10 N. Y. App. Div. 347, it was held that a county judge who was absent at the time set for the hearing of a cause was not incapable to act within the meaning of a statute authorizing the removal of a cause where the judge was incapable to act. The court said: "The term incapable or incapacity is seldom used in legislation as inclusive of the idea conveyed by the word 'absent' or 'absence.'"

Incapable of Being Estimated. — The words "debt or liability incapable of being fairly estimated," in an English bankruptcy act, have been held not to apply to a bankrupt's liability to contribute for future calls to a limited company which had gone into liquidation pending his bankruptcy. In re Mercantile Mut. Marine Ins. Assoc., 25 Ch. D. 415. In Ex p. Blakemore, 5 Ch. D. 372, it was held that an annuity terminable on a second marriage was not such a debt or liability.

Incapacity. — A testatrix gave certain property to one J. for the purpose of providing him with a collegiate education, and provided that if through his own disinclination or incapacity he should fail to carry out these intentions the gift should lapse. It was held that J. took the estate subject to be divested by condition subsequent, and that his death while pursuing his studies did not forfeit the estate. Ellicott v. Ellicott, (Md. 1900) 45 Atl. Rep. 183.

Incompetent and Incapable. — See INCOMPETENT, post.

4. Incendiarism. — A policy of insurance provided that it did not cover any loss occasioned by or in consequence of incendiarism. It was held that this included a loss occasioned by an act of incendiarism in an adjoining house. Walker v. London, etc., Ins. Co., 22 L. R. Ir. 572.

1. Inception. — In Marvin v. McCullum, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 289, it was held that a promissory note had no legal inception until delivered to some person as evidence of a subsisting debt. This case was upon the question whether a note was usurious in its inception. See also the title USURY.

Inception of Lien. — A statute provided that any mortgage on land at the time of the inception of a mechanic's lien should not be affected thereby. In construing this statute the court said: "The word inception means 'initial stage.' Century Dictionary. It does not refer to a state of actual existence, but to a condition of things or circumstances from which the thing may develop. When the building has been projected, and construction of it entered upon — that is, contracted for — the circumstances exist out of which all future contracts for labor and material necessary to its completion may arise, and for all such labor and material a common lien is given by the statute; and in this state of circumstances the lien to secure each has its inception." Oriental Hotel Co. v. Griffiths, 88 Tex. 583.

I. DEFINITION AND NATURE. — Under the statutes of various states incest may be defined as the intermarriage¹ or carnal copulation without marriage² of a man and woman related to each other in any of the degrees within which marriage is prohibited by law.

Not a Crime at Common Law. — Incest is not a crime at common law.¹

A Statutory Crime. — But in most of the states incest is made an indictable offense by statute.²

II. ESSENTIAL ELEMENTS — 1. Concurrent Assent of Parties. — In some states the concurrent assent of the parties is required to establish the crime of incest, and where an illicit connection is accomplished by force, the defendant cannot be convicted of incest.³ But under this rule it has been held that one party who is guilty may be indicted and tried and convicted alone for the offense, and it is unnecessary that both parties shall be guilty of the offense before one of them may be convicted, as for instance where one party is aware and the other ignorant of the relation which exists between them.⁴

In other jurisdictions it has been held that the intercourse and relationship being established, it is immaterial as regards the defendant's guilt whether the act of intercourse was or was not with the consent of the other party, and that the crime may be committed though force was used by one of the parties sufficient to constitute rape.⁵

Consent of Female Inoperative as Defense. — On the other hand it has been held that the fact that the female consented to the intercourse is no defense to a prosecution for incest.⁶

2. The Act — a. SINGLE ACT SUFFICIENT. — Under statute in some jurisdictions it has been held that a single act of unlawful sexual intercourse may be

1. Incest Not a Crime at Common Law. — People v. Burwell, 106 Mich. 27; State v. Slaughter, 70 Mo. 488; State v. Keesler, 78 N. Car. 469; Tuberville v. State, 4 Tex. 128.

An Offense Punishable by Canon Law. — But incest was recognized as a crime and punished by the ecclesiastical courts. Chick v. Ramsdale, 1 Curt. Ecc. 34; Woods v. Woods, 2 Curt. Ecc. 516; Griffiths v. Reed, 1 Hag. Ecc. 195; Burgess v. Burgess, 1 Hag. Cons. 384; Blackmore v. Brider, 2 Phill. Ecc. 359.

2. A Crime by Statute in Most Jurisdictions. — Cook v. State, 11 Ga. 54, 56 Am. Dec. 410; State v. Slaughter, 70 Mo. 484; Rea v. Harrington, 58 Vi. 181, 56 Am. Rep. 561.

In Louisiana it has been held that though the crime of incest is denounced, it is not defined by any statute in that state, and hence there can be no conviction for incest under the laws of that state. State v. Smith, 30 La. Ann. 846.

But by Rev. Laws of Louisiana (1897), page 189, a definition of the crime of incest has been given corresponding to the definition of the text.

3. Jurisdictions Holding Assent of Both Parties Essential. — People v. Jenness, 5 Mich. 321; De Groat v. People, 39 Mich. 124; People v. Burwell, 106 Mich. 27, citing 10 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW (1st ed.) 339; People v. Skutt, 96 Mich. 449; State v. Ellis, 74 Mo. 385, 41 Am. Rep. 321; State v. Eding, 141 Mo. 283; People v. Harriden, (Supm. Ct.) 1 Park. Crim. (N. Y.) 344; State v. Jarvis, 20 Oregon 437, 23 Am. St. Rep. 141. See also Noble v. State, 22 Ohio St. 545; Com. v. Goodhue, 2 Met. (Mass.) 193. Compare People v. Rouse, 2 Mich. N. P. 209.

A Question for the Jury. — It is proper to leave it to the jury to determine whether the intercourse took place under such circumstances as to constitute rape or incest. People v. Skutt, 96 Mich. 449.

4. Guilt of Both Parties Unnecessary. — People

v. Patterson, 102 Cal. 239; State v. Kimble, 104 Iowa 19; State v. Ellis, 74 Mo. 385, 41 Am. Rep. 321; State v. Jarvis, 20 Oregon 437, 23 Am. St. Rep. 141. See also Yeoman v. State, 21 Neb. 171.

Under Statute in Indiana it has been held that one party to the incest cannot be legally guilty unless the other is also guilty, since knowledge of the relationship by both parties is required. Baumer v. State, 49 Ind. 545, 19 Am. Rep. 691.

5. Jurisdictions Holding Consent of Both Parties Unnecessary to Constitute Incest — Alabama. — Smith v. State, 108 Ala. 1, 54 Am. St. Rep. 140.

California. — People v. Kaiser, 119 Cal. 456. See also People v. Patterson, 102 Cal. 244, citing 10 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW (1st ed.) 341.

Georgia. — Powers v. State, 44 Ga. 209.

Indiana. — Norton v. State, 106 Ind. 163.

Iowa. — State v. Thomas, 53 Iowa 214; State v. Chambers, 87 Iowa 1, 43 Am. St. Rep. 349; State v. Hurd, 101 Iowa 391; State v. Kouhns, 103 Iowa 720.

Texas. — Mercer v. State, 17 Tex. App. 464.

Washington. — State v. Nugent, 20 Wash. 522, citing 10 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW, 214. Compare State v. McGilvery, 20 Wash. 240.

Female Under Age of Consent. — Though the female is under the age of consent the crime of incest may exist. People v. Kaiser, 119 Cal. 456; People v. Barnes, 2 Idaho 148; State v. Chambers, 87 Iowa 1, 43 Am. St. Rep. 349. Compare De Groat v. People, 39 Mich. 124.

In Raiford v. State, 68 Ga. 672, it was held that in the crime of incest there may be a certain force or power exerted, resulting from the age, relationship, or circumstances of the parties which overcomes the objections of the female, without amounting to that violence which would constitute rape.

6. Consent of Female Inoperative as Defense. — Schoenfeldt v. State, 30 Tex. App. 695.

But Carnal Knowledge and Penetration are necessary to be proved to convict the defendant, and an unsuccessful attempt to accomplish this end does not constitute the offense in a case where the gist of the action is carnal copulation and not incestuous intermarriage.²

Emissio Seminis Essential. — And it has been held that emissio seminis is an essential ingredient in the crime of incest.³

6. MARRIAGE. — Under statute in many of the states, sexual commerce by persons within the prohibited degrees of consanguinity is incest, though they have gone through the form of intermarriage.⁴

Cohabitation as Man and Wife Sufficient. — Under a statute defining incest to be the intermarrying or carnal knowledge of persons within the forbidden degrees, it has been held that the crime of incest does not require proof of marriage to sustain it, but where the state proves either cohabitation (that is, living together as husband and wife) or carnal knowledge, it will be sufficient without proof of marriage; so that when incest is charged in an indictment alleging intermarriage between parties within the prohibited degrees, it may be proved by cohabitation, and the defendant cannot answer such charge by attacking the validity of the marriage.⁵

Intermarriage Without Carnal Knowledge. — Under statute in Iowa prohibiting the intermarriage of persons within certain degrees of consanguinity and affinity, and providing a punishment for its violation, it has been held that to sustain a conviction for incest, it is not necessary for the state to show in addition to intermarriage carnal knowledge between the parties.⁶

3. The Relationship — a. IN GENERAL. — Various statutory provisions exist in the different states prescribing the relationship existing between the parties necessary to constitute the crime of incest, a very common provision being that in order to constitute the crime the parties must be related to each other in some degree within which marriage is prohibited.⁷ Accordingly the crime may occur between parent and child,⁸ brother and

1. Single Act of Intercourse Sufficient. — Mathis v. Com., (Ky. 1890) 13 S. W. Rep. 360; State v. Brown, 47 Ohio St. 102, 21 Am. St. Rep. 790. See also Barnhouse v. State, 31 Ohio St. 39.

2. Penetration Necessary. — Com. v. Lynes, 142 Mass. 581, 56 Am. Rep. 709.

3. Emissio Seminis Necessary. — Noble v. State, 22 Ohio St. 542.

4. Incestuous Marriage. — State v. Brown, 47 Ohio St. 102, 21 Am. St. Rep. 790; Territory v. Corbett, 3 Mont. 50; Simon v. State, 31 Tex. Crim. 186, 37 Am. St. Rep. 802.

Where Marriage is Valid in State Where Contracted. — In State v. Brown, 47 Ohio St. 102, 21 Am. St. Rep. 790, the court said: "We hold, therefore, that by section 7019, Rev. Stat., sexual commerce, as between persons nearer of kin than cousins, is prohibited, whether they have gone through the form of intermarriage or not; nor is it material that the marriage was celebrated in a country where it was valid, for we are not bound upon principles of comity to permit persons to violate our criminal laws, adopted in the interest of decency and good morals, and based on principles of sound public policy, because they have assumed, in another state or country where it was lawful, the relation which led to the acts prohibited by our laws."

5. Cohabitation as Man and Wife Sufficient to Establish Offense. — Simon v. State, 31 Tex. Crim. 202, 37 Am. St. Rep. 802.

6. Intermarriage Without Carnal Knowledge Sufficient. — State v. Schaunhurst, 34 Iowa 547.

7. See the statutes of the various states.

Marriage of Sister of Former Wife. — It seems that the marrying of a sister of a former wife was at one time incest under statute in Virginia. Atty.-Gen. v. Broadbuss, 6 Munf. (Va.) 116.

Marrying Brother's Widow. — Under statute in Virginia providing that "if the brother hath married or shall marry his brother's wife" the marriage shall be dissolved, the parties fined, etc., it has been held that the marrying of a brother's widow is an offense within the statute. Com. v. Perryman, 2 Leigh (Va.) 718.

But by Code of Virginia (1887), § 2224, it is provided that "if any man have heretofore married his brother's widow * * * such marriage is hereby declared to be legal and valid, and exempt from the penalties prescribed by existing laws."

8. Incest Between Father and Daughter — Alabama. — Baker v. State, 30 Ala. 521.

Arkansas. — State v. Ratcliffe, 61 Ark. 62; Martin v. State, 58 Ark. 3.

sister,¹ uncle and niece,² aunt and nephew,³ and, under the Arkansas statute, first cousins.⁴

Blood Relationship Not Essential. — In the case of parent and child the relationship need not be of blood, for it is equally criminal for a man to have intercourse with his stepdaughter,⁵ and the same is true of a stepmother and stepson.⁶ But it has been held that such intercourse is not incest after the death of the stepchild's parent by blood,⁷ nor before unless it be shown that one of the parties was lawfully the husband or wife of the parent of the other.⁸ And it has been held that a brother-in-law and sister-in-law are within the prohibition of a statute forbidding marriage between persons nearer of kin by consanguinity or affinity than cousins.⁹

Relationship by the Half-blood. — Under the statutes defining incest it has also been held that the relationship of brother and sister includes brother and sister of the half-blood,¹⁰ and the same rule has been applied to uncles and nieces of the half-blood.¹¹

Illegitimacy of One of the Parties. — And it has been held that the fact that one of the parties to the crime was born out of wedlock is immaterial if he sustains towards the other a relationship within some prohibited degree of consanguinity, and therefore carnal intercourse by a father with an illegitimate daughter, for instance, is incest and creates guilt of the same degree as if the latter party had been born in lawful wedlock.¹²

7. Effect of Death of Parent by Blood in Case of Intercourse between Step-parent and Step-child. — Thus it has been held that there cannot be incest between a man and his wife's daughter after his wife's death. Johnson v. State, 20 Tex. App. 609, 54 Am. Rep. 535.

8. Necessity of Lawful Marriage Between Step-parent and Parent by Blood. — Thus it has been held that in a prosecution for incest, based on the carnal intercourse of stepfather and stepdaughter, there must be presented affirmative evidence of the legal marriage of the former with the mother of the latter. McGrew v. State, 13 Tex. App. 340.

But in a prosecution for incest with a stepdaughter an instruction that, if the evidence showed that the female's mother had been married three times, and that the defendant was the last husband, the state must show by evidence to the satisfaction of the jury beyond a reasonable doubt that the first and second marriages were legally dissolved, or defendant is entitled to a verdict of "not guilty," is error where it is shown that the prior husbands were both dead at the time of the marriage. *Schoenfeldt v. b. KNOWLEDGE OF RELATIONSHIP. — Where the statutes are silent as to any scienter, as where they do not use the words "knowingly," "wilfully," or the like in describing the offense, it will not be necessary to allege and prove affirmatively that the defendant knew the relationship existing between him and the particeps.¹ While this is true, still it would seem, upon reason, that the defendant's ignorance of such fact would constitute a valid defense.² Of course where knowledge of the relationship is expressly made an essential part of the crime, then it must be alleged and proved, in order to convict.³

III. EVIDENCE — 1. Admissibility — a. TO PROVE THE ACT — (1) In General. — The principles governing the admissibility of evidence in criminal cases generally operate as to evidence in proof of the criminal act in prosecutions for incest.⁴

(2) Confessions. — The confessions of the defendant, if voluntary, are admissible to show the commission of the act.⁵

1. Affirmative Proof of Knowledge Unnecessary Where Statute Is Silent as to Knowledge. — State v. Bullinger, 54 Mo. 143; Simon v. State, 31 Tex. Crim. 186, 37 Am. St. Rep. 802; State v. Wyman, 59 Vt. 528, 59 Am. Rep. 753; State v. Dana, 59 Vt. 623.

Constitutionality of Statute Omitting Words as to Scienter. — In re Nelson, 69 Fed. Rep. 712, it was held that a statute of Washington relating to incest was not invalid because of the omission of the word "knowingly" or other equivalent word or phrase making knowledge of the relationship an element of the crime.

Necessity of Knowledge on Part of Both Parties. — Under statute in Indiana it has been held that to constitute incest both parties must have knowledge of the relationship. Baumer v. State, 49 Ind. 544, 19 Am. Rep. 691. But knowledge by the defendant alone has been held to be sufficient in other jurisdictions. State v. Ellis, 74 Mo. 385, 41 Am. Rep. 321; State v. Jarvis, 20 Oregon 437, 23 Am. St. Rep. 141; State v. McGilvery, 20 Wash. 240.

2. Ignorance of Relationship a Defense. — See State v. Ellis, 74 Mo. 385, 41 Am. Rep. 321. Compare State v. Dana, 59 Vt. 623.

3. Affirmative Proof of Knowledge Necessary under Statute Making Knowledge an Element of the Crime. — Baumer v. State, 49 Ind. 544, 19 Am. Rep. 691; Williams v. State, 2 Ind. 439.

4. Evidence Held to Be Relevant. — In an action for incest against a father, evidence of his cruel treatment of the daughter for the purpose of subduing her and forcing her to submit to his embraces is admissible. Clements v. State, 34 Tex. Crim. 616.

Evidence that the defendant denied the prosecutrix the privilege of attending church and Sunday school, and of social intercourse with the young people in the neighborhood, is admissible when, according to the testimony of the prosecutrix, the defendant based such denial on his desire for sexual intercourse with her. Com. v. Bell, 166 Pa. St. 405.

But it has been held that where upon a trial under an indictment for incest, committed by a father and his daughter, evidence that the defendant had six years previously quarreled with his sons and caused them to leave his house for causes having no relation to the commission of the crime, is irrelevant. State v. Moore, 81 Iowa 578.

In State v. Pruett, 144 Mo. 92, it was held that where a witness testified that he saw the defendant and his half-sister on a bed in their father's house, and in such a position as indicated that they were indulging in sexual intercourse, and was afterwards allowed to testify over the objections of the defendant that about a month thereafter the half-sister appeared to be "in the family way," this latter evidence was inadmissible, since to admit such testimony would be to ignore the various opportunities which might present themselves to others than the defendant to accomplish such a result.

Hearsay Evidence. — In State v. Pruett, 144 Mo. 92, it was held that evidence that on one occasion when the defendant and his sister were away until dark, their absence "made the old man [their father] mad, because she wasn't there to get supper, and he rared around," and on their coming home "told them this way of laying out until dark had to be stopped," was inadmissible as being hearsay.

Testimony of Medical Experts. — In Com. v. Lynes, 142 Mass. 577, 56 Am. Rep. 709, it was held competent for medical experts to testify as to the abnormal condition of the private parts of the child with whom the offense was alleged to have been committed, when examined about six weeks after the offense was committed, and as to the causes which would produce such abnormal condition.

On the other hand, it has been held inadmissible to show that four or five years before the trial in the court below the female was examined by a physician and found to be suffering from some irritation of the vagina caused by some recent violence, since it was irrelevant from the peculiar nature of the offense. State v. Jarvis, 20 Oregon 437, 23 Am. St. Rep. 141. The court in this case said: "It is possible the evidence might have been competent had the charge against the defendant been rape and not incest."

Testimony of Physician as to Likeness of Offspring of Incestuous Intercourse to Defendant. — The testimony of a physician that he attended the prosecutrix at the birth of her child, and saw it several times during its life of about six weeks, and that in his opinion the child favored the defendant, is inadmissible. Kilpatrick v. State, 39 Tex. Crim. 10.

5. Admissibility of Confessions to Prove Act of Incest. — Bergen v. People, 17 Ill. 426, 65 Am. Dec. 672; Yeoman v. State, 21 Neb. 171.

Where a confession was made by the pris-

(3) Other Acts of Familiarity or Illicit Intercourse — (a) Prior Acts Between the Parties. — Previous Acts of Lascivious Familiarity between the parties not amounting to actual intercourse are competent evidence in prosecutions for incest, since the evidence is of such character as tends to make it probable that the parties did commit the specific offense charged; they constitute the foundation of an antecedent probability.¹

Previous Acts of Actual Intercourse. — And it has been asserted that while it is a general rule in criminal cases that evidence of the commission of other though similar offenses, by the defendant, is not admissible for the purpose of showing that he was more likely to have committed the offense for which he was on trial, nor as corroborating the testimony relating to the commission of such principal offense, the courts have shown a disposition to relax the rule in cases where the offense consists of illicit intercourse between the sexes.² Accordingly evidence of previous acts of actual intercourse between the parties is admissible, if offered to show an antecedent disposition to perpetrate the crime and not to prove distinct and substantive offenses, such evidence being of much stronger probative force than mere acts of indecent familiarity.³

Acts Barred by Statute of Limitations. — If an act is so remote in point of time from the act laid in the indictment that the statute of limitations would protect the participants in it in case of their prosecution therefor, evidence thereof is still admissible if it is one of a series of acts indicating continuousness of sexual intercourse.⁴

(b) Subsequent Acts Between the Parties. — Evidence of acts of illicit intercourse between the parties subsequent to the act specifically under trial is admissible when indicating continuousness of illicit relations.⁵

But in Indiana it has been held that where an indictment contained a single charge of incest, which was proved as laid, the state could not prove sexual intercourse between the parties at a subsequent time, on the principle that it is not competent for the prosecution to prove another distinct offense for the purpose of raising an inference that the accused had committed the offense in question.⁶

(c) Sexual Acts with Third Parties — Of Prosecutrix. — Where the relationship of the defendant and the prosecutrix is proved and the intercourse between them is established, proof that she had had sexual relations with other men is no excuse or mitigation of the defendant's offense, and hence it is not error to exclude such evidence.⁷

oner under duress and it was subsequently repeated to another person when the prisoner was not threatened or menaced, it is admissible. Mathis v. Com., (Ky. 1890) 13 S. W. Rep. 360.

Prerequisite Establishment of Corpus Delicti. — Where in a prosecution for incest it was proven that the person with whom the incestuous intercourse was alleged to have been had was of the age of sixteen years; that she resided with her parents; that the accused also resided with the family; that they were often together alone; that she kept company with no other person; that the relation of uncle and niece existed between them; that, when her pregnancy was discovered, the accused confessed the paternity of the child which was afterwards born, admitted the intercourse, and settled the claims of the mother in satisfaction of proceedings in bastardy, and tried to induce a physician to produce an abortion — the corpus delicti was sufficiently proven to require the submission of the case to the jury. Yeoman v. State, 21 Neb. 171.

Evidence of Pregnancy by Third Person. — In Kidwell v. State, 63 Ind. 384, it was held that

Of Defendant. — Nor is evidence of improper relations between the defendant and another subsequent to the offense charged admissible either to show that he had committed the offense charged or that he had a tendency to commit such crimes.¹

b. TO SHOW RELATIONSHIP — (1) In General. — It has been held that in a prosecution for incest it is error to instruct the jury as a conclusion of law that relationship is a matter that can scarcely be testified to directly in any case.²

(2) Reputation. — It would seem to be the better view that on an indictment for incest the relationship of the parties may be shown by reputation.³ But in a recent case it was held that on a trial for incest, pedigree cannot be shown by reputation in the neighborhood.⁴

(3) Admissions of the Defendant. — The admissions of the defendant have been held to be competent evidence upon the question of his consanguinity with the particeps.⁵

c. TO SHOW CHARACTER — Character of Prosecutrix. — The reputation of the prosecutrix for virtue and chastity has been held not to be material to the charge of incest and is inadmissible in evidence in favor of the defendant.⁶

Character of Defendant. — But it has been held to be error to refuse evidence of the general reputation of the defendant for gentlemanly deportment and good moral character, and to confine the proof to his reputation for virtue and chastity.⁷

Former Conduct of Defendant as Showing Character. — But it has been held to be incompetent on a trial for incest to introduce in evidence the former conduct of the defendant for the purpose of showing his bad character.⁸

2. Sufficiency — a. IN GENERAL. — The question whether the evidence is sufficient to support a conviction for incest is, as a general rule, to be deter-the fact as to whether or not the prosecuting witness had become pregnant by means of sexual intercourse had by her with others than the defendant, and her declarations in relation thereto, are immaterial and irrelevant on the trial of a defendant indicted for incest.

Where the fact of pregnancy is in issue it has been held improper to introduce evidence of acts of familiarity or sexual intercourse between the prosecutrix and a third person where it is not shown that those acts occurred at a time when the pregnancy could have been caused thereby. State v. Hurd, 101 Iowa 391; Kilpatrick v. State, 39 Tex. Crim. 10.

1. Sexual Acts of Defendant with Other Persons Inadmissible. — Porath v. State, 90 Wis. 527.

2. Admissibility of Evidence of Relationship. — Elder v. State, (Ala. 1899) 26 So. Rep. 213.

Declaration of Parent to Show Illegitimacy of Son. — On a trial for incest, where the defendant was being prosecuted for marriage with the daughter of his half sister by the same father, it was held that evidence of the declarations of his deceased mother and his deceased father, that there was no blood relationship between him and his supposed half sister, and the further declaration of his deceased mother that "if defendant got into trouble by his marriage, she would protect him," was inadmissible, there being no evidence of non-access between the supposed parents, or that they were not living together, or of impotency on the part of the putative father, when the defendant was conceived in the mother's womb. Simon v. State, 31 Tex. Crim. 186, 37 Am. St. Rep. 802.

Declarations of Parents as to Illegitimacy to Show Son's Good Faith in Contracting Marriage.

— Declarations of the defendant's deceased mother that he was illegitimate, though born in wedlock, made to him about the time of the marriage, are not admissible to show good faith on his part in entering into the marriage, such declarations not being shown to have been made sufficiently ante litem motam. Simon v. State, 31 Tex. Crim. 186, 37 Am. St. Rep. 802.

3. View that Relationship May Be Shown by Reputation. — State v. Bullinger, 54 Mo. 144; Ewell v. State, 6 Yeig. (Tenn.) 364, 27 Am. Dec. 480.

4. View that Relationship May Not Be Shown by Reputation. — Elder v. State, (Ala. 1899) 26 So. Rep. 213.

5. Admissions of Defendant as Evidence of Relationship. — People v. Jenness, 5 Mich. 305; People v. Harriden, (Supm. Ct.) 1 Park. Crim. (N. Y.) 344.

The Admissions of a Father that the person with whom he had sexual intercourse was his daughter are competent evidence. Morgan v. State, 11 Ala. 280; Bergen v. People, 17 Ill. 426, 65 Am. Dec. 672; People v. Harriden, (Supm. Ct.) 1 Park. Crim. (N. Y.) 344.

6. Reputation of Prosecutrix for Chastity Inadmissible. — Kidwell v. State, 63 Ind. 381.

7. Reputation of Defendant for Moral Character Admissible. — Poyner v. State, (Tex. Crim. 1898) 48 S. W. Rep. 516.

mined solely by the jury, but, as in other criminal cases, this rule has its exceptions made with reference to certain kinds of evidence.¹

b. CONFESSIONS OF ACCUSED. — Thus the courts uniformly refuse to sustain convictions for incest which are entirely unsupported except by uncorroborated confessions made by the defendant.²

c. TESTIMONY OF PROSECUTRIX. — Where the prosecutrix is forced against her will, either through violence or fear, to submit to sexual intercourse, she is not regarded as an accomplice to the crime of incest in those jurisdictions in which the view obtains that this offense may exist in the absence of the concurrent assent of the parties; and as a consequence, to warrant a conviction against the other party, her testimony does not as a matter of law require corroboration where by statute corroboration of the testimony of an accomplice is necessary for conviction.³ But if the intercourse is accomplished with the consent of the female, she is regarded as an accomplice and her testimony comes within the statutory rule requiring corroboration.⁴ And at common law it seems that the defendant may be convicted of incest on the uncorroborated testimony of the prosecutrix, though she is an accomplice, but in such case the jury should be instructed that the evidence should be received with great caution.⁵

IV. PUNISHMENT. — Various statutes exist in the different states providing for the punishment of the crime of incest, it being punished as a felony in many of the states.⁶

V. ATTEMPT TO COMMIT INCEST. — An attempt to commit incest has been said to contain two elements — an evil intention, and a simultaneous resulting act which if fully performed would constitute the substantive crime.⁷

Mere Solicitation Insufficient. — It has been held that a bare unsuccessful solicitation does not constitute an attempt to commit incest, and that an attempt to commit incest must be a physical act, as contradistinguished from a verbal declaration, that is, it must be a step taken towards the actual commission of the offense, and not a mere effort by persuasion to produce the condition of mind essential to the commission of the offense.⁸

It has been held that where the prosecutrix testifies to the fact of intercourse, she is sufficiently corroborated if the defendant testifies, "I don't think I did such a thing; I might have done so in my sleep." Bales v. State, (Tex. Crim. 1898) 44 S. W. Rep. 517.

both by solicitation and by overt acts a father attempted to have connection with his daughter, that the attempt proceeded to the extent of contact of the sexual organs, lacking only penetration to consummate the act, it was held sufficient to constitute an attempt to commit incest.¹

Effect of Subsequent Abandonment. — It has been held that where the elements of an attempt have once existed, the subsequent abandonment of his intention cannot avail the defendant as a defense.²

Incestuous Marriage. — But it has been held that the attempt to commit an incestuous marriage contemplated by the statute of California must be manifested by acts which would end in the consummation of the particular offense, but for the intervention of circumstances independent of the will of the party.³

Necessity of Consent of Parties. — The crime of attempting to commit incest may occur without the consent of the woman with whom the attempt is made.⁴

In this case it was held that the declaration of the determination of an uncle to marry his niece, his elopement with her for that avowed purpose and his request to one of the witnesses to go to a magistrate to perform the ceremony, will not be sufficient to constitute an attempt. The court in this case said: "So in the present case the declarations and elopement and request for a magistrate were preparatory to the marriage, but until the officer was engaged and the parties stood before him, ready to take the vows appropriate to the contract of marriage, it cannot be said in strictness that the attempt was made."

Bates*, 6 Cal. 271, it was said: "There was at the date of the treaty, as it was supposed, from all the analogies existing between the mode of granting lands in California and in Florida and Louisiana, at least two kinds of titles, one perfect and the other incomplete. The owner of the perfect title was fully protected, both by the laws of Mexico and the laws and usages of nations; and his title was not, neither could be, divested by the treaty or any subsequent Act of Congress. Inchoate titles were such as rested upon the first incipient steps for confirmation, where the fee of the land had never parted from the government, and depended for their completion upon some political act of the authority granting. In these cases the authority of the Mexican government to ratify and confirm was passed to the government of the United States, subject to the equities of the claimants, which she may disregard, but is bound in good faith to maintain."

7. Thomas v. Harmon, 46 Hun (N. Y.) 77. And in that case the court further said: "It is difficult to see how lands not covered by the mortgage are incident to those which are. No importance can be attached to the fact that the mortgage only covers an undivided part or portion of a lot or farm. The balance is no more incidental than a separate lot or farm."

In Neal v. East Tennessee College, 6 Yerg. (Tenn.) 206, it was said: "A land warrant is not an incident to the land; it is not technical to call it so; an incident is that which follows the more worthy or principal."

Incidents of Sovereignty. — The incidents of sovereignty are those powers of which a state cannot divest itself without materially impairing its efficient action. Boggs v. Merced Min. Co., 14 Cal. 309.

Labor Incident to a Manufacturing Process. — The statute 7 & 8 Vict., c. 15, § 73, provides that "any person who shall work in any factory, * * * either in any manufacturing process or in any labor incident to any manufacturing process, * * * shall be deemed * * * to be employed therein within the meaning of this act." A. a manufacturer of cotton sewing thread, was the owner of a factory at M. and another at L. At the factory at M. cotton yarns were doubled into sewing thread, in hanks ready for the wholesale market. For the retail dealers and small consumers these hanks were sent to the factory at L., where the thread was wound on bobbins. It was held that the winding at L. was labor "incident to" a "manufacturing process," within the meaning of the act, because "it brings cotton thread into a state in which it is more salable." Haydon v. Taylor, 4 B. & S. 519, 116 E. C. L. 519. See generally the title LABOR REGULATIONS.

Incidental Labor — Mechanics' Lien. — A Colorado statute allowed a mechanics' lien for incidental labor. It was held that the incidental labor must be directly done for and connected with, or actually incorporated into, the building or improvement. The court said: "It will not do to extend the protection given to services indirectly and remotely associated with the construction work. The cook who prepares food for the employees, the blacksmith who shoes the horses or repairs the implements in use, and all similar contributors to the enterprise are not among the favored workmen." Rara Avis Gold, etc., Min. Co. v. Bouscher, 9 Colo. 388, citing McCormick v. Los Angeles City Water Co., 40 Cal. 185. See also the title MECHANICS' LIENS.

Incidental Services. — A railway act gave to the directors power to charge a sum for the conveyance of coal along the line, "including the tolls for the use of the railways and wagons, or trucks and locomotive power, and every expense incidental to such conveyance," which sum was to be a maximum sum, except in certain cases, the exception being thus expressed: "Except a reasonable sum for loading, covering, and unloading of goods, and delivery and collection, and any other services incidental to the business of a carrier, where such services, or any of them, are or is to be performed by the company." The services in respect of which the excepted charges were claimed to be made were those of taking the wagons of a colliery owner from his own sidings and attaching them to the trains, or returning them from the line of the railway to the sidings of the colliery owner; and it was found in the special case that whatever particular difficulty arose in this work was occasioned by the position of the points effecting the junction of the line with the sidings. It was held that these were not services which came within the meaning of the exception. Lancashire, etc., R. Co. v. Gidlow, L. R. 7 H. L. 517.

So within a similar act, it was held that station accommodation, the use of sidings, weighing, checking, clerkage, watching, and labelling, provided and performed by the company in respect to goods carried by them, might be and prima facie were services incidental to the carrier. Hall v. London, etc., R. Co., 15 Q. B. D. 507, 17 Q. B. D. 230.

Costs Incidental to Sale of Land by Tenant for Life under Statutory Power. — By the English Settled Land Act of 1882, which authorizes the sale of settled land by a tenant for life, it is enacted that the "capital money arising under the act, subject to payment of claims properly payable thereout, and to application thereof for any special authorized object for which the same was raised, shall when received" be applied to the payment, inter alia,

"of costs, charges, and expenses of or incidental to the exercise of any of the powers" conferred by the act. In a case arising under this provision the court said: "It must be observed that what is allowed is the payment of costs, charges, and expenses, not merely 'of' but also incidental to the exercise of any of the powers of the act, and I have to determine what force is to be given to the words 'incidental to.' It seems to me that if any meaning is to be attached to them, it is that the tenant for life is to have not merely his costs, charges, and expenses which directly and necessarily arise out of the exercise of the powers and provisions of the act, but also those which without being a direct or necessary consequence of that exercise, are incurred casually or incidentally in the course of that exercise." In re Llewellyn, 37 Ch. D. 317, 58 L. T. N. S. 152. See also Cardigan v. Curzon-Howe, 58 L. J. Ch. 177, 40 Ch. D. 338; In re Beck, 24 Ch. D. 608; In re Sebrig, 33 Ch. D. 429; In re Stanford, 43 Ch. D. 84.

Matter or Thing Besides What Is Incident to Sale and Conveyance. — The statute 55 Geo. III., c. 184, enacted that "where any deed or instrument operating as a conveyance on the sale of any property shall also contain any other matter or thing besides what shall be incident to the sale and conveyance of the property sold, or relate to the title thereto, every such deed or instrument shall be charged, in addition to the duty to which it shall be liable as a conveyance on the sale of property, and to any progressive duty to which it may also be liable, with such further stamp duty as any separate deed, containing the other matter, would have been chargeable with, exclusive of the progressive duty." It was held that a deed purporting to surrender a lease for lives, in consideration of one hundred and twenty pounds, and of a new lease to be granted to the surrenderer for his life, did not require an agreement stamp in addition to the ad valorem stamp, the stipulation for a new lease not being a matter or thing besides what is incident to the sale and conveyance." Doe v. Phillipps, 11 Ad. & El. 796, 39 E. C. L. 231.

Injury by Event Incident to Navigation. — The United States government chartered a boat for the purpose of carrying its soldiers, etc. By the terms of the charter-party the government agreed to make compensation to the owner of the boat in case of her injury or destruction "by any event not incident to the navigation of the river or rivers on which she may be employed." It was held that under this agreement the government was liable to the owner for a loss occasioned by the carelessness of the officers of the government in loading the boat. Attorney-General Hoar said: "I think those words [injury by an event incident to navigation] mean substantially the same as the words 'perils of navigation,' or 'dangers of the seas,' or 'dangers of navigation.'" Steamer Wathan's Case, 13 Op. Atty.-Gen. 119. See generally the title NAVIGATION.

Tax Not Expense Incidental to Issue of Bonds. — Where a city issued bonds in aid of a railroad, and in consideration of the loan the railroad company executed a mortgage of its property to the city and agreed to pay all and any expenses incidental to the issue of the bonds, it was held that where Congress passed an excise law, levying an income tax of three per cent. on all sums due for interest by railroad companies, such a tax was not an expense incidental to the issue of the bonds. The court said: "To carry out the arrangement between the parties required a considerable expenditure of money for printing, clerk hire, stationery, advertising, and similar matters. These expenses were incidental to the issue of the bonds, and it was right and proper that the railroad company — the party to be benefited by the transaction — should pay them. And it agreed to do so; but this agreement cannot be extended to cover the tax in question, for in no sense is it an expense incidental to the issue of the bonds." Baltimore v. Baltimore R. Co., 10 Wall. (U. S.) 543.

INCITE. — The word "incite" means to move to action; to stir up; to arouse; to spur on.¹

INCLOSE, INCLOSURE, ETC. (See also the title FENCES, vol. 12, p. 1035.) — To inclose means to surround; to shut in; to confine on all sides.² An

Incidental School Purposes. — A school district was authorized by statute to assess a tax not exceeding three hundred dollars annually to keep the schoolhouse in repair and furnish it with fuel and appendages. At an annual meeting of the board of the district taxes were voted as follows: "For the payment of teachers' wages in the district, six hundred and fifty dollars; for the payment of indebtedness of said district incurred for building school house in 1866, nine hundred dollars; for incidental purposes, fifty dollars." It was held that the tax of fifty dollars for "incidental purposes" was a valid exercise of the power conferred by the statutory provision above quoted. Said the court: "It might be more precise, in voting a tax for these purposes, to say, 'for repairs, fuel, and appendages;' but the words 'for incidental purposes' must, we think, be construed to mean the same thing." State v. Wolfrom, 25 Wis. 468.

Incidental Repairs. — A policy of insurance allowed five days each year for incidental repairs, without notice to the insurer. The insured secured a builder's risk for two months and made extensive repairs. This work had ceased for about two weeks, and the two months had expired, when the insurer commenced a further repair of putting on new siding, the old having become decayed. This work had been in progress three days when the building was destroyed by fire. It was held that the work being done was embraced in the term "incidental repairs." The court said: "The repairs permitted by the policy are not merely ordinary repairs, but incidental, that is, occasional repairs, such as are not regular, but as occasion may require." Rann v. Home Ins. Co., 59 N. Y. 387.

Incidental Expenses. — In Dunwoody v. U. S., 22 Ct. Cl. 250, it was said: "The adjectives 'contingent,' incidental, and 'miscellaneous,' as used in appropriation bills to qualify the word 'expenses,' have a technical and well-understood meaning; it is usual for Congress to name the principal classes of expenditure which they authorize, such as clerk hire, fuel, light, postage, telegrams, etc., and then to make a small appropriation for the minor and unimportant disbursements incidental to any great business, which cannot well be foreseen and which it would be useless to specify more accurately. For such disbursements a round sum is appropriated under the head of 'contingent expenses,' or 'incidental expenses,' or 'miscellaneous expenses.' Such appropriations the law says shall not be used for clerk hire."

A judge's order was drawn up by consent, that, upon payment of the debt and costs on a certain day, all further proceedings should be stayed; but in default of payment, the plaintiff should be at liberty to sign judgment, issue execution, and levy the debt and costs, together with the costs of execution, sheriffs' poundage, officers' fees, and all other incidental expenses. Default having been made and execution issued, it was held that the sheriff could not levy, nor was the defendant liable to pay, as incidental expenses, the costs of a rule to return the writ. Hutchinson v. Humbert, 8 M. & W. 638.

Incidental Power. — An incidental power may be defined to be one that is directly and immediately appropriate to the execution of the specific power granted, and not one that has merely some slight or remote relation to it. Hood v. New York, etc., R. Co., 22 Conn. 16; State v. Newman, 51 La. Ann. 833.

In Cromwell v. Phipps, 6 Dem. (N. Y.) 60, it was held that the Circuit Court had no jurisdiction in a special proceeding instituted under Code Civ. Pro. N. Y., § 2749, for the disposition of a decedent's real property for the payment of his debts, to compel a purchaser, at the instance of a freeholder appointed to sell the property, to accept the deed and pay the balance of the purchase money. The court said: "It is the business of the executor, or other person making the sale, to collect the money from strangers, and not the surrogate's, and when collected to pay it into court. That act, in so far as the power conferred on the surrogate is concerned, is not incident to it. Incident, according to Jacob (Law Dict., title incident), is 'a thing necessarily depending upon, appertaining to, or following another that is more worthy or principal.' Thus, timber trees are incident to the freehold, and so is a right of way."

1. Long v. State, 23 Neb. 45, in which case it was held that the words "requested, advised, and incited," as used in a charge of the trial court, were equivalent to the statutory words, "aid, abet, or procure." See generally the title AIDER AND ABETTOR, vol. 2, p. 29.

2. Union Pac. R. Co. v. Harris, 28 Kan. 206.

Inclose. — The words inclose and "include" are of common derivation, and signify among other things, to "confine within." Hence a deed specifying certain lands of "section ten, township three, range twenty-one, inclosing the lands where the said * * * mill and house now stand," etc., should be read as if it had said that the mill and house were "con-

inclosure is that which is inclosed; also a barrier or fence inclosing something, as a tract of land.¹

fin'd within" the land, etc. Such signification must be adopted as give effect to the intention of the parties. Campbell v. Gilbert, 57 Ala. 569. See also Pepper v. O'Dowd, 39 Wis. 546; and see INCLUDE — INCLUSIVE, p. 146, post.

Inclosed Building, Ground, Land, etc. — A subscription to the building of a church to be paid when the building is inclosed is due and may be collected when the main building is inclosed, though some towers connected with the building have not been inclosed. Snell v. Methodist Episcopal Church Soc., 58 Ill. 290.

Same — Partly Open. — A testator in his will directed his executors to "inclose with a good and substantial iron fence * * * the Friends' meeting-house grounds, as also the schoolhouse grounds and the Friends' burial ground." These three grounds were adjoining. It was held that under the circumstances there was no latent ambiguity as to the testator's intentions to inclose each of such grounds on all sides. The court said: "The several and respective lots were to be inclosed — that is to say, shut in on all sides. A field with a fence on three sides only could not, in any proper sense, be spoken of as inclosed, unless the fourth side was bounded by some natural object or occupied by some artificial erection which rendered a fence impracticable or unnecessary." Hall's Appeal, 112 Pa. St. 42.

In Gundy v. State, 63 Ind. 530, it was said: "A fence only partly inclosing the land would not make it an inclosure. To constitute the inclosure, we think the fences, including the partition fence, must surround the adjoining land or some part of it."

The statute 5 Geo. III., c. 14, § 3, provides for the punishment of any person convicted of fishing in any water in any "inclosed ground which shall be private property," with certain specified exceptions. In an action under this act it appeared that the plaintiff owned a tract of land and so much of the soil of a river bordering on one side thereof as lay between the bank and the filum aquæ. All sides of the tract, except that which abutted on the river, were separated from the adjacent lands by a fence; but there was no fence on the river side, nor down the filum aquæ. The defendant stood upon the tract, and caught fish from the river. It was held that there was no fishing in water in "inclosed ground," within the meaning of the act. Gibbs, C. J., said: "This is property which, from the nature of the thing, is not and cannot be inclosed." Lisle v. Brown, 5 Taunt. 440, 1 E. C. L. 150, 1 Chittv's Gen. Pr. 179, 1 Marsh. 127.

Same — Substantial Inclosure. — Within a statute providing that lands should be deemed improved when protected by a substantial inclosure, the court thus construed "substantial inclosure:" "It cannot be maintained that the locus in quo in this case was protected by a substantial inclosure. The premises claimed by the defendant were not so inclosed. Accept the statement of the defendant's counsel, as given in his points, that it was 'inclosed on two sides by fences, a highway on another, and a distinct line of marked trees from corner stake to stake on the other,' and the lot could not be deemed protected by a substantial inclosure. Doolittle v. Tice, 41 Barb. (N. Y.) 182. Corner stakes do not, nor does a line of marked trees, constitute a substantial inclosure." Pope v. Hanmer, 8 Hun (N. Y.) 269.

Same — Railroads. (See also the title FENCES, vol. 12, p. 1061.) — A statute defining the liability of railroads for animals killed provided that the act should not apply to any railroad whose road was inclosed with a good and lawful fence. The court said: "Now, can anything be said to be inclosed with a good and lawful fence when the only fences are the side fences, and there is no protection on the ends? The word inclose is defined by Webster, 'to surround; to shut in; to confine on all sides,' etc." Union Pac. R. Co. v. Harris, 28 Kan. 210.

A statute required railroads to fence all their roadbeds running through inclosed lands. The court, after citing 6 AM AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW (1st ed.) 633, said: "Inclosed lands, therefore, are lands surrounded by a fence; and a fence is a visible or tangible obstruction, which may be a hedge, ditch, wall, or a frame of wood, or any line of obstacle interposed between two portions of land so as to part off and shut in the land, and set it off as private property." Kimball v. Carter, 95 Va. 77.

Where a statute requires railroad companies to fence their tracks along "inclosed or cultivated fields," it is not necessary, in order to be entitled to this protection, that the inclosure of the fields should be by lawful fences. Biggerstaff v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 60 Mo. 567.

Same — Wharf. — A wharf bounded on the north by a river, on the south by a railroad embankment and trestle, and on the east and west, respectively, by piles of lumber placed thereon, not for the purpose of forming an inclosure, but merely for the convenience of the occupants of the wharf, is not inclosed, although it and other wharf property may be inside of a tract surrounded in consecutive order by a river, certain salt sheds, a canal, railroad trestles, and a fence, and although this tract, including the wharves and other realty, may be inside a still larger tract, surrounded as to two sides by fences, and as to the other two by a river and canal. Consequently it is not, under the Georgia Act of 1883, making it a misdemeanor wilfully to "enter, go upon, or pass over any field, orchard, garden, or other inclosed or cultivated land of another, after being personally forbidden so to do by the owner, or person entitled to the possession for the time being, or authorized agent thereof," an indictable offense wilfully to enter or go upon such wharf, after being so forbidden, and a conviction therefor is contrary to law. Daniels v. State, 91 Ga. 1.

Same — Turnpike Act. — In an English turnpike act the words "inclosed lands" were held to have been used in their popular sense of lands surrounded by a fence. Tapsell v. Crosskey, 7 M. & W. 441.

1. Impounding. (See also the title IMPOUNDING, p. 4, ante.) — This meaning was adopted in

INCLUDE — INCLUSIVE. (See also INCLOSE, INCLOSURE, ETC., ante, p. 144.) — See note 1.

Taylor v. Welbey, 36 Wis. 42, where the word was construed as used in a statute limiting the right of distraining beasts damage feasant within the inclosure of the distrainer. See Bouv. L. Dict. See also Pettit v. May, 34 Wis. 666.

In the interpretation of a similar act it was said: "The word inclosure * * * imports land inclosed with something more than the imaginary boundary line; that there should be some visible or tangible obstruction, such as a fence, hedge, ditch, or something equivalent, for the protection of the premises against encroachment by cattle." "Close" is a more extensive word, including cases where land is inclosed by only imaginary boundary lines. Its use in pleading under these statutes instead of inclosure is bad. Porter v. Aldrich, 39 Vt. 326.

In Keith v. Bradford, 39 Vt. 34, it was held that a statutory fence was not necessary to constitute an inclosure. Compare Mooney v. Maynard, 1 Vt. 470.

A Potato Patch is not within the meaning of an act forbidding the laying out of roads or streets through yards or inclosures necessary to the use and enjoyment of any dwelling house or manufacturing establishment to which they are appurtenant. Lansing v. Caswell, 4 Paige (N. Y.) 519.

Destruction. — A North Carolina statute forbade the destruction of any fence, wall, or other inclosure surrounding or about a cultivated field. It was held that inclosure, as used in this statute, did not include an erection consisting of posts nine or ten feet apart, on which, near the tops, were nailed slats, not intended to inclose or surround a field, but designed only to prevent travelers from trespass on the land by turning out of the road. State v. Roberts, 101 N. Car. 746.

Field — Injuries to Animals. (See also the title INJURIES TO ANIMALS, post.) — In State v. Staton, 66 N. Car. 640, it was held that under an act concerning the killing of stock in any inclosure not surrounded by a lawful fence, an indictment which simply charged the injury to have been committed on stock in a "field" of one A B was not certain and could not be sustained. The court said: "Inclosure is a general term which includes several specific things, as a farm, public square, cemetery, fortification, etc. The modified meaning of the word as used in the statute is ascertained by reference to a statute in pari materia (Rev. Co., c. 48), to be 'inclosed grounds,' used for the purpose of habitations and husbandry, and separated from woodland or common by a fence or wall of some kind. Such an inclosure may be a yard, garden, orchard, field, etc. The word 'field' has not as extensive a signification as inclosure, and therefore the terms are not equivalent and the less cannot include the greater."

1. Include. — In State v. Cook, 32 N. J. L. 351, it was said: "Webster defines the word include as synonymous with comprise, comprehend, contain, and gives this apt example. 'The word duty includes what we owe to God, to our fellow men, and to ourselves; it in- cludes also a tax payable to the government.'" And in that case it was held, where it was provided that shares of stock held by any person should be included in the valuation of the personal property of such person, that the value of the stock need not literally be included with the other personal property by summing up the valuation together, but that a tax against the stockholder on the same duplicate with other personal property was sufficient, although the valuation was carried out separately.

Exclusion. — A statute provided that a clerk must insert in an entry of judgment the necessary disbursements, including the fees of the officers allowed by law, the fees of witnesses, the necessary expenses of commissions, the compensation of referees, and the expense of printing papers on appeal. In construing this provision the court said: "The word including, as used in the above provision of statute, does not necessarily confine the items of disbursements recoverable to those enumerated; but the special provision for 'printing papers on appeal' does exclude the idea of a recovery for such papers when prepared in any other way." Cooper v. Stinson, 5 Minn. 522.

Same — Interpretation. (See also the titles INTERPRETATION, post; STATUTES.) — The interpretation clause of English statutes sometimes provides that a certain word shall include a variety of things. The courts hold that this term is thus used by way of extension, and not as giving a definition by which other things are to be excluded. Reg. v. Kershaw, 6 El. & Bl. 1007, 88 E. C. L. 1007, 26 L. J. M. C. 23. Thus where the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict., c. 104), provided that "ship" should include "every description of vessel used in navigation not propelled by oars," it was held that a vessel propelled by oars was not excluded. Ex p. Ferguson, L. R. 6 Q. B. 291. It was declared by the Petroleum Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict., c. 56), that "petroleum" should include all such rock oil, etc., as gave off an inflammable vapor at a temperature of less than 100 degrees Fahrenheit. But petroleum itself was held to be within the act, even if it did not give off an inflammable vapor below the specified temperature. Jones v. Cook, L. R. 6 Q. B. 505. To all such cases the words used by Blackburn, J., in reference to the Metropolis Management Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict., c. 120), have a forcible application. "It does not follow that because, in the interpretation clause, they say the expression 'new street' shall include certain other things, we are to say it does not include its own natural sense." Pound v. Plumstead Board of Works, L. R. 7 Q. B. 194. See Wilberf. Stat. Law 299. See also Worsley v. South Devon R. Co., 16 Q. B. 539, 71 E. C. L. 539; Nutter v. Accrington Local Board of Health, 4 Q. B. D. 375.

Ejusdem Generis. — Upon the question of the application of the ejusdem generis rule of construction, it was said in Calhoun v. Memphis, etc., R. Co., 2 Flipp. (U. S.) 445, that where the particulars are introduced by the word in- cluding, such word "does not indicate a restrictive intention, but rather the contrary."

INCOMBUSTIBLE. — See note 1.

INCOME. (See also the titles LEGACIES AND DEVISES; REMAINDERS AND EXECUTORY INTERESTS; TAXATION; TRUSTS AND TRUSTEES; WILLS.) — Income is defined to be that gain which proceeds from labor, business, or property of any kind; the produce of a farm; the rent of houses, etc.²

"Consisting of" Distinguished from "Including." — See Farish v. Cook, 6 Mo. App. 331.

Public Lands. (See generally the title PUBLIC LANDS.) — A United States statute provided that when school lands granted to a state or territory were included within any Indian, military, or other reservation, the state might select indemnity lands in lieu of such school lands. In construing this statute in Hibberd v. Slack, 84 Fed. Rep. 576, the court said: "The pivotal word of this clause is included, and to my mind it refers, when read in the light of its immediate context, to those school sections which are constituent parts of a reservation, but not to those which, although shut in by its outer lines, are distinct from the reservation."

Inclusive Legacy. (See also the titles LEGACIES AND DEVISES; WILLS.) — A testator gave "to the Academy of the Pennsylvania Fine Arts, fifty thousand dollars, inclusive of the note of the academy." At the time of his death the testator held the note of the academy for the sum of eight thousand dollars for money loaned to it. It was held that the amount of the note should be deducted from the legacy, and that the legatee was entitled to receive only forty-two thousand dollars. The court said: "Giving to the word inclusive its accepted meaning, the note was to be included in the legacy and form a part of it." Pepper's Estate, 154 Pa. St. 340.

A testator bequeathed a legacy of "one hundred dollars, including money trustee, at" a certain bank. At the time of the making of the will, an action was pending by the legatee against the testator for a sum less than one hundred dollars, and the bank named had been summoned as trustee. The testator had several hundred dollars deposited at the bank. It was held that the testator meant to give to the legatee one hundred dollars only. The court said: "The plaintiff contends that the word including means, in this connection, 'in addition to,' and that the testatrix intended to give the plaintiff not only one hundred dollars, but in addition to that sum all the money she had in the bank; the words 'money trustee at the Union savings bank' being descriptive of, and intended to identify, the whole amount which she had then on deposit. But this is a forced construction, inconsistent with the meaning of the words used by the testatrix; and we can have no doubt from the language of the bequest, taken in connection with the facts existing at the time the will was made, that she intended a gift to the plaintiff of one hundred dollars only, which sum was to include the amount for which the bank might be held liable as trustee; or, in other words, that the one hundred dollars was to include the amount which the plaintiff claimed to be due from her." Brainard v. Darling, 132 Mass. 219.

1. Incombustible Materials. (See also the title FIRE LIMITS, vol. 13, p. 396.) — The English Metropolitan Building Act, 1855, § 19, subsec. 1, provided that the roof of every building should be covered externally with "slates, tiles, metal, or other incombustible materials." The roof of a building was covered externally with materials consisting of woven iron wire coated with an oleaginous compound. The coating would ignite and burn away, leaving the wirework uninjured. It was held that the roof was not covered with incombustible materials within the meaning of the act. Payne v. Wright, (1892) 1 Q. B. 104.

2. Income. — McClintock v. Dana, 106 Pa. St. 386; Remington v. Field, 16 R. I. 510.

Income signifies what comes in. Jones v. Ogle, 42 L. J. Ch. 336.

In Ex p. Huggins, 21 Ch. D. 85, Jessel, M. R., said that income was as large a word as could be used to denote a person's receipts.

Limited Meaning. — In New Orleans v. Hart, 14 La. Ann. 815, it was held that the word income in a tax act meant moneys received in compensation of services, such as wages, commissions, brokerage, etc., and was totally different from the fruits of capital invested in merchandise, stocks, etc.

Net Income and Income. (See also infra, this note, Profits and Income Distinguished.) — Where the term income alone has been used there has been considerable controversy as to whether net or gross income is meant. Thus in Mundy v. Van Hoose, 104 Ga. 292, it was said: "Income is defined to be 'that which comes in or is received from any business or investment of capital, without reference to the outgoing expenditures.'" And in People v. New York, 18 Wend. (N. Y.) 605, income was held not to have meant net income. This was a tax case. See generally the title TAXATION.

So in Reg. v. Southampton, L. R. 4 H. L. 450, it was held that where commissioners were authorized by an Act of Parliament to receive certain moneys, and at the same time were directed to pay a portion of those moneys to another body of persons, the gross sum received was to be deemed the income of the commissioners, and the persons to whom the payment was to be made had an interest in that portion and were entitled to enforce the payment thereof. Bramwell, B., said: "Income is that which comes in, not that which comes in less an outgoing. The fifth defendants were liable to pay to the plaintiffs was an 'outgoing,' not a diminution of income. In speaking of a man's income from an estate, no one would deduct the interest payable on money borrowed to pay for one-fifth of it. The income of the United Kingdom is not its revenue less the interest on the national debt."

A member of a partnership, who was also its general manager, was to receive, under the articles of partnership, "a liberal salary, say five hundred dollars, out of the gross income," for his services. In the statement of an account of the partnership's business, a sum of money expended in permanent improvements to the firm's real estate was included among the expenditures. With this item included, the account showed that the firm had made no profits from its business. The court below, holding that "gross income" in the articles meant net profits, and not gross receipts, held accordingly that A was not entitled to any salary under the agreement. It was held on appeal that the insertion in the expenditures of the account of the item for sums expended in permanent improvements to the real estate was erroneous; that as with this item omitted there would have been a profit, A was entitled to the salary agreed upon. Braun's Appeal, 105 Pa. St. 414.

By its charter a railroad was to pay a certain percentage on its annual income. In construing this provision, in Goldsmith v. Augusta, etc., R. Co., 62 Ga. 472, the court said: "Does that mean gross or net income? We think that the meaning is gross income. People v. Niagara County, 4 Hill (N. Y.) 23, 7 Hill (N. Y.) 504. Besides, in other charters of other railroad companies the word 'net' is inserted before income. Why left out here, if the intention was to levy on net income only?"

A testator, by his will, directed that his farm should be rented until his youngest child should become of age. He further provided that his wife should live on the farm and that she and her minor children should have "one-half of the income of said farm" for their support. The executors leased the farm on shares, as the testator had been accustomed to do, the total annual product thereof being about one thousand four hundred dollars. It was held that the testator intended his widow to have one-half of the annual product, viz., all that did not belong to the tenant, and that he did not intend her to take merely one-half of the amount annually realized by his executors. Thompson's Appeal, 100 Pa. St. 478.

But in Pursel v. Pursel, 14 N. J. Eq. 521, it was said: "By the terms of the will, she [the widow] was to receive one-third of all the income of the estate, real and personal. The income from land under lease can be no more than the rent or share paid by the tenant. The land was under lease from the testator to his son at the date of the will. The testator knew that his estate was to receive from that land but two-fifths of the gross products, and in giving to his widow one-third of the income of his estate he could have referred only to that portion which his estate was to receive, not to that which by the terms of the lease it was not to receive. It is true that the income of an individual, a bank, or a government is the amount it may receive independent of its losses, and this is all that was really decided in People v. Niagara County, 4 Hill (N. Y.) 23. But the income of a government surely does not include the cost of assessing and collecting the taxes which never reach the treasury. Nor can the income of the owner of leased lands exceed the amount of rent he receives from them irrespective of their gross annual value."

So in Lawless v. Sullivan, 6 App. Cas. 373, it was held that the word income in the New Brunswick Assessment Act, when applied to a commercial business, meant the balance of gain over loss, and that when no such gain had been made during the year there is no income or fund capable of being assessed. See also In re Taylor, 16 Can. L. T. 169; and see the title TAXATION.

A charge on all the property and income of a company was held not to give a charge on debts, except so far as they represented income; and the term income was held in such a case to mean net earnings, after providing for current expenses. McCargar v. McKinnon, 15 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 361.

There is no fair distinction between income and "net income." "Net is a term used among merchants to designate the quantity, amount, or value of an article or commodity, after all tare and charges are deducted. The income of an estate means nothing more than the profit it will yield after deducting the charges of management; or the rent which may be obtained for the use of it. The rents and profits of an estate, the income or the net income of it, are all equivalent expressions." Andrews v. Boyd, 5 Me. 199.

And in the following cases income was held to mean net income: Opinion of Justices, 5 Met. (Mass.) 596; Farmers L. & T. Co. v. New York, 7 Hill (N. Y.) 289; Re Biddle Cape, 5 British Columbia 37; Kingston v. Canada L. Assur. Co., 19 Ont. 453.

Estate for Life — Land Itself. — The devise of income or net income of an estate for one's lifetime has been held to be a devise of the estate itself for the life of the beneficiary, and a devise of the income absolutely to be a devise of the land itself. Andrews v. Boyd, 5 Me. 199; Sampson v. Randall, 72 Me. 109; Hopkins v. Keazer, 89 Me. 347; Reed v. Reed, 9 Mass. 372; Diamond v. Lore, 31 N. J. L. 220. See also Griffith v. Smith, Moore's Rep. 753; Bristol v. Bristol, 53 Conn. 259; Thompson v. Schenck, 16 Ind. 194; Fox v. Phelps, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 393; Sprout's Appeal, 105 Pa. St. 441; Carlyle v. Cannon, 3 Rawle (Pa.) 489. But see South v. Allen, 5 Mod. 98, 1 Salk. 228; Craig v. Craig, 3 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 76; France's Estate, 75 Pa. St. 220; Rowen v. Payton, 14 R. I. 257. And for a complete treatment of the subject see the titles LEGACIES AND DEVISES; WILLS.

Alimony. (See generally the title ALIMONY, vol. 2, p. 91.) — In holding that a married woman was entitled to alimony pendente lite when the income from her separate estate was not sufficient for her support, the court said: "That the term 'alimony' means income, and not the corpus or capital yielding it, is clear from the * * * statute in relation to divorces from bed and board, which declares that there shall be given 'such alimony as the circumstances of the parties may render necessary, which, however, shall not in any case exceed the one-third part of the net annual income from the estate, occupation, or labor of the party against whom judgment shall be rendered.'" Miller v. Miller, 75 N. Car. 71.

Annuity. — A testator devised to his wife the dividends and income of certain shares of bank stock during her natural life, or so long as she remained his widow, and in lieu of dower, the reversionary right being in his three daughters, who were also made his residuary legatees and devisees. It was held that the gift was one of income and not of annuity. The court distinguished between annuity and income, saying: "An annuity is defined as a stated sum payable annually. * * * On the other hand, income would include all cases where the interest of a certain sum is given, where the profits or earnings of the property, although payable at fixed periods, might vary from time to time." Pearson v. Chace, 10 R. I. 457.

In Flickwir's Estate, 136 Pa. St. 381, it was said: "There is no substantial difference in legal aspect between the gift of an annuity for life and of the interest or income of a fund for life; nor between the gift simply of interest and of interest payable annually." And in that case it was held that in all these cases, if no actual intent to the contrary appears, the annuity, interest, or income begins to accrue to the legatee at the death of the testator.

And that there is no distinction between income and annuity, see Hilyard's Estate, 5 W. & S. (Pa.) 30; Pennsylvania Co.'s Appeal, 41 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 26.

Same — Income of Five Thousand Dollars. — A testatrix bequeathed "the income of five thousand dollars" to be paid to the legatee during life, by her executors, "out of an adequate fund to be retained therefor." It was held that the bequest was of the annual proceeds or interest of that sum of money, and not an annuity of that amount. The court said: "Had the indefinite article 'an' income of five thousand dollars for life been the form of the devise, it is agreed it would have caused an annuity of five thousand a year. This would have been a widely different expression; yet the appellant is forced to insist, in order to maintain his position, that the expression 'the income of five thousand dollars' means precisely the same thing as 'an income of five thousand dollars.' While, therefore, we must recognize this great difference in the force of the words used, we must, in the absence of a contrary intent appearing, presume that the difference was well understood, and intended to be made. The additional words, 'out of an adequate fund to be retained therefor,' in no ways control this interpretation." Sims's Appeal, 44 Pa. St. 347.

Income and Capital or Corpus. — A building society's rules provided that in the event of the directors determining at a special meeting, to be held every three years, that there was a deficiency in income, by which the society might be prevented from meeting its anticipated expenditures and liabilities, the amount of such deficiency should be apportioned by the directors. Upon the construction of the word income as used in this by-law, Chitty, J., in In re West Riding of Yorkshire Permanent Ben. Bldg. Soc., 43 Ch. D. 415, said: "Some part of the argument I had a difficulty in following on the term income. It seemed at one time that counsel was trying to advance the proposition that income here meant something which was distinguished from 'capital.' There is no contrast in this clause between income and 'capital.' Income here means all that comes in. And that is so from the very nature of these societies. What is coming in from time to time are the subscriptions. The subscriptions, if an actuary were to analyze them, would be found to consist of principal and interest, but that is only in the calculation, and the interest does not appear. There is no distinction here to be found as between capital and income, which of course does exist in companies, under the Limited Liability Acts, where there is a fixed capital. I therefore hold that income includes, for instance, repayments by advanced members, moneys borrowed from outsiders, who are commonly called in these societies depositors, and in fact everything that comes in. Then, acknowledging, as I do, that there is some defect in the expression, I think it would also include any money that they may have in hand."

An English act provided that "where a husband or wife is entitled, either solely or jointly with the other, to the income of any property settled by the other under a disposition which has taken effect before the commencement of this part of this act, and on his or her death the survivor becomes entitled to the income of the property settled by such survivor, estate duty shall not be payable in respect of that property until the death of the survivor." In Atty.-Gen. v. Strange, (1898) 2 Q. B. 42, it was held that income was used in this sense as distinguished from the corpus of the property, and that the act did not apply where the survivor became entitled not only to the income, but to the corpus. See generally the title SUCCESSION TAXES.

Increase. (See also Stock, Dividends, Surplus, Etc., infra, this note.) — A testator devised real and personal estate, the latter consisting in part of negroes, to a trustee in trust, "the income arising therefrom to be applied to the mutual benefit" of the uncle and aunt of the testator during their joint lives, and after the death of the uncle "to the mutual benefit" of the aunt "and her children," and after the death of the aunt "to the use and benefit" of her children, until the youngest should attain the age of twenty-one years, then the said real estate, "together with the rest of the property so as aforesaid left in trust, to the children" of his said aunt, "to them and their heirs, forever, share and share alike." The decree of the chancellor deciding that the increase of the female slaves born during the life of the aunt constituted a part of the trust estate, and passed to those entitled in remainder, was, upon appeal, affirmed by a divided court. Holmes v. Mitchell, 4 Md. 532.

Interest. — The word income means a gain which proceeds from property, labor, or business. When applied to a sum of money, or money in the public debt, it is equivalent to "interest." Sims's Appeal, 44 Pa. St. 347.

Money in the Sense of Income. — See Ellicott v. Ellicott, (Md. 1900) 45 Atl. Rep. 186. And see generally the title MONEY.

Proceeds of Sale. — Under a United States statute which imposed a tax on gains, profits, and income for the years of 1870 and 1871, and no longer, the amount of a promissory note taken in 1871, on the sale in that year of a patent right, but not due until some time in 1872, and paid in that year was held not taxable as income for 1871. U. S. v. Schillinger, 14 Blatchf. (U. S.) 71.

The advance in the value of personal property during a series of years does not constitute the gains, profits, or income of any one particular year of the series, although the entire amount of the advance be at one time turned into money by a sale of the property. Accordingly, when bonds of the United States were sold by the owner, after being held by him for four years, at an advance of twenty thousand dollars over their cost to him, it was held that this amount was not taxable as "gains, profits, and income" of the owner for the year in which the sale was made, under an internal revenue act. Gray v. Darlington, 15 Wall. (U. S.) 63.

Proceeds. — In Gehr v. Mont Alto Iron Co., 174 Pa. St. 430, it was said: "The fund for distribution can in no sense be called income or earnings. It results from sales of materials, manufactured iron, products from the land, or general personal property, all indicating a final winding up of the business of the concern."

A direction in a will to sell the testator's personal as well as real property and divide the income among his five children was held to refer to the proceeds of the sale of the property, and not to include notes, bonds, and mortgages. Bredlinger's Appeal, 2 Grant Cas. (Pa.) 461. See also Roberts's Appeal, 92 Pa. St. 419.

In a clause of a will setting forth that a person named "shall have sufficient income from my property that I may possess at the time of my death for her support during her natural life," the word income has reference to what shall be received by the beneficiary of the will, and not what sum of money the estate would produce during the year by way of income; it would mean that sum of money yearly equal to her reasonable support, without reference to whether it was derived from the income of the property or from a sale of the property itself. Sowards v. Taylor, 42 Ill. App. 275.

Same — Sale of Option. — The price realized by the sale of a privilege incident to the ownership of stock of a corporation to subscribe to the bonds of another corporation whose stock is to be given as a bonus to the subscriber is not income from the stock to which the privilege is incident. Thomson's Estate, 153 Pa. St. 333.

Profit Realized by Foreclosure of Mortgage and Resale. — A testator bequeathed to his executors, in trust, the residue of his estate, to receive and collect the rent of the real estate thereby devised to them in trust, and the income and profits of the personal estate, to pay the residue of the net income arising from the said real and personal estate into the hands of his daughter. It was held that a profit realized by the foreclosure of a mortgage and a resale of the property bought in by the trustees was income and profit. Park's Estate, 173 Pa. St. 190.

Profits and Income Distinguished. (See also PROFITS, and see the title TAXATION.) — In construing a statute of New York authorizing the levy of a tax upon all moneyed or stock corporations "deriving an income or profit from their capital or otherwise," the court, in People v. Niagara County, 4 Hill (N. Y.) 20, in giving the relative definitions of "profits" and income, said: "It is undoubtedly true that 'profits' and income are sometimes used as synonymous terms; but strictly speaking, income means that which comes in, or is received from any business or investment of capital, without reference to the outgoing expenditures, while 'profits' generally mean the gain which is made upon any business or investment when both receipts and payments are taken into the account. Income, when applied to the affairs of individuals, expresses the same idea that 'revenue' does when applied to the affairs of a state or nation; and no one would think of denying that our government has any revenue because the expenditures for a given period may exceed the amount of receipts." This case was quoted with approval in Bates v. Porter, 74 Cal. 224; People v. San Francisco Sav. Union, 72 Cal. 203; Mundy v. Van Hoose, 104 Ga. 292. In People v. San Francisco Sav. Union, 72 Cal. 203, it was said: "The rents and profits of an estate, the income or net income of it, are all equivalent expressions. Andrews v. Boyd, 5 Me. 202; Earl v. Rowe, 35 Me. 420."

It has been held that the words "profits and income," in a devise of the profits and income of property held in trust, were equivalent to a devise of the income alone. Beers v. Narramore, 61 Conn. 13. See also Leake v. Watson, 60 Conn. 498.

Net Income and Property. — In Waring v. Savannah, 60 Ga. 100, it was said: "Is income property, in the sense of the constitution, and must it be taxed at the same rate as other property? It seems to us that it is not property, and it has been held not to be since the Hartridge case [Savannah v. Hartridge], in 8 Ga. 23. The legislature has taxed it differently from property from that day to this. Code, §§ 799, 804, 4647; Acts of 1868, 1869, 1871-2, etc., etc., down to this day. The fact is, property is a tree, income is the fruit; labor is a tree, income the fruit; capital the tree, income the fruit. The fruit, if not consumed as fast as it ripens, will germinate from the seed which it incloses, and will produce other trees, and grow into more property; but so long as it is fruit merely, and plucked to eat, and consumed in the eating, it is no tree, and will produce itself no fruit."

Income and Rent. (See also RENT.) — A statute prescribed that a guardian should improve his ward's estate without waste and apply the income and profits thereof to the support and maintenance of the ward. It was argued from the use of the word income that if the guardian had a farm in his charge, he must lease it out and so derive an income from it. But the court refused to sustain this reasoning, saying that rent was only one form of income, though "as a general rule it is wiser and better for a guardian having charge of a farm belonging to his ward to lease it than to manage it himself; * * * but there may be circumstances in which it is proper and advantageous for his wards for him to take the management on himself." Remington v. Field, 16 R. I. 510.

See Lindley's Appeal 102 Pa. St. 255, 13 W. N. C. (Pa.) 69, where it was said that the words "income, issues, and profits" include the rents of real estate.

Income and Revenues — Earnings. — In Tompkins v. Little Rock, etc., R. Co., 15 Fed. Rep. 14, it was said: "It is futile to say that there is a distinction between a pledge or appropriation of the 'earnings of the road,' as in the Ketchum case [Ketchum v. St. Louis, 101 U. S. 306, 4 Dill. (U. S.) 78], and the 'income and revenues of the company,' as in the case at bar. The 'income and revenues' of a railroad company are all the income and revenues of the company, and necessarily embrace the 'earnings' of its road." And see supra, this note, Profits and Income Distinguished.

Income and Revenue Provided for Such Year. — A statute provided that no city should become indebted in any one year for a greater amount than "the income and revenue provided for such year." It was held that the words "income and revenue" meant income derived from any source, and not income derived from taxes alone. Lamar Water, etc., Co. v. Lamar, 128 Mo. 188. See generally the title MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

Royalty. — A testatrix devised her residuary estate to her executor in trust, to invest the personal estate and the proceeds of her real estate, to apply so much of the "yearly proceeds or income" thereof as should be necessary for the support of her daughter during her minority, and to invest for accumulation whatever balance there might be of such income. Upon the majority of the daughter the entire income of the estate was to be paid to her during her life, and after her death the corpus of the estate was limited to her children. The executors had power both to lease and to sell real estate, and in pursuance thereof "leased" certain coal land, unopened when the testatrix died, to lessees who were empowered to mine the coal until it was exhausted, paying therefor a certain royalty or rent. It was held that the rent or royalty thus received was payable by the trustees to the daughter as cestui que trust for life, as income of the estate within the meaning of the will. McClintock v. Dana, 106 Pa. St. 386.

In Eley's Appeal, 103 Pa. St. 306, it was said: "The word income means the gain which accrues from property, labor, or business. In its ordinary and popular meaning it is strictly applicable to the periodical payments, in the nature of rent, which are usually made under coal and other mineral leases, and we have no doubt it was used in that sense by the testator." See also Bedford's Appeal, 126 Pa. St. 122; Shoemaker's Appeal, 106 Pa. St. 392; Park's Estate, 173 Pa. St. 195; Woodburn's Estate, 138 Pa. St. 606.

Salary. (See also SALARY, and the title INSOLVENCY AND BANKRUPTCY, post.) — A bankruptcy statute provided that where a bankrupt was in the receipt of a salary or income, the court, upon the application of the trustee, should from time to time make such orders as it thought just for the payment of such salary or income or any part thereof to the trustee during the bankruptcy. It was held that the word income applied only to an income ejusdem generis with a salary, and did not enable the court to set aside for the benefit of the creditors of a professional man who was an undischarged bankrupt any part of his prospective and contingent earnings in the exercise of his personal skill and knowledge. Ex p. Benwell, 14 Q. B. D. 301. So in Ex p. Webber, 18 Q. B. D. 111, it was held that a voluntary allowance granted by the secretary of state for India to an officer of the Indian army on compulsory retirement, to which the recipient had no claim or right, and which could be withdrawn at any time, at the discretion of the secretary of state, was not an income within the meaning of this act. See also Ex p. Wicks, 17 Ch. D. 70.

In In re Shine, (1892) 1 Q. B. 527, it was held that money to be paid to an actor by a theatre manager, weekly, for a term of two years, was salary or income, though subject to deduction when the theatre was closed. Lord Esher, M. R., said: "I cannot doubt that the sum payable to the bankrupt under this agreement is a 'salary,' but at any rate it is income."

But in In re Jones, (1891) 2 Q. B. 231, it was held that wages earned by workmen employed in a colliery were not salary or income. The court followed Ex p. Benwell, 14 Q. B. D. 301, supra, in holding that income must be ejusdem generis with salary.

Stock, Dividends, Surplus, Etc. — In Smith's Estate, 140 Pa. St. 352, it was said: "It is well settled in this state that when the stock of a corporation is, by the will of a decedent, given in trust, the income thereof for the use of a beneficiary for life, with remainder over, the surplus profits which have accumulated in the lifetime of the testator, but which are not divided until after his death, belong to the corpus of his estate; whilst the dividends of earnings made after his death are income, and are payable to the life tenant, no matter whether the dividend be in cash, or scrip, or stock." See also Simpson v. Moore, 30 Barb. (N. Y.) 637; Moss's Appeal, 83 Pa. St. 264; Oliver's Estate, 136 Pa. St. 43.

Where a testator devised the income of his estate which consisted of shares of stock in a corporation, it was held that the word income did not include the surplus funds accumulated at the time of the death of the testator, but did include the accumulation on the stock after the death of the testator. Earp's Appeal, 28 Pa. St. 368. See also Park's Estate, 173 Pa. St. 195.

A testatrix gave her estate in trust to pay to her daughter one thousand four hundred dollars annually from the income, and the remainder of the income to her son. Part of the trust fund was stock in two corporations. One ordered an increase of stock, to be distributed to the old stockholders on payment of seventy-five dollars per share; the trustee sold the privilege to subscribe. The other corporation made a similar order, the trustee advanced money, subscribed for the stock, sold it at an advance, and carried what was received in both cases to the trust account. It was held that these items were income and not capital. The court said: "The case is not within the decision in Earp's Appeal, 28 Pa. St. 368, though falling clearly within its principle. There the actual earnings of Robert Earp's stock made before his death were held to constitute a part of his capital at his decease, while the earnings made afterwards were income only. The principle established in that case is that the earnings or profits of stock made after death are income and not capital, even though in form of capital by the issue of new stock. Equity, seeking the substance of things, found that the new stock was but a product, and was therefore income. Precisely so it is here; equity discovers the subject of controversy is a mere product — a right incidental to the stock — and is therefore income." Wiltbank's Appeal, 64 Pa. St. 256.

INCOME TAX. — See the title TAXATION.

Where the income and interest of shares of stock were bequeathed for life with remainder over, and after the death of the testator the company increased its capital by offering to its shareholders the option to subscribe new stock at par, and the executors sold the option in the market, and it appeared that a slight depreciation followed the issue of the new stock, it was held that the sum realized by the sale of the options, though greater in amount than was necessary to make up this depreciation, was all to be accounted capital and not income. Biddle's Appeal, 99 Pa. St. 278, 14 Cent. L. J. 253. See also Vinton's Appeal, 99 Pa. St. 434, 14 Cent. L. J. 273.

A will created a trust for the testator's children, the "rents, dividends, increase, and income" to be paid to them annually. Part of the fund consisted of shares of a fire insurance company. The company increased its capital and issued new stock, part of which was apportioned to the trustees. They sold part of the right to subscribe at a profit, and bought a larger number of the new shares. The dividends on the whole stock were smaller after the issue of the new stock. It was held that the right to subscribe for the new stock, the profit on the sale of part of the right, and the new shares became part of the principal of the fund, and not income or "increase." Brinley v. Grou, 50 Conn. 66, 47 Am. Rep. 618.

In Spooner v. Phillips, 62 Conn. 62, it was held that the word income has a broader meaning than "dividends," but that the term is not broad enough to include anything not separated in some way from the principal; that accumulated surplus, so long as it is retained by the corporation, either as surplus or increased stock, can in no proper sense be called income. To the same effect see Mills v. Britton, 64 Conn. 23. But that income may sometimes be used synonymously with "dividends" see Lord v. Brooks, 52 N. H. 75. See also Clarkson v. Clarkson, 18 Barb. (N. Y.) 646.

Where, by will, certificates of stock are bequeathed in trust for the legatee and his children, the income to be paid to him during his life, and remainder to his children, with remainder over in the event of their death, a dividend in certificates of indebtedness, in addition to a cash dividend, will be considered a part of such income. Millen v. Guerrard, (Ga. 1881) 14 Cent. L. J. 214.

Same — Money Recovered. — A bank, duly authorized, reduced the par value of its shares in consequence of certain supposed losses. Upon the recovery of the sums supposed to have been lost, it issued additional stock to its shareholders. It was held that a legatee having a right for life to the income of certain shares under a will approved prior to these changes was not entitled to an unconditional certificate of the new dividend stock. Parker v. Mason, 8 R. I. 429.

Value. — In Betts v. Betts, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 4 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 400, it was held that "annual income" meant annual receipts, and was not equivalent to "annual value." This case was upon the construction of a restriction in the charter of a corporation upon holding property which should exceed a specified annual income.

Income Derived from Property Subject to Taxation. (See also the title TAXATION.) — A Massachusetts statute provided that no income should be taxed which was derived from property subject to taxation. It was held that income derived from dealing in merchandise was not within the statute. The court said: "The income from a 'profession, trade, or employment,' which is taxable under our system of laws, is an entirely different thing from the capital invested in the business, or the stock of goods in the purchase of which the whole or part of such capital may have been expended. The income meant by the statute is the income for the year, and is the result of the year's business. It is the net result of many combined influences; the use of the capital invested; the personal labor and services of the members of the firm; the skill and ability with which they lay in, or from time to time renew, their stock; the carefulness and good judgment with which they sell and give credit; and the foresight and address with which they hold themselves prepared for the fluctuations and contingencies affecting the general commerce and business of the country. To express it in a more summary and comprehensive form, it is the creation of capital, industry, and skill." Wilcox v. Middlesex County, 103 Mass. 545.

1. Absolutely Incompatible. — In a prosecution for murder the court refused to give the following instruction: "In order to justify the inference of legal guilt from circumstantial evidence, the existence of the inculpatory facts must be absolutely incompatible with the innocence of the accused, and incapable of explanation upon any other reasonable hypothesis than that of his guilt." On appeal, it was held that the words "absolutely incompatible," as contained in the instruction, implied that the proof of the defendant's guilt must be established beyond the possibility of a doubt, and for that reason the court did not err in refusing the instruction. State v. Rover, 13 Nev. 17. See generally the title REASONABLE DOUBT.

Divorce. — See the title DIVORCE, vol. 9, p. 816.

Public Officers. (See also the title PUBLIC OFFICERS.) — In People v. Green, (C. Pl. Spec. T.) 46 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 170, it was said: "According to an early authority incompatibility as to office is divided into two classes. 'Offices are said to be incompatible and inconsistent so as to be executed by the same person, first, when, from the multiplicity of business in them, they cannot be executed with care and ability; or, second, when, their being subordinate and interfering with each other, it induces a presumption that they cannot be executed with impartiality and honesty.' 4 Inst. 100; Bac. Abr., tit. Office, K. Among the multitude of cases reported containing adjudications as to what constitutes incompatibility in offices, illustrations are found of the latter class, and none whatever in the former. Indeed, where the question arose concerning the incumbent of two offices which bore no relation subordinating one to the other, it has been invariably held that they were not incompatible." See also 4 Inst. 310; Rex v. Pate-man, 2 T. R. 777; Verrier v. Sandwich, 1 Sid. 305; Dyer's Case, 2 Dyer, 1586; Rex v. Godwin, 1 Dougl. 307; Milward v. Thatcher, 2 T. R. 82; Rex v. 1. Incompetency. — Brandt v. Godwin, (N. Y. City Ct. Tr. T.) 3 N. Y. Supp. 811. This case was upon the construction of a contract with a singer, which provided that the singer should not be discharged during the term of his engagement, except for incompetency. During that period he received notice that his work was not musically satisfactory. It was held that this was not an exercise of the right to discharge him for incompetency. This case was affirmed in 15 Daly (N. Y.) 456, where the court said that incompetent was not a synonym for "unsatisfactory."

INCOMPETENCY — INCOMPETENT. — Incompetency is defined to be want of sufficient power, either physical, intellectual, or moral; insufficiency; inadequacy; as, the incompetency of a child for hard labor, or of an idiot for intellectual labor.¹

Removal of Veterans. (See also the title PUBLIC OFFICERS.) — A statute provided that veterans should not be removed except for incompetency or misconduct. In construing this provision the court said: "The definition of incompetency includes 'disqualification' as well as 'inability' or 'incapacity.'" People v. Board of Health, 15 N. Y. App. Div. 275.

By a New York statute a veteran cannot be removed from office except for incompetency and conduct inconsistent with his position. In construing this statute in People v. Wright, 7 N. Y. App. Div. 193, the court said: "It is true that the statute reads 'incompetency and conduct inconsistent,' etc. We think, however, that the clear intention was to treat these phrases disjunctively. Incompetency is one thing. Conduct inconsistent with the relator's position is another. A man may be perfectly competent and yet be guilty of some heinous conduct for which he should be removed. If, therefore, notwithstanding the relator's competency, he was guilty of what is charged in this connection, his general efficiency should not save him."

In People v. Board of Health, 153 N. Y. 513, the word incompetency was held to refer to the capacity of a legally appointed incumbent to fill the place, not to eligibility to appointment, and hence not to entitle a de facto officer to a hearing as to whether he had passed the required civil service examination.

Master and Servant. (See also the titles FELLOW SERVANTS, vol. 12, p. 909; MASTER AND SERVANT.) — "Incompetence is by no means confined to mere inability to do properly the particular work required. It goes to reliability in all that is essential to make up a reasonably safe person, considering the nature of the work and the general safety of those who are required to associate with such person in the general employment. A person may be competent to do the particular acts required of a fireman, yet be so careless in respect to obeying the rules that prohibit him from interfering with appliances not connected with his work as to render him an exceedingly dangerous and incompetent person to be associated with. The rule is tersely stated in the opinion of Mr. Justice Brown, in Coppins v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co. 122 N. Y. 557, substantially thus: 'A competent man is a reliable man. Incompetency exists not alone in physical or mental attributes, but in the disposition with which a person performs his duties, and though he may be physically and mentally able to do all that is required of him, his disposition toward his work, and toward his employer, and toward his fellow servants, may make him an incompetent man.'" Maitland v. Gilbert Paper Co., 97 Wis. 489.

In Curran v. A. H. Stange Co., 98 Wis. 598, it was held that incompetency in a mechanic might arise from mere lack of practice of his trade for several years.

A complaint stated that the defendant employed an incompetent servant to take charge of the boilers and engines in its blast furnace, and that the plaintiff was injured by a negligent act of such servant. The court said: "In applying the foregoing rule it is important to look to the meaning of the words incompetent and 'negligent,' as ordinarily understood. The former means want of ability for the purpose (Stand. Dict.); not adequate, sufficient, fit, suitable, or capable (Webst. Dict.). The latter means careless, heedless, liability to omit what ought to be done, want of attention (Stand. Dict.); habitually omitting, careless, heedless, neglectful, incompetent, thoughtless, or regardless (Webst. Dict.). So it is clear that the word incompetent signifies either ignorance of how to do a thing perfectly, or that mental make-up or acquired habit which renders one neglectful, careless, and incompetent, though possessing sufficient knowledge and experience to do with reasonable care and skill the work in hand. In such circumstances the inattention or carelessness refers, not to a particular act, but to general character, so as to affect, in fact, the capacity of the person for the work he is employed to do." Kliefoth v. Northwestern Iron Co., 98 Wis. 499.

Malpractice. (See also the title MALPRACTICE.) — In an action against a veterinary surgeon for malpractice, the petition alleged that the defendant was and is incompetent. The petition was held insufficient. The court said: "No doubt an action will lie against a veterinary surgeon for gross ignorance and want of skill as well as for negligence (Seare v. Prentice, 8 East 348); but there is no charge of this kind unless the word incompetent includes such charge, which it does not necessarily, as the incompetency may arise from physical defects, as impaired vision or other like cause." Barney v. Pinkham, 39 Neb. 352.

Incredibility — Witnesses. — An instruction touching a witness who had pleaded guilty of the crime of forgery, in which the words incompetent and "incredible" were used as synonymous terms, was held to be correct. In re Noble, 22 Ill. App. 537. See also the title WITNESSES.

Incompetent and Incapable as Synonymous. — The word incompetent, as used in How. Stat. Mich., § 6314, which provides for notice to a supposed incompetent person of the time and place of hearing an application for the appointment of a guardian for him, is synonymous with the word "incapable," as used in How. Stat. Mich., § 6315, which provides for the appointment of a guardian if, on the hearing, it shall appear that the person is incapable of taking care of himself and managing his property. Matter of Leonard, 95 Mich. 296. See also the title INSANITY, post.

Same — Fiduciaries. — In Matter of Blinn, 99 Cal. 221, it was said: "The legislature has classified death, insanity, and conviction of an infamous offense under the designation 'incapable,' and other matters affecting the integrity or qualification for the discharge of the duties of an administrator as incompetency. The embezzler, the thief, the man who hesitates at no fraudulent scheme to despoil an estate, or who is so careless and indifferent as to habitually and grossly neglect his duties, may have capacity to properly discharge all the duties of an administrator, but the man who is dead, or insane, or civiliter mortuus, is 'incapable.' Whether the word incompetent was wisely chosen or not, the context leaves no room to doubt the sense in which it was used, and that it was used to designate a different class from those characterized as 'incapable.'"

Fiduciaries — Incompetent in the Sense of Unfitness. — Stephenson v. Stephenson, 4 Jones L. (49 N. Car.) 473. See also the titles EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, vol. 11, p. 720; TRUSTS AND TRUSTEES.

Incompetency as Applied to Guardianship. — The New York statutes authorize the removal of a testamentary guardian by the surrogate having jurisdiction in the premises on the ground of his incompetency, or of his wasting the real or personal estate of his ward, or of any misconduct in relation to his duties as guardian. In construing this provision the court said: "The word incompetency, as applied to guardianship, is one, in my judgment, of broad signification and comprehensiveness, like the word 'unsuitableness,' as applied to a trustee. In my opinion it has relation, not merely to the mental condition and moral status of a testamentary guardian, but imports that, in the interests of the child in respect of nurture, care, education, and safety, the court may take into consideration the relative social and pecuniary position of the guardian and the infant." Damarell v. Walker, 2 Redf. (N. Y.) 205. See also the title GUARDIAN AND WARD, vol. 15, p. 47.

Assignee. — A New York statute provided for the removal of an assignee for misconduct or incompetency. In construing this statute in Matter of Cohn, 78 N. Y. 252, the court said: "The words 'misconduct' and incompetency, as used in this statute, have no technical meaning. The two were intended to embrace all the reasons for which an assignee ought to be removed. The power of summary removal conferred upon the county judge, sitting as a court, was intended to be as broad as the exigencies of the case might require. This power could not be less than that possessed by a court of equity."

1. Inconsistency and Repugnance. — In Swan v. U. S., 3 Wyo. 153, it was said: "One definition given by the lexicons of inconsistency is 'repugnance,' and one definition given of 'repugnance' is inconsistency. These words, though not exactly synonymous, may be, and often are, used interchangeably."

2. Incontinency — Slander. (See also the title LIBEL AND SLANDER.) — To constitute the offense of slandering an innocent woman by allegations of incontinency it is necessary to prove that the words alleged to have been spoken amounted to a charge of actual definitive illicit sexual intercourse. State v. Moody, 98 N. Car. 672. See also State v. Davis, 92 N. Car. 764; State v. Brown, 100 N. Car. 519; McBrayer v. Hill, 4 Ired. L. (26 N. Car.) 136; State v. Aldridge, 86 N. Car. 680.

In Lucas v. Nichols, 7 Jones L. (52 N. Car.) 35, Manly, J., said: "Incontinency means want of restraint in regard to sexual indulgence, and imports, according to our statute, definitive illicit sexual intercourse."

In Watts v. Greenlee, 2 Dev. L. (13 N. Car.) 87, 119, Henderson, C. J., said that the word incontinent "cannot be understood, when generally applied to a female, to mean anything else but that she is unchaste."

3. McCreary v. Skinner, 75 Iowa 413, in which case it was held error to instruct that the evidence to sustain the inference of fraud must be natural and incontrovertible.

means to form into a legal body, or body politic; to constitute into a corporation recognized by law as persons with special functions, rights, and duties; as, to incorporate a bank, a railroad company, or the like.¹ The word "incorporate" means united in one body.²

INCORPOREAL. — See note 3.

1. Incorporate. — Copeland v. Memphis, etc., R. Co., 3 Woods (U. S.) 651, 6 Fed. Cas. No. 3,209, in which case it was held that there was no ambiguity in the title of an act which declared its purpose to be "to incorporate the Memphis and Charleston Railroad Company."

A statute provided that every joint-stock company or corporation "incorporated under any law of this state" should make a report, by its president, to the comptroller, of its capital and dividends. In construing this provision the court said: "The word incorporated, as here used, is not to be taken in a technical or restricted meaning and confined to an association brought into being according to the formula of a statute, but as including any combination of individuals upon terms which embody or adopt as rules or regulations of business the enabling provisions of the statutes." People v. Wemple, 117 N. Y. 147.

Incorporation. — A statute authorized a town to raise money by taxation for the purpose of celebrating any centennial anniversary of its incorporation. It was held that the statute referred to the act which was the beginning of the town's corporate existence, whether as a district or a town. Hill v. Selectmen, 140 Mass. 381.

Incorporated Bank. — This term, as used in a Massachusetts statute, was held to include banks chartered since the passage of the act, as well as those then existing. Com. v. Tenney, 97 Mass. 50.

Incorporated City. — In New York, etc., R. Co. v. Drummond, 46 N. J. L. 646, it was said: "I should hesitate to say that a borough, so called, of any or what size, can be considered as within the term 'incorporated city.' Town is generic. Of the genus, cities and boroughs are species. Had the exception been 'incorporated towns,' Asbury Park would be in it, but when an act of legislation speaks of 'incorporated cities,' the most obvious, if not necessary, subjects of the application of such law are localities that are cities by legislative designation."

In Elma v. Carney, 4 Wash. 419, it was held that the term "incorporated city" applied to municipal corporations and not to towns.

The Constitution of Indiana provided that no county should subscribe for stock in any incorporated company unless the stock should be paid for at the time of subscription. It was held that the words "incorporated company" as thus used, referred to those associations which were created for public benefit and for which the government delegated a portion of its sovereign power to be exercised for public utility, such as turnpikes, bridges, canals, and railroad companies. Lafayette, etc., R. Co. v. Geiger, 34 Ind. 185. See generally the title MUNICIPAL AID.

Incorporated Company. — In U. S. v. Trinidad Coal, etc., Co., 137 U. S. 169, it was said: "An incorporated company is an association of individuals acting as a single person, and by their corporate name."

Incorporated Town. (See generally the title TOWNS AND TOWNSHIPS.) — In Harris v. Schryock, 82 Ill. 121, it was said: "Whilst the word 'town' is sometimes employed to designate a township, the term 'incorporated town' is seldom, if ever, employed to embrace such a body."

In People v. Harvey, 142 Ill. 573, it was held that a town created under township organization was not an incorporated town within the meaning of a statute allowing the incorporation of municipal corporations in territories, not included within the limits of an incorporated town.

Joint-stock Companies. (See also the title JOINT-STOCK COMPANIES.) — In Gregg v. Sanford, 65 Fed. Rep. 151, it was held that within a tax statute a joint-stock company was not an incorporated company in Pennsylvania. But compare People v. Wemple, 117 N. Y. 147.

2. Incorporated. — Toledo, etc., R. Co. v. Cupp, 8 Ind. App. 389. This case arose upon the question of whether a certain plat was incorporated in a bill of exceptions.

3. Inc corporeal Hereditament. (See also HEREDITAMENTS, vol. 15, p. 337.) In Barton v. Rushton, 4 Desaus. (S. Car.) 384, it was said: "Judge Blackstone says that hereditaments, to use the largest expression, are of two kinds, corporeal and incorporeal. Corporeal consist of such as affect the senses, such as may be seen and handled by the body. Incorporeal are not of sensation; can neither be seen nor handled, are creatures of the mind, and can only exist in contemplation."

An incorporeal hereditament is "a right issuing out of a thing corporate (whether real or personal), or concerning, or annexed to, or exercisable within, the same. It is not the thing corporate itself, which may consist in lands, houses, jewels, or the like, but something collateral thereto, as a rent issuing out of those lands or houses." In re Christmas, 33 Ch. D. 338, 55 L. J. Ch. 880, quoting 2 Black. Com. 20. See also Walker v. Daly, 80 Wis. 227; Reynolds v. Cook, 83 Va. 817.

Inc corporeal Property. — In State v. Georgia Medical Soc., 38 Ga. 626, it was said: "Property, says Bouvier, volume 2, page 381, is divided into corporeal and incorporeal. The former comprehends such property as is perceptible to the senses, as lands, houses, goods, merchandise, and the like; the latter consists in legal rights, as choses in action, easements, and the like."

Inc corporeal Real Property. — In Nellis v. Munson, 108 N. Y. 458, it was said: "Inc corporeal real property is defined to be a right issuing out of or annexed to a thing corporeal, and consists of the right to have some part only of the produce or benefit of the corporeal property, or to exercise a right or have an easement or privilege or advantage over or out of it."

INCREASE. (See also the titles ACCESSION, vol. 1, p. 247; ACCRETION, vol. 1, p. 47; and see INCOME, ante, p. 147.) — Increase is that which is added to the original stock by augmentation or growth; produce; profits; interest; progeny; issue; offspring; increment.¹

1. Increase. — Alferitz v. Ingalls, 83 Fed. Rep. 974. In this case it was held that wool was the natural increase of sheep and was included in the term "sheep and the increase thereof." Compare Alferitz v. Borgwardt, 126 Cal. 201.

"The word increase, from cresco, to grow, originally meant growth. It has acquired other meanings by use, but some are figurative, and others, which at first seem not to be growth, upon examination will be seen to be strictly so. When we speak of the 'earth's increase,' meaning the annual crops, it is evident that the word is used figuratively. If we speak of interest on money as increase, we refer to the sum of money at interest which is thereby increased; this is growth. Similarly, when we refer to rents, profits, and other gains as increase, it is the fortune of the owner which thereby is made to grow. When we speak of the increase of a herd of cattle or a flock of sheep we refer to growth of the herd or flock by addition of new members." Alferitz v. Borgwardt, 126 Cal. 206.

Increase of Live Stock. (See also the title COMMUNITY PROPERTY, vol. 6, p. 293.) — As applied to live stock belonging to the wife's separate property, the increase of such property has been invariably recognized by the Texas courts to denote the progeny of the original stock or their descendants. Stringfellow v. Sorrells, 82 Tex. 277. See also Howard v. York, 20 Tex. 670; De Blane v. Lynch, 23 Tex. 25.

A statute authorized chattel mortgages on certain domestic animals and the increase thereof. It was held that the word increase imported only the natural increase or offspring of such animals and did not include the profit arising from the use of the animals by the mortgagor while he remained in possession. Alferitz v. Borgwardt, 126 Cal. 201. Compare Alferitz v. Ingalls, 83 Fed. Rep. 974.

A mortgage upon the increase of sheep has been confined to natural increase and held not to include additions to the flock by purchase. Wenster v. Power, L. R. 1 P. C. 150.

Slaves. — In Reno v. Davis, 4 Hen. & M. (Va.) 283, it was held that the word increase, without the word "future" prefixed, in a bequest of a female slave, was ambiguous, and if the intention of the testator in using it could not be ascertained from the whole will taken together, parol evidence was permissible to explain it.

In Puller v. Puller, 3 Rand. (Va.) 87, it was said: "The broad proposition which it appears to me, must be contended for in this case, to wit, that a bequest of a female slave and her increase is a bequest of her and her progeny, as well those in being as those to be born thereafter, unless the enlarged operation of that word shall be restricted by the word 'future,' or by a bequest of part of the progeny to some one else, so as thus to evince a restricted use of that term, it seems to me cannot be sustained."

In Donald v. Dendy, 2 McMull L. (S. Car.)

130, the term was held to apply only to children born after the making of the will.

In Carswell v. Schley, 56 Ga. 111, it was said: "The word increase, wherever used in the settlement, means natural increase; and such increase, in the case of slaves, would go to enlarge the corpus; and we think it was not the intention of the parties here to vary that general rule."

The word increase includes children, grandchildren, etc., issue of the body. Where, therefore, a will gave a female slave and her child to A, and then gave the woman and her increase over after the death of A, it was held that this bequest over included the child mentioned in the first bequest. Moye v. Moye, 5 Jones Eq. (58 N. Car.) 359. But see Carroll v. Hancock, 3 Jones L. (48 N. Car.) 473.

Increase per Annum. — Where the resolutions of a company provided that a bookkeeper's salary should be "increased one hundred and four dollars per annum," it was held that the words used were only a mode of computation, and did not extend the hiring for a year. Stanford v. Fisher Varnish Co., 43 N. J. L. 153.

Increased Value. — Of the use of this term in a local assessment act, the court said: "The phrases 'benefits' and 'increased value' may, therefore, be regarded as convertible terms; and if the constitutional provision referred to is to be considered as applicable to this kind of taxation, it would seem that the spirit, if not the very letter, of its injunctions has been embodied in the act. The tax is exactly proportioned according to the increased value of the lot, which is the same thing as the value of the 'benefit' which the owner receives from the improvement." Garrett v. St. Louis, 25 Mo. 511. See also the title SPECIAL ASSESSMENTS.

Increase of Salary. — In Crosman v. Nightingill, 1 Nev. 323, it was held that a law making the lieutenant-governor of the state of Nevada ex officio warden of the state prison and allowing to him a salary for such services did not conflict with a provision of the state constitution that no increase of compensation of certain officers should take effect during the term for which they had been elected. The court said: "It would be putting a construction too restricted upon the constitutional limitation to hold that the provision which prohibits the increase of salary or compensation would prevent the holding of two offices by the same person, or the receipt of the salary of both by the same individual."

Increase in the Sense of Heirs. — A bequest to A and her increase, without any allusion to a particular estate in her, and without any terms to qualify or control the meaning of increase, was held to confer upon A the absolute property. Holderby v. Holderby, 4 Jones Eq. (57 N. Car.) 241.

Increase of Land — Texas Act as to Wife's Separate Property. — A Texas statute provided that all property, both real and personal, of the wife, owned by her before marriage, and the increase of all lands or slaves, should be the separate property of the wife. In De Blane v. Lynch, 23 Tex. 25, the court refused to interpret the word increase, as applied to land, as meaning that which grows out of it or is produced by its cultivation. The court said: "In an etymological sense it cannot be doubted that the word increase as applied to land, or to the soil, means that which grows out of it, or that which is produced by the cultivation of it. The word is frequently employed in this sense in the English Bible. Instances of it will be found in the twenty-fifth chapter of the Book of Leviticus. It is there said: 'And for thy cattle, and for the beast that are in thy land, shall all the increase thereof be meat.' Again, it is said: 'Behold, we shall not sow nor gather in our increase.' So in the sixty-seventh Psalm, the expression occurs, 'Then shall the earth yield her increase.'" See also Holland v. Seward, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas., § 944; Seligson v. Staples, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas., § 1070; Cleveland v. Cole, 6 Tex. 405. And see the title COMMUNITY PROPERTY, vol. 6, p. 293.

Under this act it was held that where the husband took funds of his wife and engaged in the occupation of buying and selling real property, the profits derived from his transactions belonged to his wife, as increase of the land. Evans v. Purinton, 12 Tex. Civ. App. 158.

Natural Increase — Dividends. — A Georgia statute provided that the natural increase of property should belong to the tenant for life. In Millen v. Guerrard, 67 Ga. 284, it was held that dividends, whether in cash or bonds or certificates of indebtedness, are the natural increase of stock, and not an accumulation of the corpus; nor is this doctrine affected by the fact that no dividends are declared on the stock for some time, and when they are declared the amount is unusually large. Therefore, such dividends belong to the life tenant, and not to the remainderman.

1. Incriminating Circumstances. — In an instruction the trial court used this language: "And if the jury find from the evidence that all the incriminating circumstances upon which the prosecution relies for a conviction will as well apply to some other person or persons as to the defendant, or if such facts and circumstances are reconcilable with any reasonable theory or hypothesis other than the guilt of the defendant, or if such facts and circumstances, together with the direct evidence offered in this case, do not satisfy the minds of the jury, beyond any reasonable doubt, of the guilt of the defendant, then you should, by your verdict, acquit him." It was held that the use by the court of the expression "incriminating circumstances," if error, was without prejudice to the prisoner. The reviewing court said: "The criticism made upon this instruction is the use by the District Court of the phrase 'incriminating circumstances.'"

'Incriminate' means to charge with a crime, and an incriminating circumstance is one which tends to show that a crime had been committed, or that some particular person committed it." Davis v. State, 51 Neb. 323.

2. Incuplating. — Where, on a trial for train wrecking, it was shown that the accused, of his own motion, undertook to point out, and did point out, the places at which certain tools were secreted with which the evidence indicated that the alleged wreck had been committed, it was not error for the trial judge to instruct the jury: "If you believe from the evidence in this case, and find there was any evidence upon that question, that the defendant, without any information from any one else, pointed out the places where the tools were found, and they were the tools that were used in wrecking the train, that would be an incuplating circumstance that you might consider in this case with reference to his guilt, in connection with other evidence." It was held that the use of the word incuplating in the connection in which it was employed did not amount to the expression or intimation of an opinion respecting the guilt or innocence of the accused. Shaw v. State, 102 Ga. 664.

3. Incumbent. — By the California Political Code it is provided that "an office becomes vacant on the happening of either of the following events before the expiration of the term: 1. The death of the incumbent. * * * 9. His refusal or neglect to file his official oath or bond within the time prescribed." It was held that, in order to effectuate the intention of the legislature, this provision must be construed as regarding "the person duly elected to an office as the incumbent of that office from the time of the commencement of the term for which he was elected until the expiration thereof, whether he qualifies or not." People v. Taylor, 57 Cal. 622. See also Rosborough v. Boardman, 67 Cal. 116.

But in People v. Ward, 107 Cal. 236, it was held that a person who has not taken the position or entered upon the discharge of the duties of his office cannot be charged with misfeasance or malfeasance as an incumbent.

An incumbent of an office is a person in possession of the office; and a person who has not qualified or entered upon the duties of the office, and who dies before the commencement of the term, cannot be said to be an incumbent. State v. Benedict, 15 Minn. 198. Compare Scott County v. Ring, 29 Minn. 403.

A statute prohibiting the holding by one person of more than one public office at the same time provided that nothing therein contained should be applicable to the present incumbent of two or more official positions until their term of office should expire. Upon the question whether the defendant was within the proviso, the court said, "I cannot concur with counsel that a man appointed or elected to an office thereby becomes an in-

INCUMBRANCE—INCUMBER. (See also the titles COVENANTS, vol. 8, p. 122; FIRE INSURANCE, vol. 13, p. 258; LIENS; LIS PENDENS; MORTGAGES.) — I. An incumbrance is a burden upon land depreciative of its value, such as a lien, easement, or servitude, which, though adverse to the interest of the landowner, does not conflict with his conveyance of the land in fee.¹

Incumbent of that office. An incumbent of an office is one who is legally authorized to discharge the duties of that office. For instance, a man who is elected county treasurer is required to give bonds and take an oath of office. Now, these things must be done before he can discharge the duties of the office; and if not done in due time, the office itself is vacant. There is no incumbent. So, where a man is elected judge, he does not, by the election, become a judge. He must receive a commission, as evidence of his authority to act; must take an oath of office, and have it indorsed on his commission. When this is done, and not before, he is an incumbent of the office." State v. McCollister, 11 Ohio 50, citing State v. Moffitt, 5 Ohio 358.

Other Definitions. — An incumbrance is defined to be any right to or interest in land which may subsist in a third person to the diminution of the value of the land, and not inconsistent with the passing of the fee in it by a deed of conveyance. Bouv. L. Dict.; 2 Greenleaf on Evidence, § 242; Alling v. Burlock, 46 Conn. 510; Kelsey v. Remer, 43 Conn. 138; Campbell v. Hamilton Mut. Ins. Co., 51 Me. 72; Prescott v. Trueman, 4 Mass. 630; Post v. Campau, 42 Mich. 90; Fritz v. Pusey, 31 Minn. 368; Sessions v. Irwin, 8 Neb. 8; Burr v. Lamaster, 30 Neb. 693; Huyck v. Andrews, 113 N. Y. 81, 10 Am. St. Rep. 432; Forster v. Scott, 136 N. Y. 582; Batley v. Foerderer, 162 Pa. St. 466.

In Newcomb v. Fiedler, 24 Ohio St. 466, it was said that an incumbrance, in the legal meaning of that term, is an estate or interest in, or a right to, the land granted, to the diminution of its value.

An incumbrance is defined to be a burden, an obstruction, an impediment. As applied to an estate in lands, it may fairly include whatever charges, burdens, obstructs, or impairs its use or prevents or impedes its transfer. Anderson's L. Dict., followed in Willsie v. Rapid Valley Horse-Ranch Co., 7 S. Dak. 121; Wetmore v. Bruce, 118 N. Y. 319; Anonymous, (N. Y. Super. Ct. Spec. T.) 2 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 63.

An incumbrance is a legal claim in favor of one person on the estate of another. Robinson v. Wiley, 15 N. Y. 492.

In Stout v. Dunning, 72 Ind. 346, it was said: "Burden, clog, load, impediment, are synonyms of incumbrance."

In Post v. Campau, 42 Mich. 94, it was said: "Anything is an incumbrance which constitutes a burden upon the title; a right of way, Clark v. Swift, 3 Met. (Mass.) 392; a condition which may work a forfeiture of the estate, Jenks v. Ward, 4 Met. (Mass.) 412; a right to take off timber, Cathcart v. Bowman, 5 Pa. St.

317; a right of dower, whether assigned or unassigned, Runnells v. Webber, 59 Me. 488."

Absolute Conveyance. — "An absolute conveyance is an incumbrance in the fullest sense of that term." Warden v. Sabins, 36 Kan. 169.

Building Restrictions. (See generally the title BUILDING RESTRICTIONS AND RESTRICTIVE AGREEMENTS, vol. 5, p. 2.) — In Kountze v. Helmuth, 67 Hun (N. Y.) 343, a building restriction was held to be an incumbrance. To the same effect see Roberts v. Levy, (C. Pl. Spec. T.) 3 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 311.

It seems that where the prohibition in a deed of the erection of buildings includes only wooden structures prohibited by city ordinance or general law, the restriction is not open to objection by the vendee as an incumbrance upon the title. Batley v. Foerderer, 162 Pa. St. 460.

Cloud on Title. (See also the title CLOUD ON TITLE, vol. 6, p. 149.) — In a legal sense the word incumbrance means "an estate, interest, or right in lands, diminishing their value to the general owner; a paramount right in or weight upon land which may lessen its value." Abbott's L. Dict., quoted in Thomson v. Locke, 66 Tex. 387.

Claims. — In Johnson v. Hollensworth, 48 Mich. 140, it was held that incumbrances were claims, and that a covenant against all claims must be held to embrace all incumbrances.

Condition Subsequent. — In Anonymous, (N. Y. Super. Ct. Spec. T.) 2 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 56, a condition subsequent, though grafted upon the estate at the time of its creation, was held to constitute an incumbrance. See also Jenks v. Ward, 4 Met. (Mass.) 412.

Devise. — If land which is subject to an easement is devised "subject to the incumbrances thereon," the fact that the testator had been in the habit of using the land in connection with his adjoining land does not make such mode of use an incumbrance; nor is such a construction aided by the fact that the testator devised his remaining land to two persons in severalty, and imposed an easement on each part for the benefit of the other. Sullivan v. Ryan, 130 Mass. 116.

Ditch. — The estimated value of the labor of constructing a ditch, awarded to the owner of lands through which it passed, by the commissioners of a county, under the Ohio Act of April 12, 1871 (68 Ohio L. 60), was held not an incumbrance on such lands, for which a recovery might be had for a breach of the covenant against incumbrances in the deed conveying the land, against the vendor, by a vendee who became the purchaser thereof after the ditch was established and such estimate made, and before such work was let by the commissioners. Newcomb v. Fiedler, 24 Ohio St. 463.

Dower. (See generally the title DOWER, vol. 10, p. 122.) — A right of dower is an incumbrance. Runnells v. Webber, 59 Me. 488.

Same — Debt. — By an act of Delaware there

II. With reference to streets and highways the term "incumbrance" is was secured to a widow her dower in all lands in which her husband was seized during the marriage, free and discharged from all debts, liens, and incumbrances, except those liens and incumbrances which existed prior to the act. In Griffin v. Reece, 1 Harr. (Del.) 512, it was held that simple debts were not excepted under the term "liens and incumbrances." Compare Brinckloe v. Brinckloe, (1829) Laws of Del. 168, note.

Eminent Domain. — The provision of the New York Consolidation Act of 1882 (Laws 1882, c. 410, § 677), which declares that no compensation shall be allowed to the owner of land taken for a street for any building erected or placed thereon, after the filing of a map of the street as prescribed by the act (section 672), by its terms imposes a restriction upon the use of the land which amounts to an incumbrance, and so is unconstitutional. Forster v. Scott, 136 N. Y. 577.

Homestead Exemption. — In Robinson v. Wiley, 15 N. Y. 489, reversing 19 Barb. (N. Y.) 161, it was held that the representation by the owner of the house that there was no claim or incumbrance thereon was not shown to be false by proving that he had previously filed a notice required by the New York Act of 1850, to exempt such house as his homestead from sale on execution.

Illegal Claim — Cloud upon Title. — In Thomson v. Locke, 66 Tex. 387, it was said that the word incumbrance in a popular sense might include an illegal claim set up to land, under such state of facts as would apparently give title, when in fact no title existed.

Judgment. — In Lodge v. Capital Ins. Co., 91 Iowa 103, it was held that a judgment against the insured after issuance of a fire-insurance policy to him was not an incumbrance within the meaning of the policy, the court defining incumbrances to mean voluntary incumbrances. See also Horsford v. Hartford Ins. Co., 127 U. S. 404; Walton v. Hargrove, 42 Miss. 18; Owens v. Farmers' Joint Stock Ins. Co., 57 Barb. (N. Y.) 518; Green v. Homestead F. Ins. Co., 82 N. Y. 517; Grevenmeyer v. Southern Mut. F. etc., Co., 62 Pa. St. 340.

In Rodgers v. Bonner, 45 N. Y. 387, it was held that a judgment lien was not an incumbrance within the meaning of Code Pro. N. Y., § 132, which provided for the filing of a lis pendens and the priority of incumbrances. The court said: "A judgment lien is not an incumbrance within the meaning of the section. A judgment is not a specific lien upon any particular real estate of the judgment debtor, but a general lien upon all his real estate, subject to all prior liens, either legal or equitable, irrespective of any knowledge of the judgment creditor as to the existence of such liens. There is no reason for holding that it was the intention of the section under consideration to change the law in this respect."

But in Willis v. Rapid Valley Horse-Ranch Co., 7 S. Dak. 114, it was held that the lien of a docketed judgment constitutes, in the ordinary sense of the term, an incumbrance upon real property.

In Sullivan v. Barry, 46 N. J. L. 5, it was said: "Neither the word 'convey' nor in-umber, according to its ordinary signification, is expressive of the act of creating a tenancy for years in lands. The former of the terms is appropriate to the transfer of a title to a freehold, the latter to putting the property in pledge for the payment of money." To the same effect see Hoover v. Chambers, 3 Wash. Ter. 29; Norris v. Bradford, 4 Ala. 203.

But in Fritz v. Pusey, 31 Minn. 368, a lease was held to be an incumbrance in a covenant against incumbrances. To the same effect is Grice v. Scarborough, 2 Spears L. (S. Car.) 649. See also Batchelder v. Sturgis, 3 Cush. (Mass.) 201; Porter v. Bradley, 7 R. I. 538.

Local Assessment Held Not to Be Incumbrance. — Gothelf v. Stranahan, 138 N. Y. 345. See generally the title SPECIAL ASSESSMENTS.

Mechanics' Liens. (See generally the title MECHANICS' LIENS.) — A mechanics' lien has been held to be an incumbrance within the meaning of a warranty against incumbrances in a fire-insurance policy. Redmon v. Phoenix F. Ins. Co., 51 Wis. 293, 37 Am. Rep. 830. The court said: "It is insisted that in this application 'the word incumbrance is used in its popular and not its technical sense.' No case has been cited making such distinction in the use of the word incumbrance. Webster defines an incumbrance to be 'a burdensome and troublesome load;' and again, 'a burden or charge upon property; a legal claim or lien upon an estate.' It will hardly be claimed that Webster did not define the word for the use of the populace, or that he only intended such definition to include mortgages. Certainly judgments duly rendered and docketed must be regarded as incumbrances, as used in popular speech. Is not the same true with respect to a mechanic's lien?"

Mortgage. — A satisfied mortgage not discharged of record was held not an incumbrance within the meaning of a statute providing that a settlement might be gained by an inhabitant of another town, if he should possess in his own right, in fee, real estate of the value of one hundred dollars, free from any incumbrance. The court said: "It is material only so far as it is an incumbrance. It is an incumbrance to the extent of the debt or duty secured thereby. When the debt is paid or duty discharged the incumbrance ceases to exist. A satisfied mortgage is not an incumbrance within the meaning of this statute. It may be a cloud upon the title, but that is not necessarily an incumbrance. Where, as in this case, it is without force as between the parties, except to a very limited extent, and where strangers cannot be permitted to take advantage of it, we do not hesitate to hold that it is not an incumbrance." Clinton v. Westbrook, 38 Conn. 14.

And in Smith v. Niagara F. Ins. Co., 60 Vt. 682, an undischarged mortgage which had been paid was held not to be an incumbrance within an insurance policy.

Paramount Right. — A paramount right is an incumbrance within the meaning of a covenant in a conveyance of land that the land is free of all incumbrances. Prescott v. Tiue-man, 4 Mass. 627.

Party Wall. (See generally the title PARTY

sometimes used in the sense of "obstruction."¹

WALLS.—Where a person purchases a vacant lot which supports the half of the wall of a building erected on the adjoining lot, and such purchaser is, by the terms of a previous agreement entered into by his grantor, obliged to pay a part of the cost of the wall in order to use it, such agreement and wall constitute an incumbrance. Burr v. Lamaster, 30 Neb. 688. To the same effect see Mackey v. Harmon, 34 Minn. 168; O'Neil v. Van Tassel, 137 N. Y. 297.

Postnuptial Settlement.—In Swift v. Fitzhugh, 9 Port. (Ala.) 58, the court said: "The deed in this case is a postnuptial settlement, made in pursuance to an antenuptial agreement, the execution of which, had it not been voluntarily made, a court of chancery would have enforced. Such an instrument is not within either the letter or spirit of the terms 'deed of trust, mortgage, or other legal incumbrance,' as used in the Act of 1824. Property thus circumstanced cannot, in any sense, legal or popular, be said to be incumbered, as that term always implies previous ownership, and a right to incumber or subject property to the payment of a debt; whereas, in this case, Maguire never was the owner of the property—the instrument in question being merely evidence of the renunciation, before marriage, of his marital rights."

Rent Charge — Incumbrance.—Within the English Settled Land Act of 1882 it was held that the word incumbrance included a rent charge. In re Strafford, (1896) 1 Ch. 235.

Sheriff's Sale of Right of Redemption.—Where a policy of insurance upon the interest of a mortgagor was to be void if the estate should be alienated or incumbered by sale, assignment, or otherwise, and his right to redeem the property was seized and sold on a writ of execution, it was held that the sheriff's sale to a third person of the right of redemption was an incumbrance upon the property, and if the title thus acquired was perfected by lapse of time, it would constitute an alienation of it. Campbell v. Hamilton Mut. Ins. Co., 51 Me. 69.

Tax Sale.—Where property has been sold for taxes and is unredeemed, it has been held that it is incumbered within an insurance policy. Wilbur v. Bowditch Mut. F. Ins. Co., 10 Cush. (Mass.) 446.

But in Sessions v. Irwin, 8 Neb. 5, it was held that a tax deed was not an incumbrance within the meaning of a statute requiring appraisers selected by a sheriff to appraise real estate levied upon by him to enumerate the liens and incumbrances against such real estate.

Voluntary and Involuntary.—Within a policy of insurance requiring notice of incumbrances on the property insured, it was held that the term incumbrances included both voluntary and involuntary incumbrances. Brown v. Commonwealth Mut. Ins. Co., 41 Pa. St. 193. See also Thatcher v. Valentine, 22 Colo. 201.

But it has been held to refer only to voluntary incumbrances, and not to apply to incumbrances by judgment or otherwise in invitum by operation of law. Baley v. Homestead F. Ins. Co., 80 N. Y. 21, 36 Am. Rep. 570. See supra, this note, Judgment.

English Settled Land Act.—In In re Knatchbull, 27 Ch. D. 349, it was held that the term "incumbrances affecting the inheritance of the settled land," in the English Settled Land Act, 1882, must be taken to mean incumbrances in the ordinary sense, such as mortgages, portions, etc., and not terminable charges such as those which affect the tenant for life rather than the remainderman. And as to the construction of this statute see In re Stamford, 43 Ch. D. 95; In re Chaytor, 25 Ch. D. 654.

1. Streets. (See also the titles HIGHWAYS, vol. 15, p. 343; STREETS AND SIDEWALKS.)—By the charter of the city of Winona, its common council was authorized, "by ordinances, resolutions, or by-laws, * * * to prevent the incumbrance of streets, sidewalks, lanes, or alleys with carriages, carts, wagons, boxes, sleighs, fire-wood, lumber, or any other material or substance whatever." It was held that the word incumbrance was used in the sense of "obstruction," and that the authority to prevent the incumbrance of streets was an authority not only to remove or cause to be removed anything actually obstructing a street, but also to take measures to prevent anything from becoming an obstruction. Fox v. Winona, 23 Minn. 10.

Incumbrance Distinguished from Encroachment.—A statute was entitled "incumbrances and encroachments upon highways." In State v. Kean, (N. H. 1897) 45 Atl. Rep. 257, the court said: "The legislature understood encroachment and incumbrance to be different evils requiring different remedies. An object is not an incumbrance in a highway unless it obstructs the use of the way, while an encroachment is an unlawful gaining upon the right or possession of another, as where a man sets his fence beyond his line. Bouv. Law Dict. Thus the title furnishes evidence that the object of the statute was the preservation of the limits of the public right, not the prevention of obstruction to travel."

Street Railroads. (See also the title STREET RAILROADS.)—The charter of a street-railroad company forbade it to incumber any portion of the streets or highways of the city not occupied by its tracks. It was held that the use of poles ancillary to the electric motive power was not forbidden by this prohibition. The court said: "To incumber, according to Webster, is 'to impede the motion or action of, as with a burden, to weigh down; to obstruct, embarrass, or perplex.' To incumber, as used in said section 7, doubtless means to obstruct or hinder travel by putting things in the way of it. The poles are very slightly in the way of travel, being placed, as hitching posts, lamp posts, electric-light poles, telegraph and telephone poles are placed, near the front margins of the sidewalks. We are not inclined to say, however, that they do not incumber because they are placed as they are, but only that it does not follow that they incumber because they are so placed. Take, for instance, a lamp post or an electric-light pole. It is slightly in the way, and if it served no useful purpose in regard to the street might justly be deemed to incumber it. But it supports a lamp, or an electric light, which illuminates the street at night, and so improves the street for its proper uses. It is not, therefore, an incumbrance in any proper sense of the word." Taggart v. Newport St. R. Co., 16 R. I. 685.

Private Way. — A deed provided that the grantee should have a passageway over other lands, not to be incumbered in any way. It was held that bars and a gate across an opening in the wall through which the passageway extended were an incumbrance. Mineral Springs Mfg. Co. v. McCarthy, 67 Conn. 279.

1. Warden v. Sabins, 36 Kan. 169; Campbell v. Hamilton Mut. Ins. Co., 51 Me. 72.

"He who places a charge upon his interest in realty, as a mortgage or judgment confessed, is an incumbrancer." Willis v. Rapid Valley Horse-Ranch Co., 7 S. Dak. 121.

A statute required that notice of assignment be given to incumbrancers. In construing this statute in Thatcher v. Valentine, 22 Colo. 201, the court said: "The word incumbrancer is employed in section 6 'In its broad and general sense, and embraces every class of incumbrancers and every class of incumbrances. A lien or charge upon land which binds it for the payment of a debt is an incumbrance, and the holder of the lien is an incumbrancer. The incumbrance may be created by contract, or it may be acquired in pursuance of some statute. The lien of an attaching creditor is an incumbrance equally with a mortgage.'" See also Spangler v. Sanborn, 7 Colo. App. 102.

2. Beekman v. Van Dolsen, 70 Hun (N. Y.) 288; Scott v. Tyler, 14 Barb. (N. Y.) 204.

Contracted and Incurred. — "Men contract debts, they incur liabilities. In the one case they act affirmatively, in the other the liability is incurred or cast upon them by act or operation of law." Crandall v. Bryan, (Supm. Ct.) 15 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 56, 5 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 162.

But "contracted" is sometimes used in the sense of incurred. See Carver v. Braintree Mfg. Co., 2 Story (U. S.) 432, 2 Robb. Pat. Cas. 141, 10 Hunt. Mer. Mag. 470, 5 Fed. Cas. No. 2,485. See also Chase v. Curtis, 113 U. S. 463; Allen v. Clark, 108 N. Y. 269.

Paid Out or Incurred. — An instruction in an action for personal injuries directed an allowance of medical expenses "paid out or incurred." This was held error. The court said: "Being in the alternative, it would be followed by allowing for the medical expenses incurred (become liable for: Webster's Dictionary), and the jury could not have understood that they were directed to find for expenses paid in the absence of proof thereof." Flanagan v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 83 Iowa 644.

Past Tense. — In Agawam Bank v. Strever, 18 N. Y. 502, the note sued upon was left with the bank as collateral security "for all liabilities incurred by Isaac S. Doane or Doane & Hoysradt to the Agawam Bank." The court said: "It is true that upon a strict grammatical construction of these terms they would be held to embrace only liabilities which had been already incurred. The word incurred, being in the past tense, when used without other words to modify its meaning would in strictness relate exclusively to past transactions. Were this memorandum, therefore, to be construed by itself, without the aid of any extrinsic fact or circumstance whatever, I am inclined to think the interpretation contended for by the appellants' counsel the one which should be adopted. * * * But its meaning can hardly be regarded as so entirely clear and unequivocal as to exclude all aid from the circumstances surrounding the parties at the time of entering into the contract. * * * It was proper, therefore, upon the trial, to resort to evidence of the attending circumstances to assist in ascertaining the meaning and intention of the parties." See also Beemer v. Packard, 92 Hun (N. Y.) 512.

A judgment obtained after a date named, upon an action instituted before that date, is not a debt incurred after the date. Knight v. Whitman, 6 Bush (Ky.) 51, 99 Am. Dec. 652.

3. Incurred — Brought On. — A statute provided that each party to his suit should be liable for the costs incurred by him. It was held that the word incurred as here used meant brought on, occasioned, or caused. Ashe v. Young, 68 Tex. 126.

Fences. — A statute provided: "If any person liable to contribute to the erection or reparation of a division fence shall neglect or refuse to make and maintain his proportion of such fence, or shall permit the same to be out of repair, he shall not be allowed to have and maintain any action for damages incurred." In construing this statute the court said: "The word incurred means 'brought on' (Web. Dict.); and by this statute the party in default is to have no action for damages brought on himself in some manner." Deyo v. Stewart, 4 Den. (N. Y.) 103.

Debt Incurred for Purchase of Land. (See generally the titles VENDOR AND PURCHASER; VENDOR'S LIEN.) — Where a purchaser of land gave his notes with another as security for the purchase money, and the assignee of the notes subsequently took in their stead notes of the principal alone, these latter were held to be a debt incurred for the purchase of land. Williams v. Jones, 100 Ill. 362.

Expenses Incurred. — Where an act placed additional duties in respect to the registry of votes upon a town clerk and authorized the parish officers to repay to him "expenses incurred," this expression meant money paid out by him, and did not include remuneration for his services. It did not mean his labor. Reg. v. Kingston upon Hull, 2 El. & Bl. 184, 75 E. C. L. 184.

Bring into Operation. — The Act of Congress of June 6, 1872, § 12, provided that a distiller who carried on business after the time stated in a notice of suspension should incur the forfeitures provided for persons who carried on business without having given bond, being the forfeitures mentioned in section 44 of the same

1. Incurable. — In construing a law giving an action of redhibition where a slave sold had an infirmity incurable by nature, the Louisiana court said: "An infirmity is incurable either by its nature or by the progress it has made or by the ignorance of the physician. When an infirmity results from the injury of one of the organs necessary to life, as the brain, the heart, or the lungs, it is, and always will be, incurable by its nature. It is also said, though not very correctly, to be incurable by its nature when the healing art has no remedy to cure it. * * * When an infirmity curable by its nature has been neglected or ill treated in its beginning, it reaches a stage where it ceases to be curable, and is said to be incurable by the progress it has made. When the infirmity is such that the physician called to heal it is ignorant of the means of cure, it is said to be incurable by the ignorance of the physician. Out of these three classes of incurable infirmities the law gives the redhibitory action in the case of those which are incurable by their nature." St. Romes v. Porc, 10 Mart. (La.) 205.

2. Ind. — The courts of Indiana will take judicial notice that the abbreviation Ind. as applied to a place means Indiana. Burroughs v. Wilson, 59 Ind. 539. See generally the title ABBREVIATIONS, vol. 1, p. 97.

3. Indebted. — Webster's Dict., quoted in Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Lundstrom, 16 Neb. 254; Scott v. Davenport, 34 Iowa 208. See also Brown v. Cairns, 107 Iowa 727, citing 8 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW (2d ed.) 983, 984, 986.

4. Indebtedness. — Merriman v. Social Mfg. Co., 12 R. I. 175.

"Webster defines indebtedness as 'the state of being indebted or placed in debt, or under an obligation, or held for payment or requital.'" Davenport v. Kleinschmidt, 6 Mont. 536; Powell v. Oregonian R. Co., 36 Fed. Rep. 730.

Indebtedness is defined as a condition of owing money; also, the amount owed. Cheyenne County v. Bent County, 15 Colo. 325.

Due or to become due. — In Merriman v. Social Mfg. Co., 12 R. I. 179, the court, in construing a contract to assume indebtedness, said: "Indebtedness is a word of large meaning. It is used to denote almost every kind of pecuniary obligation originating in contract. * * * The language is, 'all the indebtedness * * * now due or to grow due.' The assumption was obviously meant to be comprehensive. We think it must be held to cover liabilities contracted by indorsement, whether then due or to grow due." See also St. Louis Perpetual Ins. Co. v. Goodfellow, 9 Mo. 149; Davis v. Herring, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 65 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 290; Grant v. Mechanics' Bank, 15 S. & R. (Pa.) 143.

In Yocum v. Allen, 58 Ohio St. 280, it was held that an allegation of indebtedness was not equivalent to an allegation that the debt was due and payable.

But in Lum v. Steamboat Buckeye, 24 Miss. 565, it was said: "A party, either in legal or common acceptance, can only be said to be indebted to another when he withholds from him that which is his due, which he is then bound to pay, and the other has a right to demand. When only under an obligation to pay at a future day, he may become indebted by a failure to pay at the time stipulated, but cannot be said to be indebted until the day of payment, because till then he does not withhold that which is another's due, and which he has a right to demand."

"The word indebted is significant, for it is a legal term, having a legal meaning, and implies a debt presently payable. It was so defined by this court in Trowbridge v. Sickler, 42 Wis. 417." Slutts v. Chaffee, 46 Wis. 618. See also In re Stockton Malleable Iron Co., 2 Ch. D. 101.

Same — Affidavit of Attachment. — In an affidavit for an attachment, a statement that the attachment defendant "is indebted" to the plaintiff in a sum named, "upon express contract, over and above all legal set-offs," was held a sufficient affidavit that the amount named was due. The court said: "In Lenox v. Howland, 3 Cai. (N. Y.) 323, the word indebted, as used in the attachment laws of New York, is held to be synonymous with owing; and among the definitions of owing or owe are 'due,' 'to be due to.' (Webster.) It has been held in Louisiana that the words 'really indebted' convey the idea of a debt actually due and payable; not debitum in presenti, solvendum in futuro. No weight seems to have been given to the adverb 'really.' Parmele v. Johnston, 15 La. 429. Likewise in some of the approved forms of common-law pleadings, especially in actions of debt on simple contracts, the word is used as denoting a debt presently payable. This appears from the omission of an averment to that effect. 2 Chitty's Pl. 385." Trowbridge v. Sickler, 42 Wis. 419, overruling Whitney v. Brunette, 15 Wis. 61; Bowen v. Slocum, 17 Wis. 181.

Insurable Interest — Future Loans. — In holding that an insurable interest which the creditor has in the life of his debtor cannot exceed in amount that of the indebtedness secured, the court said that the word indebtedness "may embrace not only a debt or debts actually existing when the insurance is taken out by the debtor, or is thereafter assigned to

INDECENCY. (See the titles DISORDERLY HOUSES, vol. 9, p. 508; EXPOSURE OF PERSON, vol. 12, p. 536; LEWD AND LASCIVIOUS COHABITATION AND CONDUCT; OBSCENITY; POSTAL LAWS.)—Indecency is defined to mean that which is unbecoming in language or manners; any action or behavior which the creditor, but also additional indebtedness to arise upon the making of further loans or advances by the creditor to the debtor—such, for instance, as cash for premiums to be paid in obtaining the policy or in keeping it alive." Exchange Bank v. Loh, 104 Ga. 450.

Future Interest.—The term indebtedness, as used in a constitutional limitation upon the indebtedness which a city might incur, has been held not to include future interest. Ashland v. Culbertson, (Ky. 1898) 44 S. W. Rep. 442.

Loan. (See also LOAN.)—A life-insurance policy containing nonforfeiture provisions declared that upon default after payment of two annual premiums, the net reserve, "less any indebtedness to the company on this policy," would be applied to the purchase of nonparticipating term insurance. In construing these provisions the court said: "What did the parties mean? It cannot reasonably be supposed that they intended the word indebtedness to have any special or technical significance; and that, in common and ordinary apprehension, a 'loan,' no matter when or how payable, is understood to be an indebtedness, is indubitable. That, too, in each of these instances, the loan was 'on the policy,' is, under the express terms of the certificate, unquestionable." Omaha Nat. Bank v. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co., 84 Fed. Rep. 125.

Broad Meaning—Moral Obligation—Advances.—Where a testator directed that "all moneys or indebtedness which shall appear upon any inventory or ledger or books of account" kept by him, "charged as due" to him from any of the beneficiaries during his lifetime, "and as an outstanding or unsettled account" at the time of his decease, should be deducted from the share of the person concerned, the word was held to cover advances so made. The court said: "The word indebtedness is not exclusively a term of legal technicality. It has at times a signification far broader than the law dictionaries assign to it, not even involving of necessity the idea of money obligation. Like any other word, therefore, which is used in a testamentary paper, its signification is open to construction, and it may be necessary to scrutinize the provisions of the testator's will, and even, under some circumstances, the condition of his estate and his relation to the objects of his bounty, in order to ascertain the sense in which he has seen fit to employ it." Matter of Robert, 4 Dem. (N. Y.) 185. And see Scott v. Neeves, 77 Wis. 310, where the term was applied to a moral obligation.

Joint Liability.—Indebtedness has been held to cover the debtor's joint as well as several liabilities, and also his liabilities contracted by indorsement, whether then due or to become due. Bell v. Mendenhall, (Minn. 1899) 80 N. W. Rep. 843.

Definite Liability.—In Chicago v. Galpin, 183 Ill. 408, it was said: "A debt or indebtedness means a determinate and definite liability."

ity." This was upon the construction of a constitutional provision limiting the amount of indebtedness which might be incurred by a municipal corporation.

In Latimer v. Veader, 20 N. Y. App. Div. 425, it was said: "In the AMERICAN AND ENGLISH ENCYCLOPÆDIA OF LAW [1st ed.] it is said: 'Ordinarily, it imports a sum of money arising upon a contract express or implied. In its more general sense it is defined to be that which is due from one person to another, whether money, goods, or services; that which one person is bound to pay or perform to another.' (Vol. 5, 143.) It has been expressly held, however, that debt does not include a liability in tort. (Id., 148, 149, and cases cited in note 1 on page 149.)" See also Powell v. Oregonian R. Co., 36 Fed. Rep. 726, cited in McDonnell v. Alabama Gold L. Ins. Co., 26 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 274.

Same—Judgment for Tort.—A judgment against a lessee (a corporation) for waste permitted on the demised premises is an indebtedness within a constitutional provision which declared that a stockholder of a corporation should be "liable for the indebtedness" thereof to the amount unpaid on his stock; the judgment obtained thereon was such an indebtedness; and any stockholder of the corporation was liable therefor to the plaintiff therein to the amount unpaid on his stock. Powell v. Oregonian R. Co., 36 Fed. Rep. 726.

Same—Fraudulent Conveyances.—The word indebtedness in a statute against fraudulent conveyances has been construed to mean not a fixed sum due, but any liability that may have been incurred by contract either express or implied, that renders a party a debtor within the meaning of the law. Mattingly v. Wulke, 2 Ill. App. 172. See also the title FRAUDULENT SALES AND CONVEYANCES, vol. 14, p. 253.

Same—Attachment. (See also the title ATTACHMENT, vol. 3, p. 189.)—Within an attachment statute it has been held that a claim for breach of contract to sell and deliver merchandise was an indebtedness. Hyman v. Newell, 7 Colo. App. 78.

So of the use of the term indebted in an attachment statute the court said: "Being indebted is synonymous with owing; it is sufficient, therefore, if the demand arise on contract." Lenox v. Howland, 3 Cal. (N. Y.) 323.

In an attachment statute directing that a creditor shall make oath that the debtor is bona fide indebted, etc., it has been held that indebted is to be construed in its ordinary sense and not in a technical or strict legal sense. Wilson v. Wilson, 8 Gill (Md.) 192, 50 Am. Dec. 685.

Involuntary Debts.—A statute provided that if the indebtedness of any company should at any time exceed its capital stock, the trustees of such company should be personally liable. In construing this statute in Allen v. Clark, 108 N. Y. 269, the court said: "The word indebtedness in this section clearly includes not only every debt voluntarily contracted by is deemed a violation of modesty, or an offense to delicacy, as rude or wanton actions, obscene language, and whatever tends to excite a blush in the spectator.¹

the company, but every debt of every nature, however contracted or arising."

Indebted to Each Other.—The expressions "mutual debts," "dealing together," "indebted to each other," have been held to convey the same meaning, in set-off statutes. Pate v. Gray, Hempst. (U. S.) 155, citing Gordon v. Bowne, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 155.

Sale of Newspaper.—In Blew v. Collins, 61 Minn. 418, a seller of a newspaper agreed to pay all indebtedness of the paper contracted before the sale. It was held that indebtedness, as thus used, did not include contracts for advertising which had been paid in advance.

Bonded Debt of a Corporation.—A charter of a corporation provided that if the indebtedness of the corporation at any time exceeded the capital stock paid in, the directors should be individually liable to the creditors. It was held that indebtedness included the bonded debt of the corporation as well as the floating debt. Tradesman Pub. Co. v. Knoxville Car Wheel Co., 95 Tenn. 634. See generally the title PUBLIC OFFICERS.

Money Embezzled.—Upon the discovery of thefts committed by the secretary of a savings bank, both while holding that office and previously while acting as one of the clerks of the bank, and of thefts by others of its employees subordinate to the secretary, which occurred through his connivance or negligence, the secretary gave to a third person, for the benefit of the bank, an agreement, made part of and at the same time with a mortgage executed by him to secure its obligations. This agreement, after stating that he was indebted to the bank in an amount uncertain, but to be ascertained by investigation within twelve months, contained a condition that if any indebtedness from him to the bank should be found to exist, he would pay it with lawful interest, or, in the alternative, that the mortgage should be available. It was held that the bank was entitled to recover upon a foreclosure of the mortgage, under the word indebtedness, and upon proper proof, not only the personal debt of the secretary to it, but also the sum taken from it, with his connivance or through his negligence, by the clerks who were subordinate to him, together with lawful interest thereon from the time when his obligation to the bank accrued. Latimer v. Veader, 20 N. Y. App. Div. 418.

School Warrants. (See generally the title MUNICIPAL SECURITIES.)—The Act of Nebraska approved March 30, 1887 (Laws Neb. 1887, p. 100), entitled "An act to authorize counties, precincts, townships, or towns, cities, villages, and school districts to compromise their indebtedness and issue new bonds therefor," was held not to empower a school district to issue its bonds and deliver them to parties in compromise, or to take the place of an indebtedness evidenced by school-district warrants or orders. State v. Moore, 45 Neb. 12.

Unpaid Stock. (See generally the titles STOCK; STOCKHOLDERS.)—In Kahn v. St. Joseph Bank, 70 Mo. 271, it was said: "We have conceded at the outset of this opinion that the word indebted is sufficiently comprehensive to embrace unpaid stock as well as any other form of indebtedness, provided the context and general intent of the law does not require a more narrow interpretation." But in that case it was held that the word indebted referred to indebtedness outside of stock subscriptions.

In Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Clarke, 29 Pa. St. 146, it was held that the liability to pay for the amount of stock subscribed for was an indebtedness within the meaning of a statute providing that a stockholder indebted to a company could not transfer his stock without the consent of the board of directors.

But it has been held that indebted in such a provision was not restricted to indebtedness growing out of the original subscription and subsequent calls and assessments, but applied to all indebtedness of the stockholder to the company. National Bank of Republic v. Rochester Tumbler Co., 172 Pa. St. 614.

Indebtedness in Writing.—In O'Donnell v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 22 Ill. App. 233, it was held that a justice's judgment was an evidence of indebtedness in writing, within the meaning of a statute of limitations. See generally the title LIMITATIONS OF ACTIONS.

Entries of deposits made by a bank in a bank book issued to a depositor constitute evidence of indebtedness in writing, within the meaning of the Illinois statute which bars actions upon such evidence of indebtedness only upon the lapse of ten years, and an action thereon by the depositor against a stockholder of the bank to enforce the individual liability of the latter is barred on the lapse of the same period as bars an action against a corporation. Schalucky v. Field, 124 Ill. 617, 21 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 545.

Evidence of Indebtedness.—Under a constitutional provision that "no scrip * * * shall be issued except for the redemption of stock, bonds, or other evidences of indebtedness previously issued," bank bills not issued directly by the state, but issued by a corporation created by the state, in which it was the sole stockholder, under express authority from the state, and for the sole benefit of the state, are such evidences of indebtedness. Bond Debt Cases, 12 S. Car. 200, 287.

Limitations to Municipal Indebtedness.—See the title MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

1. Public Indecency.—McJunkins v. State, 10 Ind. 144. The court further said: "It would therefore appear that the term 'public indecent' has no fixed legal meaning—is vague and indefinite, and cannot in itself imply a definite offense. And hence the courts, by a kind of judicial legislation, in England and the United States, have usually limited the operation of the term to public displays of the naked person, the publication, sale, or exhibition of obscene books and prints, or the exhibition of a monster—acts which have a direct bearing on public morals, and affect the body of society."

INDECENT.—Indecent means unfit for the eye or ear; tending to obscenity.¹

INDECENT EXPOSURE.—See the title EXPOSURE OF PERSON, vol. 12, p. 536.

INDECENT LANGUAGE.—See the title OBSCENITY.

INDECENT PUBLICATIONS.—See the titles OBSCENITY; POSTAL LAWS.

INDECOROUS.—Indecorous means impolite, or in violation of good manners or proper breeding. "It is broad enough to cover the slightest departure from the most polished politeness, to conduct which is vulgar and insulting."²

INDEFINITE. (See also ENCYC. OF PL. AND PR., title DEFINITENESS AND CERTAINTY IN PLEADINGS, vol. 6, p. 246.)—See note 3.

1. U. S. v. Weightman, 34 Pittsb. Leg. J. (Pa.) 242.

Postal Laws. (See also the title POSTAL LAWS.)—In construing an act forbidding the use of the mails to circulate publications of an indecent character, it was said: "The term is said to signify more than indelicate and less than immodest—to mean something unfit for the eye or ear. Worcester, Dict." U. S. v. Loftis, 12 Fed. Rep. 671.

So it has been said that passages are indecent within the meaning of the act "when they tend to obscenity, that is to say, matter having the form of indecency which is calculated to promote the general corruption of morals." U. S. v. Bennett, 16 Blatchf. (U. S.) 362. See also U. S. v. Britton, 17 Fed. Rep. 733; U. S. v. Pratt, 2 Am. L. T. N. S. 238.

In U. S. v. Smith, 11 Fed. Rep. 665, it was said: "The connection in which the word indecent is used, taken with the history of the legislation upon the subject, leads me to the conclusion that it means immodest, impure; and that language which is coarse or unbecoming, or even profane, is not within the inhibition of this act." See also U. S. v. Bebout, 28 Fed. Rep. 524; U. S. v. Williams, 3 Fed. Rep. 485.

Indecent Assault. (See also the title ASSAULT AND BATTERY, vol. 2, pp. 973, 975.)—In State v. West, 39 Minn. 321, it was held that a verdict of guilty of an indecent assault sufficiently described the offense prohibited under section 245 of the Penal Code of Minnesota. The court said: "The second point raised is that the verdict does not state any crime known to the law; that the words 'indecent assault' are no part of the statute, but merely 'catch words.' We think this objection is not well taken. The crime as defined by the statute is, in its legal tenor and import, an indecent assault. 'Indecent liberties' with or on the person of a female without her consent, and an 'indecent assault' upon her, are in effect convertible expressions. The term 'indecent assault' is but the statutory definition of the crime epitomized."

Indecently Drunk. (See also the title INTOXICATION.)—Where a complaint and warrant charged that the defendant was "indecently drunk, contrary to the provisions of the act passed by the legislature [of Rhode Island] at its June session, A. D. 1854," it was held that he was sufficiently charged with the offense defined in that act by the words "intoxicated under such circumstances as amount to a violation of decency." Alexander v. Card, 3 R. I. 145.

Indecently Acting.—Where the disturbance of divine service alleged in an indictment was "by talking, and by loud talking, and by using profane language, and by using obscene language, and by then and there being intoxicated, and by otherwise indecently acting, striking matches, smoking pipe, making indecent and vulgar noises, by laughing aloud," and there was evidence of indecent and vulgar noises by the defendant, but not of his laughing aloud, the court did not err in charging that the jury might convict upon proof of indecent and vulgar noises. Under the indictment the jury was not restricted to the consideration of indecent and vulgar noises made by laughing aloud, the noise in question being fairly within the description of "indecently acting." Taffe v. State, 90 Ga. 459.

Indecent Behavior.—Crim. Code Ala. 1886, § 4032 (Crim. Code 1896, § 4653), makes a disturbance created "by rude or indecent behavior or by profane or obscene language" an offense. In construing this statute the court said: "The expression 'rude or indecent behavior,' as here used, at least implies conduct which is boisterous, rough, or uncivil, or is offensive to modesty or delicacy. It cannot fairly be said that one is guilty of such conduct who merely strikes back at another by whom he is insulted and assaulted, in the presence or within the hearing of women, though he could have avoided a continuance of the difficulty by withdrawing from it without peril to himself." Reeves v. State, 96 Ala. 41.

Indecent Purpose.—Entering a court house and urinating against the door facing therein is using the building "for an indecent purpose," within the meaning of section 725 of the Georgia Penal Code, and such an act is a misdemeanor, whether as a result thereof the building is or is not injured or defaced. Smith v. State, (Ga. 1900) 35 S. E. Rep. 166.

2. Indecorous.—Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Ballard, 85 Ky. 312. In this case it was held that, in an action to recover for injuries resulting to the plaintiff from her being taken past a station for which she had purchased a ticket, it was error to instruct the jury that damages should be awarded to the plaintiff if any employee of the company was indecorous or insulting.

3. Lease. (See also the title LEASE.)—A lessee "for the term of one year and an indefinite period thereafter," at an annual rent, is a tenant from year to year. Pugsley v. Aiken, 11 N. Y. 494.

Indefinite Failure of Issue. (See also the titles ISSUE; REMAINDERS AND EXECUTORY IN-TEREST; SHELLEY'S CASE; WILLS.) — In Hall v. Chaffee, 14 N. H. 220, it was said: "A definite failure of issue is when a precise time is fixed by the will for the failure of issue, as in the case of a devise to A, but if he dies without lawful issue living at the time of his death. If there should be no such issue living at the time, a remainder over would be good. An indefinite failure of issue is a proposition the very converse of the other, and means a failure of issue whenever it shall happen, sooner or later, without any fixed, certain, or definite period within which it must happen. It means the period when the issue or descendants of the first taker shall become extinct, and when there is no longer any issue of the issue of the grantee, without reference to any particular time or any particular event; or, in the words of the statute de donis, referring to the first taker, if his issue shall fail."

INDEMNIFY. — See note 1.

INDEMNITY. — See note 2.

Indefinite Imprisonment. (See also the title PUNISHMENT AND IMPRISONMENT.) — In Ex p. Bryant, 24 Fla. 278, it was held that a sentence to imprisonment until a fine should be paid did not create an indefinite imprisonment within the meaning of a constitutional provision prohibiting indefinite imprisonment.

1. Indemnify. — In holding that there must be actual loss in order to recover under a contract to indemnify against liability, the court said: "Webster defines this word: 'Indemnify (in and damnify; L. damnificus, damnum, loss). (1) To save harmless; to secure against loss, damage, or penalty. (2) To make good; to reimburse one what he has lost. We indemnify a man by giving sufficient security to make good a future loss, or by actual reimbursement of loss after it has occurred.' It follows from this definition that (in the ordinary signification of the term) to indemnify against legal liability means to save harmless from loss occasioned by legal liability." Weller v. Eames, 15 Minn. 461. So under a contract to indemnify, the person to be indemnified must pay before he is entitled to the benefit of the contract. Collinge v. Heywood, 9 Ad. & El. 633, 36 E. C. L. 223.

Full Protection. — In Paulin v. Kaighn, 29 N. J. L. 493, it was said: "To indemnify means to fully protect and save harmless; and when the defendant offered to show that the co-securities had received securities to indemnify them against this liability, it must be understood that they were securities that were sufficient to protect and save them harmless against all liability on that bond."

2. Indemnity Lands. (See also the title PUBLIC LANDS.) — In Barney v. Winona, etc., R. Co., 117 U. S. 232, the court said: "In the construction of land-grant acts in aid of railroads there is a well-established distinction observed between 'granted lands' and 'indemnity lands.' The former are those falling within the limits specially designated, and the title to which attaches when the lands are located by an approved and accepted survey of the line of the road filed in the land department, as of the date of the Act of Congress. The latter are those lands selected in lieu of parcels lost by previous disposition or reservation for other purposes, and the title to which accrues only from the time of their selection." See also U. S. v. Missouri, etc., R. Co., 141 U. S. 375; Kansas Pac. R. Co. v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., 112 U. S. 421; Sioux City, etc., R. Co. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 117 U. S. 406; Wisconsin Cent. R. Co. v. Price County, 133 U. S. 496.

Insurance. — The very meaning of the term indemnity excludes all idea of profit to be insured. Davis v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 111 Cal. 409. See also Godsall v. Boldero, 9 East 72; Hamilton v. Mendes, 2 Burr. 1210; Exchange Bank v. Loh, 104 Ga. 446. For matters of Procedure, see the title BONDS, ENCYC. OF PL. AND PR., vol. 3, p. 635. I. DEFINITION AND NATURE. — An indemnity contract is an agreement between two parties whereby one agrees to indemnify and save harmless¹ the other from loss or damage in connection with some particular transaction,² or to protect him against liability to or the claim of a third person.³

The Terms "Indemnitor" and "Indemnitee" have been used to designate the parties to such a contract, and will be so used in this article.⁴

The Essential Distinction Between an Indemnity Contract and a Contract of Guaranty or Suretyship is that the promisor in an indemnity contract undertakes to protect his promisee against loss or damage through a liability on the part of the latter to a third person, while the undertaking of a guarantor or surety is to protect the promisee against loss or damage through the failure of a third person to carry out his obligations to the promisee.⁵

II. WHAT CONSTITUTES. — In order that a contract may be considered one of indemnity the intention of indemnifying against a certain loss or liability must appear;⁶ it is not, however, necessary that this intention be expressed

1. "Save Harmless" Is a Term of More Extensive Meaning than "Indemnify." — Carr v. Roberts, 5 B. & Ad. 78, 27 E. C. L. 39.

2. A Strict Definition of the term should go no further than this, for a covenant against liability is not philologically a contract of indemnity. There are many instances in the reports in which the word "indemnity" has been used in its strictly literal meaning, and the distinction must be kept clearly in view. See Gage v. Lewis, 68 Ill. 604; Valentine v. Wheeler, 122 Mass. 566, 23 Am. Rep. 404; Weller v. Eames, 15 Minn. 461, 2 Am. Rep. 150; Hoy v. Hansborough, Freem. (Miss.) 533; Carson Opera House Assoc. v. Miller, 16 Nev. 327; Jones v. Childs, 8 Nev. 121; Chace v. Hinman, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 452, 24 Am. Dec. 30; Crippen v. Thompson, 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 532; McGee v. Roen, (N. Y. Super. Ct. Spec. T.) 4 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 8; Crofoot v. Moore, 4 Vt. 204; Pond v. Warner, 2 Vt. 532. But for convenience in treatment and ease of reference it is deemed best to extend the definition, and of course the scope of the article, as given in the text.

3. Definition. — The definition given in the text is practically the same as that given in 10 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW, (1st ed.) 402, and adopted in Black's Law Dict.

4. The Terms "Indemnitor" and "Indemnitee" are of comparatively recent origin, and they do not appear in Webster's Dictionary, nor in any of the earlier law dictionaries save Anderson's. But their use is now well recognized, and since the argument in favor of their use, in the first edition of this work, definitions of these terms have appeared in the Century Dictionary and in Black's Law Dictionary, the latter work having also adopted the definition of an "indemnity contract" given in 10 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW (1st ed.) 402, in which these terms are used.

Instances of the use of these terms in the sense of the text may be found in the following cases: Smith v. McGhee, 14 Ala. 404; Lewis v. Johns, 34 Cal. 633; Davidson v. Dallas, 8 Cal. 227; Brandts v. Donnelly, 94 Ky. 129; Leshner v. Getman, 30 Minn. 321; Weller v. Eames, 15 Minn. 461, 2 Am. Rep. 150; Herring v. Hoppock, 15 N. Y. 413; Bridgeport F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Wilson, 34 N. Y. 275; Aberdeen v. Blackmar, 6 Hill (N. Y.) 324; Heinmuller v. Gray, (N. Y. Super. Ct. Gen. T.) 44 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 260; Weber v. Ferris, (C. Pl. Gen. T.) 37 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 102.

5. See the titles GUARANTY, vol. 14, p. 1127; SURETYSHIP.

6. Contracts, etc., Held to Be of Indemnity. — A bond given by a partner purchasing the entire interest in a partnership firm to the other, conditioned to "truly indemnify and save harmless" such other from the payment of all and in any particular terms.¹

III. WHETHER WITHIN STATUTE OF FRAUDS. — The decided preponderance of authority is in support of the view that an indemnity contract is an original and not a collateral undertaking, and therefore not within the provision of the statute of frauds that a promise to answer for the debt, default, or mis-carriage of another must, in order to be valid, be in writing.² But in every of the debts due or to become due from the firm, is a bond of indemnity only. Hough v. Perkins, 2 How. (Miss.) 724.

Direct Promise to Support a Pauper, Coupled with Agreement to Indemnify Town Against Expenses of Supporting Him, Held to Be Contract of Indemnity. — Palmyra v. Nichols, 91 Me. 17.

Contracts, etc., Held to Be Not of Indemnity. — F., having been convicted and fined for selling intoxicating liquor, prayed an appeal and executed an appeal bond with J. as his surety. Subsequently F. and another executed to J. a bond conditioned that F. should appear at the term of the district court to which an appeal was taken, but such bond did not recite that in case J. should suffer by reason of becoming surety for F., or in case J. should pay or be compelled to pay the penalty of the appeal bond, the promisors in the other bond would indemnify him. It was held that the bond in question was not an indemnifying bond. Slater v. Jacobitz, 3 Colo. App. 127.

In an Illinois case, where W. promised R. that if R. would sign a certain promissory note payable to the order of W., as surety for S., W. would forthwith obtain a chattel mortgage upon all of the personal property of S. to secure payment of the note and also to secure payment of a previous note for a like amount given by the said S. to W., and also signed by R. as surety, it was held that "the mere promise to obtain a chattel mortgage was not indemnity nor a guaranty of indemnity." Resseter v. Waterman, 151 Ill. 169, reversing 45 Ill. App. 155.

A Direct Promise to Pay certain notes is not a contract of indemnity. Crofoot v. Moore, 4 Vt. 204.

1. Expressions Held to Amount to Agreements to Indemnify. — See Carr v. Wyley, 23 Ala. 821.

In Brewster v. Countryman, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 446, where the vendor of property in connection with the terms of sale said to the vendee, "I will see you out with it," there was held to be an agreement to indemnify.

Similarly, in Grant v. Lawrence, 79 Hun (N. Y.) 565, where a contract for the purchase of patented articles contained a clause that the purchasers were "to be defended from trouble about patents," there was held to be a contract to indemnify.

A Contract to Furnish a Bond of Indemnity is in substance a contract of indemnity, and must be treated as itself in effect a contract to indemnify where it is not superseded by such promised bond. Showers v. Wadsworth, 81 Cal. 270.

2. Indemnity Contract Not Within Statute of Frauds — England. — Thomas v. Cook, 8 B. & C. 728, 15 E. C. L. 333; Guild v. Conrad, (1894) 2 Q. B. 885, 9 Reports 746; *Sutton v. some jurisdictions the contrary opinion prevails.¹

IV. VALIDITY — 1. In General. — There is nothing in the nature of an indemnity contract which necessarily renders it invalid as against public policy,² though, as will be shown, particular contracts of this character may, on account of the unlawful nature of the acts from the consequences of which they seek to afford indemnity, be condemned.

2. Indemnity Against Consequences of Illegal Act — a. ACT KNOWN TO BE ILLEGAL. — Thus there can be no doubt of the invalidity of a contract by which one party undertakes to indemnify the other against the consequences

Ohio Cases. — In Mays v. Joseph, 34 Ohio St. 22, it was held that a verbal promise by a judgment creditor to indemnify an officer holding an execution, against loss or damage from the seizure and sale of property claimed by the debtor to be exempt from execution, was not within the statute of frauds, as the promise was an original and not a collateral engagement; that there was no element of debt, default, or miscarriage of any third party in the agreement; and that the act against which the indemnity was promised was for the benefit of the promisor. The court made no reference to the earlier cases of Kelsey v. Hibbs, 13 Ohio St. 340, and Easter v. White, 12 Ohio St. 219, where it was held that a promise to indemnify one who had become surety upon a bond against any loss arising therefrom was within the statute of frauds, and therefore invalid if not in writing.

(This case was reversed by the Supreme Court in *Resetter v. indemnity is not made until after the act has been performed.¹

3. Indemnity to Bail. — In reference to a contract to indemnify a person on account of his becoming bail for a prisoner charged with a criminal offense, the best rule would seem to be that such a contract is illegal as against public policy where it is entered into by the prisoner himself,² but valid and enforceable if persons other than the prisoner are the indemnitors.³

V. CONSIDERATION — 1. Necessity. — A contract to indemnify, like any other contract, must be founded upon a consideration.⁴

2. Sufficiency. — The mere assuming of the liability or performing of the act against which or the consequences of which the indemnity is given is a sufficient consideration to support such a contract,⁵ as is also the incurring of mission of an act which they supposed they had a right to do, and did it under such claim of right. Marcy v. Crawford, 16 Conn. 549, 41 Am. Dec. 158.

When Promise of Indemnity Is Implied. — If an agent, by the direction of his principal, does an act which is not manifestly illegal, but which proves to be a trespass, a promise by the principal to indemnify him is implied. Moore v. Appleton, 26 Ala. 633; Nelson v. Cook, 17 Ill. 443; Gower v. Emery, 18 Me. 79. See also Adamson v. Jarvis, 4 Bing. 66, 13 E. C. L. 343.

Knowledge of Indemnitee that Act Is Illegal Must Be Shown. — A promise to indemnify against a trespass is valid unless the promisor shows that the promisee knew the act to be a trespass and illegal. Stone v. Hooker, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 154.

Knowledge of Indemnitor that Act Is Illegal. — There is no decision which lays down that the intention of both parties must be innocent; and it might be inferred from the language of the court in Avery v. Halsey, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 174; Stone v. Hooker, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 154, and Coventry v. Barton, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 142, 8 Am. Dec. 376, that although the promisor may have contemplated a wilful trespass, that fact will not avoid the promise if the act was not palpably illegal and the promisee acted in the belief that he was entitled to perform it.

Contrary View in Georgia. — In Georgia it has been held that such a contract is valid even though the prisoner be the indemnitor. Simpson v. Robert, 35 Ga. 180.

3. Indemnity Given by Third Person Not Illegal. — Moloney v. Nelson, 158 N. Y. 351, affirming 12 N. Y. App. Div. 545, which affirmed (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 16 Misc. (N. Y.) 474. See also Bond to Save Vendee Harmless Against Lien. — A bond given by a vendor of land at the time of sale, to hold the vendee harmless from any lien upon the property growing out of a judgment which was a lien thereon, but from which an appeal was pending, is based upon a sufficient consideration. Frank v. Jenkins, 11 Wash. 611.

Entry upon Lands. — In Allaire v. Ouland, 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 52, it was held that if an employer directed his servant to enter upon lands under a claim of right, promising to indemnify him against loss if such entry should prove to be a trespass, the act of the promisee in obeying the direction was a sufficient consideration.

expense¹ or suffering of damage by the indemnitee.²

3. Past Consideration. — Notwithstanding the general rule that a past consideration is not sufficient to support a new promise,³ and the fact that in some cases this rule has been applied to indemnity contracts,⁴ there are other cases in which a promise of indemnity has been sustained though made subsequent to the event out of which the indemnitee's liability or loss arose, and founded upon no new consideration.⁵

4. Future Consideration. — A mortgage given to indemnify a person against loss or damage growing out of indorsements thereafter to be made by the mortgagee is supported by a sufficient consideration and is valid.⁶

VI. CONSTRUCTION — 1. In General. — A contract of indemnity should be construed so as to cover all losses, damages, or liabilities to which it reasonably appears to have been the intention of the parties that it should apply,⁷

Removal of Property. — The danger incurred in removing property under a claim of right is sufficient consideration to support an indemnity to those engaged in or participating in the removal. Avery v. Halsey, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 174.

Permission to Defend Suit. — If the defendant in a suit at law, at the request of a third person indirectly interested in the result, permits such person to assume the defense upon a promise to indemnify him and pay all costs recovered against him, such promise is not void for want of consideration. Goodspeed v. Fuller, 46 Me. 141, 71 Am. Dec. 572.

Promise Held to Be Without Consideration. — A declaration in assumpsit stated a promise from the plaintiffs to the defendant not to require the payment of a certain note indorsed by the defendant to the plaintiffs, in consideration whereof the defendant promised the plaintiffs to indemnify them from one-third of all loss which they might sustain in consequence of their indorsement of certain notes for a third person; that the plaintiffs had never required payment of the note, and that they had sustained a loss to a certain amount. It was held that the declaration was bad in not stating that the third person was insolvent, as otherwise there was no consideration for the defendant's promise, either of benefit to himself or of loss to the plaintiffs. Myers v. Morse, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 425.

Where a note was signed by the mortgagee as surety on March 29, and a mortgage to indemnify him was made by the principal debtor and wife on April 1 following, it was held that there was no presumption that there was no consideration for the mortgage. Forbes v. McCoy, 15 Neb. 632.

Antecedent Promise to Indemnify. — An obligation undertaken on the faith of a promise that the obligor would be indemnified is sufficient consideration for a bond of indemnity subsequently executed. Grim v. Semple, 39 Iowa 570.

Moral Obligation. — A debtor who had been allowed by the sheriff's deputy to escape promised afterwards to indemnify the sheriff for the amount of the debt and costs paid by him; and it was held that the moral obligation upon which the promise was based was a good consideration. Doty v. Wilson, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 378.

Continuing Consideration. — Eight days after the execution of an administration bond by A as security for B the administrator, C wrote to A that at the request of B he promised and agreed to indemnify A against all loss or injury he might sustain in consequence of having become security for B in that business. It was held that the consideration was a continuing one, and sufficient to sustain an action of assumpsit by A against C for indemnity against a loss that afterwards happened to him by reason of the default of B the administrator. Carroll v. Nixon, 4 W. & S. (Pa.) 517. See also Bestor v. Roberts, 58 Ala. 331.

but not to extend to losses, damages, or liabilities which are neither expressly within its terms nor of such character that it can reasonably be inferred that they were intended to be within the contract.¹ Thus if the condition of the undertaking is that the obligor will indemnify the purchaser of lands against the acts of any person, the obligor is liable only in the event of a lawful entry by a third person and the consequent eviction of the purchaser; but if the indemnity is directed against the acts of a particular person, the condition is Damages Resulting from Negligence of Indemnitee. — A contract of indemnity will not usually be construed to protect the indemnitee against damage resulting from his own negligence. Indianapolis, etc., R. Co. v. Brownburg, 32 Ind. 199. Or that of his subordinates or employees. Manhattan R. Co. v. Cornell, 54 Hun (N. Y.) 292, affirmed without opinion 130 N. Y. 637; *San Antonio, etc., R. Co. v. Indemnity to Partners Against Liabilities at Time of Formation of Partnership. — Where a banker on taking partners into the business has given them a charge on his estates by way of indemnity against his liabilities at the time of the formation of the partnership, this indemnity applies only to what the partners are called upon to pay on account of the original banker's liabilities out of their private means independent of the banking business. Grylls v. Grylls, 18 W. R. 85.

Indemnity by Mortgagor Against Mechanics' Liens Does Not Cover Loss Resulting from Mortgagor's Want of Title. — Guaranty Sav., etc., Assoc. v. Rutan, 6 Ind. App. 83.

Indemnity Against Negligence of Indemnitor. — Where the indemnity is against the consequences of the negligence or carelessness on the part of the indemnitor, the indemnitee must, in order to recover, show that the damage for which he seeks to be indemnified was caused by some negligent act of the indemnitor for which, as between the parties to the indemnity contract, the indemnitor was primarily liable, unless there be in the contract some provision rendering this unnecessary. New York v. Brady, 70 Hun (N. Y.) 250, 77 Hun (N. Y.) 241, 81 Hun (N. Y.) 440. See also Springfield v. Boyle, 164 Mass. 591.

broken in the event of the possession of the purchaser being interrupted by such person, whether lawfully or unlawfully.¹

Covenant of Indemnity Cannot Be Restricted by Recitals. — A covenant of indemnity, unlike a release, cannot, when it is clear in its terms, be restricted by a recital.²

An Indemnity Against Certain Specified Claims cannot, it has been held, extend to any other, though of the same character,³ unless it appear that the indemnity is intended to extend to all claims.⁴

Contracts Construed as Prospective. — Contracts by an assignee to indemnify an assignor upon the assignment of a chose in action are construed to be prospective and to relate to acts done under the assignment, unless there be language used expressive of an attempt to give the indemnity a broader scope.⁵

Past Advances and Existing Liabilities. — But a contract of indemnity may be construed to apply to past advances and existing liabilities as well as to advances to be made and liabilities to be created in the future, when such an intention clearly appears in the agreement.⁶

Indemnity Extending to Renewal of Original Liability. — An indemnity to an indorser of a note against any liability in consequence of his indorsement extends to another note executed by the same parties on a renewal of the first note, as such renewal is not a payment for the purposes of the indemnity; and the same is true of other contracts of indemnity;⁷ but where the indemnitor has expressly undertaken to indemnify an accommodation indorser against his liability on certain notes and a single renewal thereof, the liability of the indemnitor is discharged by a second renewal.⁸

Contract Binding Indemnitors Both Individually and as Trustees. — In a case where an indemnity contract recited that the indemnitors as trustees of a certain estate and as individuals did certain acts, and went on to set out that "we hold ourselves responsible for any cost or damages" which might be incurred by the indemnitee, it was held that the wording of the instrument clearly showed that the indemnitors intended to bind themselves both in their fiduciary and in their individual capacities.⁹

indemnified for becoming sureties on a bond requiring another person to answer an indictment for a criminal offense cannot charge the indemnitor by entering into a more onerous bond than the one against which the indemnitor made a deposit to indemnify them.¹

2. To Whose Benefit Contract of Indemnity Inures. — A contract of indemnity inures to the benefit of the indemnitee only, and a third person having a right of action or a claim against the indemnitee cannot proceed directly against the indemnitor, though the claim be such as the indemnity contract will apply to save the indemnitee harmless from.² But in Wisconsin it has been held that a railroad contractor, who has agreed with the railroad company to save it harmless from the payment of laborers' wages, assumed the responsibility placed upon the company by a statute giving laborers on a railroad the right to hold the railroad company directly liable for the amount of their wages, by serving on it the required notices.³

Indemnity Against Incumbrances. — And it has been considered that in the case of a bond of indemnity against an incumbrance a court of equity will take jurisdiction of all the parties interested, and will make the party immediately liable who is or may be ultimately made liable.⁴

3. Duration of the Contract. — Where a bond and mortgage are given for the indemnification of a surety, the mortgagor is liable thereon although by its terms the bond expires before the expiration of the contract on which the surety is bound.⁵

4. Liability of Indemnitee to Third Persons Not Increased. — The taking of a bond or contract of indemnity cannot have the effect to subject the indemnitee to any liability to third persons beyond what would have existed in the absence of such bond or contract.⁶

VII. FULFILLMENT AND BREACH OF THE CONTRACT — 1. Fulfillment. — The undertaking of the indemnitor is fulfilled by any course on his part which does actually save harmless and protect the indemnitee, and the latter has no right to insist upon being saved harmless or protected in any particular manner;⁷ and it has been held sufficient that the indemnitee is saved harmless from loss or damage and protected from liability by reason of circumstances not in any manner due to the efforts of or brought about by the indemnitor.⁸

2. Breach — a. IN GENERAL. — There is a breach of the covenant and the indemnitee's right of recovery accrues as soon as he has suffered the loss or damage against which he was to be saved harmless, or the liability against which he was to be protected has become fixed and absolute,⁹ but until such

There could be no recovery upon an agreement to save harmless against any judgment to be rendered in a particular suit when the suit was determined in favor of the indemnitee and no judgment was rendered against him, and the indemnitor paid the expenses of the suit. The fact that at one stage of the suit the indemnitee offered to pay a certain amount in settlement, which offer was refused, does not entitle him to recover such amount from the indemnitor. *Bedford v. time there can be no recovery against the indemnitor.¹

Indemnitee Must Have Fully Performed His Part of Contract. — In order for an indemnitee to be entitled to recover upon the indemnity contract, he must have fully performed his part thereof.²

b. JUDGMENTS BY DEFAULT, CONSENT, ETC. — It has been held that a judgment by default against an indemnitee is sufficient to warrant a recovery under the indemnity contract,³ and the same view has been taken of a judgment by consent.⁴ But on the other hand it has been said that an indemnitee who has suffered judgment to go against him, either through ignorance, carelessness, or design, cannot visit the loss on his indemnitor.⁵

c. WHAT CONSTITUTES A PAYMENT BY INDEMNITEE. — In order to entitle a surety or indorser to recover upon a contract of indemnity to him in respect of such suretyship or indorsement, it is sufficient that he has given his own note in settlement of the liability which he assumed, where such note is accepted as a payment,⁶ and this although the note so given has not yet been paid.⁷

d. VOLUNTARY PAYMENTS BY INDEMNITEE. — While it is true that a bond or contract of indemnity does not protect the indemnitee against loss through a payment which is entirely voluntary on his part,⁸ it is not necessary in order that he may recover that he should wait for a demand, for which he is clearly liable, to be enforced against him by legal proceedings,⁹ nor, after Indemnity Against Several Notes. — If the obligor promises to pay and save harmless his obligee from three notes payable in three successive years, the obligee may pay each as it falls due, and he may bring a suit on each payment and recover thereon, without barring or prejudicing his right of action upon the remaining notes. Hosford v. Foote, 3 Vt. 391.

4. Judgment by Consent. — Conner v. Reeves, 103 N. Y. 527. In this case it was, however, considered that such a judgment formed presumptive evidence only in an action upon the bond.

Indemnity Against Mortgage. — If the vendee of lands agrees to assume and pay off a certain mortgage on the lands sold, as part of the consideration for the sale of the same, and the vendor is, through the vendee's fault, obliged to give a new mortgage therefor, the vendor is sufficiently damaged to give him a right of action on the vendee's agreement to indemnify. Bolles v. Beach, 22 N. J. L. 680, 53 Am. Dec. 263.

One who is indemnified by another to be the surety of a third person cannot recover from his indemnitor if there is nothing due at the time he discharges the debt and he is notified not to pay. Smith v. McGehee, 14 Ala. 404.

Estoppel Resulting from Instrument of Indemnity. — In Atkins v. Revell, 1 De G. F. & J. 360, it was held that the indemnitor of a surety was estopped by the instrument of indemnity from treating a payment by the indemnitee to the holder of the bill on which he was surety as voluntary and not made in satisfaction of a legal liability.

judgment has been rendered against him, that he should wait for execution to issue.¹

e. WHETHER INDEMNITEE MUST HAVE SUFFERED ACTUAL LOSS OR DAMAGE—(1) Affirmative View.—There are cases which have considered that it is always necessary in order to warrant a recovery by the indemnitee that he should have suffered some actual loss or damage.²

(2) Negative View.—On the other hand, it has been held that the mere incurring of liability is sufficient to give him a right of recovery.³

(3) The Best Rule—(a) Rule Stated.—But the best rule would seem to result from a partial adoption of both these views in a modified form, resulting in a rule which may be stated as follows: Where the contract is strictly one of indemnity⁴ the indemnitee cannot recover until he has suffered actual loss or damage; the mere incurring of liability gives him no such right;⁵ but where Payment to Prevent Distress.—A purchaser of land who has been indemnified by his vendor against certain arrears of rent to which the land was subject may recover on the bond of indemnity where he had paid the rent in order to prevent a distress, although he was not personally liable for such arrears and it is not shown that there was at the time of payment anything liable to distress upon the premises. *Vechte v. Case Criticised.—In Rockfeller v. Donnelly, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 623, it was held that a bond given pursuant to the statute to indemnify a town against the maintenance, etc., of a bastard child, was broken and an action might be maintained upon it as soon as the town became liable or bound to maintain the child, and without any actual disbursement, advance, or payment by the town. But in Chace v. Hinman, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 452, 24 Am. Dec. 39, it was said that this case went too far; and in Aberdeen v. Blackmar, 6 Hill (N. Y.) 324, it was characterized as "a very questionable case;" while in Weller v. Eames, 15 Minn. 461, 2 Am. Rep. 150, the court said: "Mr. Sedgwick in his work on Damages (pp. 309, 314) shows conclusively, as we think, that the rule laid down and followed in Rockfeller v. Donnelly, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 623, is neither good law nor good sense."

the contract is to protect against liability, the indemnitee may recover upon it as soon as his liability has become fixed and established, even though he has sustained no actual loss or damage at the time when he seeks to recover.¹

(b) Equitable Right to Relief Before Actual Loss. — There are, however, some cases which have recognized an equitable, as distinguished from a legal, right in an indemnitee to be secured against impending or imminent loss although no actual loss has as yet been sustained by him.²

f. CONTRACT TO DO A PARTICULAR ACT. — Where the promisor has undertaken to do a particular act or make a specified payment, as well as to indemnify the promisee, the contract is broken, and a recovery for such breach may be had, as soon as the time for doing such act or making such payment has arrived and the promisor has failed to perform his obligations,³ and in Indemnity Against "Payments." — An agreement by a purchaser of corporate stock to save the seller harmless "against the payment of any and all claims and demands" against the corporation for which he was personally liable is a contract of indemnity against the payment of such debts only, and there can be no recovery thereunder until the obligee has paid the liability specified. Cochran v. Selling, (Oregon 1899) 59 Pac. Rep. 329, citing 10 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW (1st ed.) 413.

A Threat of Suit on the part of the holder of a note against one who has signed the same for another does not entitle the person so signing to recover on a bond conditioned to save him harmless from all cost, damage, expense or trouble on account of so signing the note, even although in consequence of such threat and a fear of arrest the signer has omitted to go to a place where the transaction of his necessary business required him to be. such case it is no defense that the promisee has not been damnified.¹

g. WHETHER NOTICE TO INDEMNITOR OF SUIT AGAINST INDEMNITEE IS NECESSARY. — It has been considered that it is not necessary, in order to entitle the indemnitee to maintain an action upon a general promise of indemnity against damage or liability, that he should have given the indemnitor notice of the action or suit in which the judgment against the indemnitee, upon which the breach is predicated, was rendered.²

h. EVIDENCE. — A judgment against the indemnitee is evidence, in an action by him upon the contract or bond of indemnity, that he was liable in the action in which such judgment was rendered.³

Conclusive and Prima Facie Evidence. — Where the indemnitor has had notice of an action against his indemnitee and an opportunity to defend the same, a judgment rendered therein against the indemnitee is conclusive on the indemnitor as to the extent as well as the existence of the liability of the indemnitee.⁴ But in the absence of such notice the judgment is merely prima facie evidence of these matters as against the indemnitor.⁵

York v. Brady, 70 Hun (N. Y.) 250; Stroh v. Kimmel, 8 Watts (Pa.) 157.

Sufficiency of Evidence. — A judgment in favor of an indemnitee is warranted by evidence consisting of the introduction by the plaintiff of the written obligation by which the defendants bound themselves to save him from all loss by reason of his liability on certain notes, and also executions issued upon judgment recovered on the notes, upon which executions there is indorsed by the owners of the debts the receipt of the payment of the executions by the indemnitee and their assignment to him. Smith v. Barton, 94 Va. 158.

In an action on a bond to save harmless a surety on another bond, it is sufficient that the record of a judgment against the surety shows him to have been damnified, and the evidence upon which he became damnified need not be produced. Spratlin v. Hudspeth, Dudley (Ga.) 155.

Indemnity Against Judgments. — Where the indemnity is against judgments, a judgment recovered against the indemnitee is conclusive, if it was rendered in a contested suit; but is presumptive evidence only, as against the indemnitors, where it was taken by consent.¹

VIII. MEASURE OF RECOVERY — 1. In General. — The measure of recovery by an indemnitee is the full amount of the loss or damage which he has incurred, or the liability to which he has become subject, by reason of the matters in respect to which he was indemnified;² though, of course, where the indemnity is by bond in a penal sum the amount of recovery is limited to such penal sum,³ and where the indemnity is in the form of a note no amount greater than that expressed in the note can be recovered.⁴

2. Interest. — The indemnitee is entitled to interest on the amount which he has lost or been compelled to pay,⁵ even though such allowance have the effect of increasing his recovery to an amount greater than that mentioned as the penal sum in the bond given for his indemnity.⁶

3. Expenses of Litigation — a. COSTS. — The indemnitee is entitled to be reimbursed for the costs to which he has been subjected by reason of actions or suits against him in reference to the matter in which he is indemnified;⁷

establish their right to recover anything against the indemnitor.

Judgment Without Notice to Indemnitor Held Not Binding upon Him. — In an early Vermont decision it was held that if the obligee fails to notify the obligor, a judgment obtained against the former was res inter alios acta, and did not bind the obligor. Selectmen v. Miner, 8 Vt. 207.

Computation of Amount of Loss. — In a case where the plaintiff had contracted with the defendant that if the latter should be obliged to sell any of his own property at a loss, to raise funds to pay the debts of the plaintiff, such loss should be reimbursed to him, it was held that the fair construction of such agreement was that the loss contemplated by the parties was the difference between the actual value of the property and the price obtained upon the sale of it. *Beckley v. When Extra Interest Recovered Against Indemnitees Will Not Be Allowed. — In Lombard v. Fiske, 24 Me. 56, the defendants had undertaken to clear the plaintiff from all liabilities in respect to his share in a factory operated by an unincorporated company. A creditor of the company obtained judgment against the individuals composing it, and the judgment debtors were arrested on execution and gave bonds. Afterwards a suit was brought against the plaintiff on his bond, and judgment was rendered by default for the debt and costs, including the extra interest given by statute against the principal in such bonds without notice given by him to the defendants. It was held that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover of the defendants the extra interest so paid.

provided that under all the circumstances of the case he acted reasonably in defending such action.¹

b. ATTORNEY'S FEES. — It has also been considered that the indemnitee is entitled to be reimbursed for attorney's fees which he has had to pay in defending an action against him.²

IX. JOINT OR SEVERAL LIABILITY OF INDEMNITORS — 1. Agreement Purporting to Be Joint. — An agreement, purporting by its terms to be joint, to indemnify one who has become bail, is not rendered several by the fact that each of the indemnitors has annexed to his signature a character and figures indicating different sums in dollars and cents.³ And where several signers of a note have released one of their number from liability thereon, and agreed to indemnify him from any loss or damage on account of the note, this liability is joint, and the indemnitee can recover against all of them, though judgment has been rendered against him only for the balance remaining due after one of the indemnitors has paid his proportion of the note.⁴

2. Separate Agreements of Indemnity. — In a New York case where several persons had given separate agreements to indemnify, it was held that in a suit against one of the indemnitors it was not error to exclude proof of the other indemnity agreements, as their existence in no way affected the responsibility of the defendant;⁵ but in an English case where trustees had received from their cestuis que trustent separate covenants by which the latter undertook to indemnify the trustees against liabilities incurred in the execution of the trust, it was held that the trustees might file a bill against the cestuis que trustent jointly for a general account of the trust so that the liability of the indemnitors might be ascertained once for all.⁶

X. DEFENSES. — In defense to an action on a contract of indemnity the defendant may plead non damnificatus,⁷ or may show that the plaintiff has not complied with his part of the contract,⁸ but it is no answer to such an action that the defendant has not fulfilled other obligations to the plaintiff not directly connected with the promise of indemnity,⁹ nor can the contract be avoided on account of fraud in the original transaction in regard to which the indemnity was given,¹ nor because the plaintiff might, by pursuing a course other than that which he did pursue, have avoided loss, the plaintiff having acted in good faith.²

Indemnity to Officer of Corporation for Indorsing Notes. — It is no defense to an action on a contract to indemnify an officer of a corporation for indorsing notes of the corporation, that he issued and personally indorsed notes to an amount exceeding the limit fixed in the indemnity contract without any authority of the corporation, and that the property and assets of the corporation were by its authority applied to the payment of such notes and used for its benefit at a time when the corporation was in fact insolvent, nor does the fact that the officer received an increase of salary for indorsing the paper prevent him from resorting to the indemnity contract.³

XI. DISCHARGE OF INDEMNITOR. — Where one who has been indemnified for indorsing a note, and has been compelled to pay the same, releases the maker from his liability for the money so paid, this will operate to discharge the indemnitor from all liability.⁴

Indemnity Against Rents. — In an English case where upon the dissolution of a partnership one partner assigned to the other all his interest in two houses held under lease, and the latter covenanted to pay the rents and keep the former indemnified against them, and some time afterwards the indemnitee acquired the reversion of the property and also the leasehold interest which he had assigned to the indemnitor, it was held that this fact did not deprive him of the right to recover against the estate of the indemnitor for rents which had previously become due and which he had paid.⁵

XII. DEPOSITS FOR INDEMNITY. — It sometimes happens that a deposit of money or valuables is made for the purpose of protecting the person with whom they are deposited against a certain loss or liability, and in such case he is entitled to hold such deposit until it is ascertained that he will be subjected to no such loss or liability, or until he receives some other indemnity.⁶

Contribution Between Depositors. — Where, for the purpose of indemnification, two persons have made deposits, and a loss to the indemnitee has been made good entirely out of the deposit of one, he can enforce contribution from the other.⁷

Effect of Mistake of Indemnitee as to Value of Securities. — Where a person is at liberty to require either cash or securities to be deposited with him as indemnity for his promise to pay money, and he voluntarily chooses securities, without deceit or fraud of any kind, he thereby becomes just as much bound to make good his promise as he would have been had he asked for and received cash, though the securities prove to be less valuable than he thought they were.⁸

XIII. INDEMNITY MORTGAGES — 1. In General. — A contract to indemnify is often evidenced by a mortgage,⁹ and a mortgage may be shown to have been given simply for the purpose of indemnifying the mortgagee, although upon

4. Release of Maker of Note Discharges Indemnitor. — Jones v. Bacon, 145 N. Y. 446, 72 Hun (N. Y.) 506. The reason for this decision was that the indemnitor on making good the loss to the indemnitee would be entitled to the rights of the latter as against the maker of the note, and the action of the indemnitee in discharging the maker barred this right of the indemnitor. Compare Morehead v. Horner, 30 W. Va. 548.

INDENTURE. (See also the titles DEEDS, vol. 9, p. 87; SEAL.) — An indenture, in the language of the law, is a deed; that is, a writing sealed and delivered. It takes its name from being indented or cut on the top or on the side, either by a waving line or a line of indenture, instar dentium, so as to fit or aptly join its counterpart from which it is supposed to have been separated.⁴

Ohio Rule. — In order for an indemnity mortgage to be valid against creditors the affidavit must show that the mortgage was taken in good faith to indemnify against any loss resulting from the liability stated in the mortgage. A mere statement that the claim on which the mortgagee is surety is just and unpaid is not sufficient. Nesbit v. Worts, 37 Ohio St. 378; Blandy v. Benedict, 42 Ohio St. 295.

3. U. S. v. Irwin, 5 McLean (U. S.) 183.

4. Overseers of Poor v. Overseers of Poor, 6 N. J. L. 175.

In Bowen v. Beck, 94 N. Y. 89, the court said: "The conveyance to Beck and Tucker purports to be an indenture, which according to its proper signification is a deed inter partes or a mutual deed. It is said in Co. Litt. 231a: 'An indenture is a writing containing a conveyance, bargain, contract, covenants, or agreements between two or more.' And Sir Henry Finch, in his Book on the Law, 109, speaking of the different kinds of deeds, says: 'Indenture — that which is the mutual deed of both.'"

Indenting is no longer necessary. Currie v. Donald, 2 Wash. (Va.) 63.

Seal. — In Com. v. Wilbank, 10 S. & R. (Pa.) 417, it was held that a writing without seal was not an indenture within the meaning of a statute relating to apprenticeship. The court said: "I will not say that the word indenture, in its largest sense, might not comprehend a writing indented, though not under seal. But certain it is that when an indenture is spoken of, and particularly an indenture of apprenticeship, an instrument under seal is generally understood. It was said by Holt, C. J., in the case of Reg. v. Callingwood, 2 Ld. Raym. 1117, that an apprentice cannot be bound without deed; and the law is so laid down in 1 Burn's Just., title Apprentice, p. 37, and 1 Salk. 68. It might be fairly inferred, therefore, that our Act of Assembly required a deed, from the sense in which the word indenture was usually taken." See also North Brunswick v. Franklin, 16 N. J. L. 535.

Indenture means a writing sealed and delivered. Tod v. Baylor, 4 Leigh (Va.) 498.

Calling an instrument an indenture in the body of it is not a sufficient recognition of a scroll as a seal to make it a deed. Walker v. Keile, 8 Mo. 301.

Imports Seal in Pleading. — The term, when used in pleading, imports that the instrument referred to is sealed. Note to Cabell v. Vaughan, 1 Saund. 291; Heaton v. Woolfe, 2 Rolle 228; Bond v. Moyle, 2 Vent. 106; Woodcock v. Morgan, 6 Mod. 306; Moore v. Jones, 2 Stra. 815; Atkinson v. Coatsworth, 1 Stra. 512; Phillips v. Clift, 4 H. & N. 173; Beardsley v. Southmayd, 14 N. J. L. 542.

But in Magee v. Fisher, 8 Ala. 320, it was said that the terms indenture, "covenant," "demise," and "to farm let," though usually found in deeds, are not technical. "The use of these terms, therefore, in the declaration, does not necessarily imply that the instrument in which they were alleged to be, was sealed. That is only effected by the use of the terms 'deed,' or 'writing obligatory.'"

5. Independent Democrats. — At the general election in 1896 several candidates styling themselves "Independent Democrats" polled in Ramsey county, Minn., on an average, thirteen hundred votes, and one polled as high as two thousand three hundred and forty-three votes. The total vote polled in the county was about twenty-nine thousand. It was held that the court below was warranted, on the evidence, in finding that shortly prior to the election of 1898 ten certain persons acted fraudulently in assuming to act as the county committee of the "Independent Democratic party," in calling a county convention to nominate candidates, in publishing once in an obscure place in a daily paper a notice of such call, in meeting at the time and place appointed and nominating some of themselves as candidates for county offices, and in adjourning for eight days, at which time only seven of them met again and nominated six of themselves as such candidates. State v. District Ct., 74 Minn. 177.

Independently. — The word independently, as applied to a gift to a married woman, is not an appropriate word to describe the duration or unconditional character of the estate, but is regarded as necessarily implying an intention to exclude the husband. Johnson v. Johnson, 32 Ala. 643. See generally the title SEPARATE PROPERTY (OF MARRIED WOMEN).

Religious Society. (See the title RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES.) — Upon the question whether a religious society was independent the court said: "The charter of this congregation, obtained from the legislature in 1848, is relied on to show its independent character; and certainly it does not allude to any more general body of which it is to form a part. But, we may add, it does not forbid any connection with other congregations, and congregational individuality is not at all inconsistent with denominational unity, as any one that looks may see. And in many denominations it is quite common, not to say that it is the usual rule, to omit all notice of the denominational bond in their congregational charter, and this without meaning to affect the character of the congregation, as it was before the charter, or to declare it independent. Section 9 of the charter expressly forbids its enumeration of powers and privileges from including others not enumerated. The powers given to the congregational officers are no more exclusive of denominational character, powers, and laws, than is common in church charters, and, rightly understood, are not at all inconsistent with the associate duties of the congregation. The legislature never means, by granting or allowing such charters, to change the ecclesiastical status of congregations, but only to afford them a more advantageous civil status. And so this charter has been understood by this congregation ever since it was granted; for it has continued all its associated action without change, up to the time of this dispute. And it could not reasonably have supposed that the charter changed its ecclesiastical law relative to the appointment of pastors, for the charter declares nothing on that subject. It is argued, moreover, that every congregation is proved to be independent, because it is so declared in the 'History of the Church of God,' given in evidence, and especially because it is there declared that churches should be formed 'subject to no extrinsic or foreign jurisdiction, and governed by their own officers chosen by a majority of the members of each individual church.' This history is admitted to be an authentic exposition of the doctrine and order of the church — and was written by John Winebrenner, who was the founder of the sect, and who, as part of this quarrel, was expelled from the church, and died in expulsion — if the action of the majority of this congregation is to be sustained. Not much is to be made out of the word independent, for in ordinary usage its meaning is very indefinite. The tenant of the poorhouse likes to call himself an independent citizen, and no one need object very seriously to this, so long as he conforms to the laws of the place. Others have a better right to claim this distinction, and yet all must submit to the laws of the land. No man or body of men can be entirely independent of society and its laws. And yet there is a measure of independence in all associations, and its extent can be ascertained only by an observation of the facts that define it." Winebrenner v. Colder, 43 Pa. St. 252.

I. WHO ARE INDEPENDENT CONTRACTORS — 1. General Definition. — Generally speaking, an independent contractor is one who, in rendering services, exercises an independent employment or occupation, and represents his employer only as to the results of his work, and not as to the means whereby it is to be accomplished.¹ The word "results," however, is used in this connection in the sense of a production or product of some sort, and not of a service.²

An Employer Is Not Estopped to deny that the relation of master and servant exists between him and his independent contractor, merely because a servant of the latter had reasonable cause to believe from the acts of the employer that the contractor was merely a servant.³

Identity of Officers. — A construction company, however, having the same officers as the company for which it is doing work under a contract, such officers supervising the work, has been held not to be an independent contractor.⁴

Same Person Servant and Contractor. — A contractor for certain work may at the same time be a servant of the same employer in regard to other work to be done by him, so as to render the latter liable for his acts in connection with such other work.⁵

2. Right to Control Work. — The chief consideration which determines one to be an independent contractor is the fact that the employer has no right of control as to the mode of doing the work contracted for,⁶ though it has been

1. Employer Represented as to Results. — This, or a practically similar definition, is given in a number of late cases.

United States. — Casement v. Brown, 148 U. S. 615.

Maine. — McCarthy v. Second Parish, 71 Me. 323, 36 Am. Rep. 320.

Montana. — Jensen v. Barbour, 15 Mont. 582.

Virginia. — Bibb v. Norfolk, etc., R. Co., 87 Va. 711.

2. Result Distinct from Service. — Jensen v. Barbour, 15 Mont. 582, where De Witt, J., said: "One may contract to produce a house, a ship, or a locomotive, and such house or ship or locomotive produced is the 'result.' Such 'results' produced are often, and probably generally, by independent contractors. But we do not think that plowing a field, mowing a lawn, driving a carriage or a horse-car for one trip or for many trips a day, is a 'result' in the sense that the word is used in the rule. Such acts do not result in a product. They are simply a service."

3. Estoppel to Assert Relation. — Smith v. Belshaw, 89 Cal. 427; Johnson v. Owen, 33 Iowa 512. Compare Myles v. Ballston Terminal R. Co., 35 N. Y. App. Div. 143, where it was held that the employer was liable on the principle of estoppel for the wages of a contractor's servant.

4. Identity of Officers. — Chicago Economic Fuel Gas Co. v. Myers, 168 Ill. 139.

5. Same Person Servant and Contractor. — Samyn v. McClosky, 2 Ohio St. 536.

So in Toomey v. Donovan, 158 Mass. 232, it was decided that one doing work as an independent contractor might, at the same time, be the employer's representative for the purpose of looking after the machines used in doing the work, so as to render the employer liable under the Employer's Liability Act for the contractor's failure to do this properly. Compare Toledo Stove Co. v. Reep, 9 Ohio Cir. Dec. 467.

decided that the fact that by the contract of employment the employer foregoes this right of control does not make one who is otherwise a mere servant an independent contractor.¹ If the employer has the right of control, it is immaterial whether he actually exercises it.²

Contracts Reserving Control may assume a variety of forms, but generally there is a plain provision for supervision or direction by the employer or his representative;³ and so one contracting to do the work for a city, under the direction of certain officers, has been held to be a mere servant of the city.⁴

Surrender of Premises. — In some cases special reference is made to the fact that the premises are or are not surrendered to the contractor, as showing whether the employer has a right to control the method of work.⁵

3. Supervision and Approval of Work. — A reservation by the employer of the right by himself or his agent to supervise the work for the purpose merely of determining whether it is being done in conformity to the contract does not affect the independence of the relation.⁶

1. Illustration. — A firm of jobbing carpenters were customarily employed by a steamship company to make repairs on vessels when in port. The firm charged for work by the hour, and material by the foot, and the superintendent of the company and the captains of the vessels had the right to direct the extent and manner of repairs and alterations. It was held that the firm were servants of the steamship company, and not independent contractors. Atlantic Transport Co. v. Coneys 82 Fed. Rep. 177, 51 U. S. App. 570.

Contract Not to Control. — In Tiffin v. McCormack, 34 Ohio St. 638, 32 Am. Rep. 408 one hired to break stone in a quarry, receiving compensation according to the amount broken, was held to be a mere servant, though the employer "had no other or further control" over him, the court saying: "A master cannot exonerate himself from responsibility to third persons, which the law imposes upon him, for injury resulting from the misconduct of his servant, by contracting with the servanthat he will not exercise any control over him, and will not therefore be responsible for any injury that he may wrongfully inflict."

2. Exercise of Right of Control Unnecessary. — Campbell v. Lunsford, 83 Ala. 512; Linnehan v. Rollins, 137 Mass. 123, 50 Am. Rep. 287; Norwalk Gaslight Co. v. Norwalk, 63 Conn. 495.

3. Contracts Reserving Control. — One who was to do work under the control of the employer's superintendent, and to "remove all improper work or materials upon being directed so to do by the superintendent," was held to be a mere servant. Schwartz v. Gilmore, 45 Ill. 455, 92 Am. Dec. 227.

A contractor who agreed to take down a building, the work to be done carefully, under the owner's direction and subject to his approval, was likewise held to be a mere servant. Linnehan v. Rollins, 137 Mass. 123, 50 Am. Rep. 287. And a similar decision was made where the contract provided that the work was to be done under the supervision of the superintendent of the employer and subject to the employer's approval and acceptance. Donovan v. Oakland, etc., Rapid Transit Co., 102 Cal. 245. See also Hughbanks v. Boston Invest. Co., 92 Iowa 267.

4. Municipal Contracts. — Denver v. Rhodes, 9 Colo. 554; St. Paul v. Seitz, 3 Minn. 297, 74 Am. Dec. 753.

So there was no independent relation where it was provided that the city engineer should superintend the improvement and that any person employed on the work who disobeyed the city engineer should be discharged. Cooper v. Seattle, 16 Wash. 462, 58 Am. St. Rep. 46.

Effect of Statute. — And a similar effect was given to a statute requiring the board of public works to retain control of the mode and manner of the performance of the work, the presumption being that the contract conformed to the law. Harper v. Milwaukee, 30 Wis. 365.

5. Surrender of Premises. — Mumby v. Bowden, 25 Fla. 454; Jefferson v. Jameson, etc., Co., 165 Ill. 138; Bernauer v. Hartman Steel Co., 33 Ill. App. 491.

6. Right of Supervision — England. — Hardaker v. Idle Dist. Council, (1896) 1 Q. B. 335.

United States. — Casement v. Brown, 148 U. S. 615.

Supervision by Architect. — The fact that the work is to be supervised by an architect representing the owner is also immaterial if this involves merely his approval or disapproval of the results of the work, and not directions as to the mode of arriving at such results.¹

Under Direction and to Satisfaction of Employer. — And it has been held that a provision that the work shall be done under the direction and to the satisfaction of a representative of the employer does not make the employee a mere servant, but that such a provision is merely to secure a satisfactory performance of the work in compliance with the contract.²

4. Control as to Scope of Work. — Nor is it material that the contract provides that the employer shall, during the progress of the work, define and direct the scope thereof.³

5. Mode of Payment. — The fact that payment is made "by the job," or according to the amount of work done, does not make an employee an independent contractor,⁴ though it may be evidence that he is such.⁵ On the

But a Clause in the Contract providing that the "work of demolition is to be carried out according to the directions of the supervising architect, whose decisions on all points in dispute I agree to accept as final," was held to prevent the contractor from being independent. Faren v. Sellers, 39 La. Ann. 1011, 4 Am. St. Rep. 256.

And a like decision was made as to a contractor agreeing to carry forward the work under the control of the superintendent, to whose judgment as to work and materials he agreed to submit. Schwartz v. Gilmore, 45 Ill. 455, 92 Am. Dec. 227.

See also Norwalk Gaslight Co. v. Norwalk, 63 Conn. 495, in which very full powers of supervision and direction were held not to make the contractor a servant.

Supervision by Engineer. — The fact that the work was to be done under the "general supervision" of the employer's engineer was held not to make the employee a servant. Eaton v. European, etc., R. Co., 59 Me. 520, 8 Am. Rep. 430.

Illustrations. — In a contract with a city for the construction of a sewer, a stipulation that the work should be commenced and carried on at such times and in such places and in such a manner as the engineer of the city should direct was held not to be such a reservation of power as to make the contractor a mere servant. Erie v. Caulkins, 85 Pa. St. 247, 27 Am. Rep. 642.

So where one had a contract to construct a sewer, the city reserving the right to "vary, extend, or diminish the quantity of work during its progress," and before the work was completed he was directed to make changes in the sidewalk, and in doing this his workmen left a hole in the sidewalk into which the plaintiff fell and was injured, it was held that the defendant was an independent contractor. Charlock v. Freely, 125 N. Y. 357.

4. Payment by Job. — Sadler v. Henlock, 4 El. & Bl. 570, 82 E. C. L. 570; Waters v. Pioneer Fuel Co., 52 Minn. 474, 38 Am. St. Rep. 564; Tiffin v. McCormack, 34 Ohio St. 638, 32 Am. Rep. 408; Rummell v. Dilworth, 111 Pa. St. 343.

So a person employed by a coal company to unload its coal at a stipulated price per carload was held to be not an independent contractor, but a servant of the company. Holmes v. Tennessee Coal, etc., Co., 49 La. Ann. 1465.

5. Forsyth v. Hooper, 11 Allen (Mass.) 419.

other hand, the payment of a contractor according to the time consumed by him or his men in the work does not render him a servant merely,¹ though it is entitled to consideration as tending to show that the relation is that of master and servant.² Nor does a provision that the contractor shall be paid the cost of the work and a percentage thereon render him a mere servant.³ And the fact that no price for the job was fixed and no specifications were made as to the work to be done does not necessarily create the relation of master and servant.⁴

6. Liability to Discharge. — The fact that the employer may at any time terminate the employment, though strong evidence that the employee is a mere servant,⁵ is not conclusive in that regard.⁶

7. Control as to Employees. — The reservation to the employer of a right to dictate the dismissal of particular workmen employed by the contractor does not render the latter a mere servant,⁷ though this is, it appears, a matter entitled to considerable weight in determining the relation.⁸ Nor is the relation rendered dependent by the reservation of the right to object to the employment of particular persons,⁹ or by a provision for the annulment of the contract if the contractor fails to employ a force satisfactory in quantity and

1. Payment by Time. — Geer v. Darrow, 61 Conn. 220; Morgan v. Smith, 159 Mass. 570; Dane v. Cochrane Chemical Co., 164 Mass. 453; Larow v. Clute, (Supm. Ct. Gen. T.) 14 N. Y. Supp. 616; Harrison v. Collins, 86 Pa. St. 153, 27 Am. Rep. 699; Emmerson v. Fay, 94 Va. 60.

"That the work was charged for by the day could make no difference, and did not alter the position which Burford occupied, in reference to the defendant, as an independent contractor. It did not give the defendant control over the job, or authority to hire or discharge the men, or render him in any way liable to them instead of Burford." Miller, J., in Hexamer v. Webb, 101 N. Y. 377, 54 Am. Rep. 703.

2. Corbin v. American Mills, 27 Conn. 274, 71 Am. Dec. 63; Morgan v. Bowman, 22 Mo. 538.

3. Payment by Percentage of Cost. — Whitney, etc., Co. v. O'Rourke, 172 Ill. 177, affirming 68 Ill. App. 487; Morgan v. Smith, 159 Mass. 570. But see Hughbanks v. Boston Invest. Co., 92 Iowa 267.

4. Stipulations as to Work and Price. — Hexamer v. Webb, 101 N. Y. 384, 54 Am. Rep. 703. But in Dane v. Cochrane Chemical Co., 164 Mass. 453, it is said that when there are no specifications in advance of what is to be done, and no round price is agreed upon, and a carpenter is employed to make repairs and alterations to the satisfaction of his employer, to be paid according to the amount of work done, it would seem to be a reasonable inference that the employer retains the right to direct the manner in which the carpenter should do the work.

5. Liability to Discharge. — Blake v. Thirst, 2 H. & C. 20; Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Juneman, 71 Fed. Rep. 939, 30 U. S. App. 541; Indiana Iron Co. v. Cray, 19 Ind. App. 565; Morgan v. Bowman, 22 Mo. 538; Tiffin v. McCormack, 34 Ohio St. 638, 32 Am. Rep. 408. And see Toledo Stove Co. v. Reep, 9 Ohio Cir. Dec. 467.

6. Is Not Conclusive. — New Albany Forge, etc., Mill v. Cooper, 131 Ind. 363.

So in Robinson v. Webb, 11 Bush (Ky.) 464, it was held that the fact that the building contract authorized the owner's representative to employ another builder in case the work was delayed by the contractor did not negative the idea of an independent contract, but should be regarded as merely a stipulation securing a faithful compliance with his contract on the part of the builder.

7. Control as to Dismissal of Employees. — Harris v. McNamara, 97 Ala. 181; Bayer v. Chicago, etc. R. Co., 68 Ill. App. 219; Blumb v. Kansas City, 84 Mo. 113, 54 Am. Rep. 87; McKinley v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 40 Mo. App. 449; Erie v. Caulkins, 85 Pa. St. 253, 27 Am. Rep. 642; Rogers v. Florence R. Co., 31 S. Car. 378.

In Hobbit v. London, etc., R. Co., 4 Exch. 254, Rolfe, B. made use of the following language, quoted with approval in Cuff v. Newark, etc., R. Co., 35 N. J. L. 17, 10 Am. Rep. 205: "Our attention was directed during the argument to the provisions of the contract, whereby the defendants had the power of insisting on the removal of careless or incompetent workmen, and so it was contended they must be responsible for their nonremoval. But this power of removal does not seem to us to vary the case. The workman is still the servant of the contractor only, and the fact that the defendants might have insisted on his removal if they thought him careless or unskilful did not make him their servant."

8. Evidence as to Relation. — Speed v. Atlantic, etc., R. Co., 71 Mo. 303; Larson v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 110 Mo. 234; Chicago v. Joney, 60 Ill. 383, where the court says: "It appears the city retained a supervisory control over the work, and had power to dismiss any person employed by the contractors on the work, and the dismissions of the board of public works, who represented the city, were final and conclusive in every case that might arise under the contract. Here was dependence — servient — in the contractors, and for their negligence the doctrine of respondet superior must apply."

9. Right to Object to Employees. — Harris v. McNamara, 97 Ala. 181.

8. Character of Occupation. — Though the statement in the definition adopted at the beginning of this article, that the services are to be rendered in the course of "an independent employment or occupation," is authorized by the cases there cited, and accords with various text-books,² and some few cases emphasize the fact that the services were rendered in the exercise of a distinct and recognized trade or calling,³ in most of the cases such a requirement is not mentioned, and the true view is, perhaps, that the fact that the occupation is of that character is important merely as tending to show that the control of the methods of work was probably left to the contractor, who had previously done similar work as a part of his regular business, and consequently was better fitted than his employer to judge in regard thereto,⁴ and also as tending to show that he was a competent man to do the work, and therefore was properly selected for the purpose.⁵

9. Question of Law or Fact. — The question whether one is an independent contractor, when a matter to be decided upon oral evidence as to the amount of control or upon verbal contracts of employment, is a question for the jury,⁶ acting under instructions from the court as to what is requisite to constitute

2. Character of Occupation. — See supra, General Definition. See also Mechem on Agency, § 747; Shearman & Redfield on Negligence, § 164; Thompson on Negligence, vol. 2, p. 899.

Independent Employment. — A number of cases evidently use the phrase "independent employment" merely to describe the contractual relation of the employer to the employed. Smith v. Belshaw, 89 Cal. 427; Park v. Adams County, 3 Ind. App. 536; Wood v. Cobb, 13 Allen (Mass.) 58; Harrison v. Collins, 86 Pa. St. 153, 27 Am. Rep. 699.

And so in Hass v. Philadelphia, etc., Mail Steamship Co., 88 Pa. St. 269, 32 Am. Rep. 462, the court spoke approvingly of an instruction in which it was left to the jury to find whether the person whose negligence caused the injury was a simple agent, with the instruction that if he was the company was liable, but that it was not liable if he was in an "independent employment."

3. Exercise of Distinct Calling. — Thus in De Forrest v. Wright, 2 Mich. 368, Copeland, J., said: "The record shows that the draymen of the city of Detroit are a body of men in the exercise of a separate, distinct, and independent employment, using their own teams and drays, and duly licensed." And in Linton v. Smith, 8 Gray (Mass.) 147, it is said: "The business of stevedores is a separate, distinct, well-recognized business in Boston."

'The case shows that Canselo Winship was a slater by trade, and carried on the business of a slater, and had done so, in Portland, for more than twenty years, keeping a shop, and a slate on which to receive orders, and men constantly in his employ to assist in executing such orders as he should receive. He was, therefore, carrying on what the law denominates an independent business.'" McCarthy v. Second Parish, 71 Me. 324, 36 Am. Rep. 320. See also Brackett v. Lubke, 4 Allen (Mass.) 138, 81 Am. Dec. 694; Morgan v. Smith, 159 Mass. 574, quoted infra.

4. As Evidence of Character of Contract. —

"The further fact that the job was such as to require for its accomplishment some special knowledge and skill, falling within 'a regular independent employment' or 'distinct calling' which the employee followed as a business, would raise some probability that it was intended to leave to his judgment, to be exercised on his own responsibility, the means, the manner of using them, and all the details of the work." Pleasants, P. J., in Arasmith v. Temple, 11 Ill. App. 50.

The Uncertainty arises from the double meaning of the word "employment" in the sense of either a trade or a contract of hiring, as in the following cases, where it may mean either.

In Morgan v. Smith, 159 Mass. 574, Lathrop, J., said that the test is whether the employer was in the exercise of a distinct and independent employment, using his own means and methods for accomplishing his work, and not being under the immediate supervision and control of his employer.

And so in De Forrest v. Wright, 2 Mich. 370, Copeland, J., said: "Where the person employed is in the exercise of an independent and distinct employment, and not under the immediate control, direction, or supervision of the employer, the latter is not responsible for the negligence or misdoings of the former."

the relation.¹ When, however, the existence of the relation depends on a written contract of employment, it is for the court to construe the contract in this regard.²

II. EMPLOYER'S LIABILITY FOR CONTRACTOR'S ACTS — 1. General Rule. — Since the relation between parties which renders one liable to third persons for the acts or negligence of the other must be that of superior and subordinate, and is based on the control which the superior has the right to exercise over the acts of the subordinate in the performance of his duties, it follows that an employer is not so liable for the acts of an independent contractor, who is never subject to such control,³ nor is he liable for the acts of the employees and servants of such independent contractor.⁴ That this is the law is now generally conceded both in England and the United States,⁵

2. Question for Court. — Pioneer Fireproof Constr. Co. v. Hansen, 176 Ill. 100; Linnehan v. Rollins, 137 Mass. 123, 50 Am. Rep. 287; Robers v. Florence R. Co., 31 S. Car. 378.

3. Nonliability of Employer. — See the observations of Baron Rolfe in Hobbit v. London, etc., R. Co., 4 Exch. 255. And see Berg v. Parsons, 156 N. Y. 109.

4. Nonliability for Acts of Contractor's Employees. — In Quarman v. Burnett, 6 M. & W. 499, Baron Parke said: "Upon the principle that qui facit per alium facit per se, the master is responsible for the acts of his servant; and that person is undoubtedly liable, who stood in the relation of master to the wrongdoer; he who had selected him as his servant, from the knowledge of or belief in his skill and care, and who could remove him for misconduct, and whose orders he was bound to receive and obey. * * * But the liability, by virtue of the principle of relation of master and servant, must cease where the relation itself ceases to exist; and no other person than the master of such servant can be liable, on the simple ground that the servant is the servant of another, and his act the act of another."

One Principal Alone Liable. — In Laugher v. Pointer, 5 B. & C. 560, 12 E. C. L. 316, Little-dale, J., remarked, as to one employed by a contractor, that he was the servant of one or the other, but not the servant of one and the other, since the law does not recognize a several liability in two principals. To the same effect see Reedie v. London, etc., R. Co., 4 Exch. 244; Clark v. Hannibal, etc., R. Co., 36 Mo. 202; Hauser v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., (Supm. Ct. App. T.) 27 Misc. (N. Y.) 538; Blake v. Ferris, 5 N. Y. 48, 55 Am. Dec. 304.

The Impracticability and Injustice of a rule which would make the original employer liable for the acts of the contractor's servants is well brought out in Blake v. Ferris, 5 N. Y. 48, 55 Am. Dec. 304, where Mullett, J., speaking of a man about to build a house for himself, after saying that he might let out the building of the house to some person who would undertake to furnish all the materials and complete the building for a stipulated compensation, continued: "Would he thereby become the master of all the contractor's apprentices, servants and men employed by him, and render himself liable for all the injuries to third persons, which might be occasioned by their negligence or misconduct in doing any act tending to the construction of the house — for instance, by the carpenter's men, in getting out timber in the forest; by the stonecutter's servants, in blasting stone in the quarry, or by the teamsters in handling materials? Such consequences would indeed shock the common sense of all men. The truth is, such a contract does not constitute the contractor the agent or servant of the employer, nor authorize him to pledge the responsibility of the employer for the conduct of servants, nor for anything to be done in the execution of his contract."

The Georgia Code, § 3818 (Code 1882, § 2962), declares: "The employer generally is not responsible for torts committed by his employee when the latter exercises an independent business, and in it is not subject to the immediate direction and control of the employer."

been disapproved, expressly or impliedly, by all the courts in which the question has arisen.¹ The rule exempting the employer from liability has been applied in connection with many different classes of contracts of employment, among which may be mentioned building contracts,² contracts for trucking or drayage,³ for towage,⁴ for logging,⁵ for mining,⁶ to work as stevedore,⁷ to do plumbing,⁸ to do slating,⁹ to drive cattle,¹⁰ to clear land,¹¹ and to work a farm.¹²

Injuries Arising in Connection with Real Property. — At one time it was considered, or at least intimated, that a different principle applied in the case of injuries occasioned by the negligence or misconduct of a person while transacting any business connected with the improvement, use, or enjoyment of real property, and that in such a case the owner of the property was liable whether the wrongdoer was his servant or was executing an independent contract. This doctrine has, however, been entirely discarded, and it is now settled that an owner of real property incurs no greater liability on account of the acts of a contractor than does the owner of personal property.¹³

Liability for Acts of Subcontractors. — The principle of exemption enunciated above applies likewise in favor of the principal contractor as against any liability on his part for the acts of a subcontractor or of a subcontractor's servants, since he does not stand in the relation of master to the latter.¹⁴

13. Injuries Arising in Connection with Real Property. — This distinction was suggested in Bush v. Steinman, 1 B. & P. 404, by Eyre, C. J., as a ground of the defendant's liability, and in Laugher v. Pointer, 5 B. & C. 579, 12 E. C. L. 325, and Quarman v. Burnett, 6 M. & W. 499, such distinction was enunciated as a ground for holding the owner of personal property exempt from liability. In Reedie v. London, etc., R. Co., 4 Exch. 244, however, it was held that there was no such distinction, except when the acts complained of amounted to a nuisance. See also Blake v. Woolf, (1898) 2 Q. B. 426. Such a distinction, except perhaps in the early cases following Bush v. Steinman, 1 B. & P. 404, above referred to, has never obtained in the United States and has been expressly denied whenever adverted to. Robinson v. Webb, 11 Bush (Ky.) 464; *Gourdier v. Injuries to Contractor's Servants. — This principle is also applicable in the case of injuries to the contractor's servants resulting from the negligence of such contractor,¹ so as to exempt the contractor's employer from liability therefor, and likewise in the case of injuries to the contractor's servants from the negligence of another independent contractor.²

2. Transfer of Employee. — Cases occasionally arise in which one transfers his servant to a contractor employed by him, and the question in such a case is, in whose work is the servant engaged, and who has the right to control and direct his conduct at the time; such person being the one liable for his acts. It has accordingly been held that if the employer of a contractor lends one of his servants to the contractor to aid in the latter's work, the latter and not the original employer is liable for the acts of the servant.³

Railroad Employees. — This question has arisen most frequently in regard to train hands employed by a railroad company, and placed by the company, together with a construction train, at the service and under the control of an independent contractor doing work on the railroad; the decisions are to the effect that in such a case the employee becomes a servant of the contractor, who alone is liable for the employee's negligence.⁴

In Overton v. Freeman, 11 C. B. 867, 73 E. C. L. 867, the defendant, who had contracted with a parish to pave streets, made a subcontract for the laying of curbstones, and the subcontractor's servants left the stones on the street without any warning or safeguard, whereby the plaintiff was injured, and it was held that the defendant was not liable. Maule, J., said: "I think the present case falls within the principle of those authorities which have decided that the subcontractor, and not the person with whom he contracts, is liable civilly as well as criminally for any wrong done by himself or his servants in the execution of the work contracted for. I do not mean to say that in no case can a contractor be liable for the negligence of his subcontractor; but I say that the simple fact of his filling that character does not make him liable."

Drivers of Vehicles. — These cases are to be distinguished from those in which the negligence of the driver of a vehicle is held to be chargeable, not to the hirer thereof, who, though at the time directing its movements, cannot be regarded as controlling the driver in the matter wherein he is negligent, but to the proprietor of the vehicle, who has intrusted the general management and control of the vehicle to his own servant, the driver.¹

3. Injury from Acts Contracted for. — If the injury results directly from the acts called for or rendered necessary by the contract, and not from acts which are merely collateral to the contract, the employer is liable as if he had himself performed such acts.²

Contract for Repairing Canal. — In Williams v. Fresno Canal, etc., Co., 96 Cal. 14, 31 Am. St. Rep. 172, it was held that a canal company which contracted for the repair of its canal, the repairing to be made with soil taken from the plaintiff's land, was liable to the plaintiff for the damage to his land caused by the performance of the contract, and could not defend on the ground that the injury was actually done by the contractor.

Contract for Driving Logs. — So in McDonell v. Rifle Boom Co., 71 Mich. 61, where a boom company let to contractors the work of driving logs in a river in which the company had built a series of dams, it was held that if in order to fulfil the contract it was necessary that such quantities of logs should be kept below the lower dam as would cause a jam of several miles in length, and by this the water would be backed upon the plaintiff's land, the company was liable, but that if this was not necessary under the contract, the contractors alone would be liable.

Contract to Shore Walls. — In Ketcham v. Newman, 141 N. Y. 205, it was held that, since the New York law requires a landowner in New York City and Brooklyn when excavating for a building to shore up adjacent buildings only if "afforded the necessary license to enter on the adjoining land, and not otherwise,"

Defective Plans and Specifications furnished to the contractor are, upon this principle, a ground for imposing liability for injuries caused by such defects upon the employer who furnished the plans and specifications.¹

Contract for Nuisance. — The statement quite frequently found, that the employer is liable if the contract calls for the creation of a nuisance, is but an application, it seems, of the same idea.²

4. Legal Duties Not Transferable — a. IN GENERAL. — A person or corporation on whom positive duties are imposed by law cannot avoid liability for injuries resulting from failure to perform such duties, by employing a contractor for the purpose; nor, in such a case, is the fact that the injuries resulted from the contractor's negligence a defense.³

b. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS. — The most important application of this principle that one who is under a positive duty cannot relieve himself therefrom by delegating it to an independent contractor occurs in the case of a municipal corporation, which, by the decided weight of authority, is liable for injuries caused by defects in its streets or highways, though these are the direct result of the negligence of a contractor employed by it, since it is under the positive duty of keeping its streets in a safe condition;⁴ and the munici-a contract to do such shoring " as required by law " did not necessarily involve a trespass on the adjacent buildings, and the owner was not liable for injuries caused by the entry of the contractor on the adjacent land without the license of the occupants of that land.

The Necessity of an Act to complete the work does not render the employer liable if the injury is not a necessary result of that act but results merely from the negligence of the contractor in doing it. Brown v. McLeish, 71 Iowa 381.

So a railroad company was held not liable for injuries caused by the negligence of a contractor in managing a steam shovel merely because the contract contemplated the use of such shovel, the work being lawful and the shovel a customary appliance for the work. Hailey v. Troy, etc., R. Co., 57 Vt. 252, 52 Am. Rep. 129.

Illustrations. — In Jefferson v. Chapman, 127 Ill. 439, 11 Am. St. Rep. 136, an incorporated village was held liable for injuries caused by the act of one employed to grade a street, in not fastening the boards on a walk which it had been necessary for him to remove in the course of the work. So in Circleville v. Neuding, 41 Ohio St. 465, a city was held liable for the value of a horse killed by falling into an unguarded cistern being constructed by a contractor for the city.

Contract to Lowest Bidder. — The fact that the law requires the contract to be let to the lowest bidder does not, it seems, exempt the municipality. Detroit v. Corey, 9 Mich. 165, 80 Am. Dec. 78. Compare, however, California decisions in note infra, under next paragraph of the text.

Charter Exemption from Liability. — In Hincks v. Milwaukee, 46 Wis. 559, 32 Am. Rep. 735, it was decided that a provision in the city charter exempting the city from liability for injuries caused by the neglect of city contractors working in the streets was invalid as granting a special immunity.

1. Stipulations in Contract. — Pettengill v. Yonkers, 116 N. Y. 558, 15 Am. St. Rep. 442; Scanlon v. Watertown, 14 N. Y. App. Div. 1; Weber v. Buffalo R. Co., 20 N. Y. App. Div. 292.

Different Ground of Liability. — In Detroit v. Corey, 9 Mich. 165, 80 Am. Dec. 78, in which a city was held liable for the negligence of a sewer contractor making an excavation in the street, the decision was based not on the duty of the city to keep the streets in repair, but on the ground that the donee of a power to construct sewers is bound to guard against accidents arising from the construction. Compare Blumb v. Kansas City, 84 Mo. 112, 54 Am. Rep. 87.

2. Municipality Generally Not Liable for Contractor's Acts — Illinois. — East St. Louis v. Giblin, 3 Ill. App. 219; Nevins v. Peoria, 41 Ill. 502, 89 Am. Dec. 392.

Pennsylvania. — Heidenwag v. Philadelphia, 168 Pa. St. 72.

Wisconsin. — Kuehn v. Milwaukee, 92 Wis. 263.

Lighting Streets. — So where the statutes did not oblige the city council to keep the streets lighted, but authorized it to make contracts for the purpose, and at the time of the accident in question the streets were lighted by a company under contract with the city, it was held that the failure to keep a particular street lighted was negligence on the part of the contractor, and that the city was not liable for injuries resulting therefrom. Halifax v. Lordly, 20 Can. Sup. Ct. 505.

Sewers. — And injuries to land caused by the negligence of a city contractor in constructing sewers were likewise held not to give a cause of action against the city. Harding v. Boston, 163 Mass. 14.

Blasting in Street. — A municipality has been held to be free from liability for injuries to one on the street caused by blasting done by a city contractor, the street itself being in good order. Herrington v. Lansingburgh, 110 N. Y. 145, 6 Am. St. Rep. 348. But see Logansport v. Dick, 70 Ind. 65, 36 Am. Rep. 166, where allowing blasting by a contractor without proper precautions was decided to be a breach of the city's duty to keep the streets in safe condition.

Delay in Completion of Work. — Where a city contractor began a certain work but delayed its completion long beyond the time fixed for completing it, the city was held to be liable for

Contrary Decisions. — The only states in which it is held that a city is exempt from liability for injuries caused by defects in streets and highways, resulting from the negligence of an independent contractor, are California and Pennsylvania, in which the rule exempting an employer from liability for the acts of a contractor has been applied in the case of injuries from defective streets, without reference to the municipal duty of keeping the streets in safe condition.¹ In the first-named state the fact that the municipality is required by statute to let the doing of the work to a contractor seems also to have been regarded as being in itself ground for exempting it from liability.²

c. RAILROAD COMPANIES. — It is no defense to an action by a passenger for injuries caused by the obstruction of the track by work being done thereon, that the obstruction resulted from the negligence of an independent contractor;³ and the company is liable for defects in a highway crossing resulting from the negligence of a contractor.⁴ So it is no excuse for failure to construct a railroad fence, that an independent contractor had contracted to do it.⁵ And a railroad company was held to be liable for injuries resulting from failure to fence, though the road was at the time in the hands of a contractor who was grading the track, the contract not referring to the building of fences.⁶

d. CANAL COMPANIES. — A canal company whose charter required it to keep the bridges across the canal in repair was held to be unable to transfer such duty to an independent contractor.⁷

e. TURNPIKE COMPANIES. — A turnpike company likewise has been decided to be under a positive duty to the public, which it cannot delegate to a contractor.⁸

f. MASTER AND SERVANT. — A master's duty to furnish to his employees a safe place to work cannot be delegated to an independent contractor.⁹ A scaffolding or staging, however, has been held to be not a place for work, but rather an appliance or instrumentality for the doing of work, and a master damages arising from its own failure to complete the work. Vogel v. New York, 92 N. Y. 10, 44 Am. Rep. 349.

Penobscot R. Co.*, 49 Me. 119. But see remarks in Eaton v. European, etc., R. Co., 59 Me. 532, 8 Am. Rep. 430.

6. Pound v. Port Huron, etc., R. Co., 54 Mich. 13.

7. Canal Company. — Pennsylvania, etc., Canal Co. v. Graham, 63 Pa. St. 290, 3 Am. Rep. 549. In this case the court said that "where a corporation in consideration of the franchise granted to it is bound by its charter to keep a road or bridge in repair," it is not relieved from liability for injuries arising from want of repair by the fact that the work of construction was done under contract by competent workmen.

8. Turnpike Companies. — In Lancaster Ave. Imp. Co. v. Rhoads, 116 Pa. St. 377, 2 Am. St. Rep. 608, it was decided that a turnpike company undertaking to lower the grade of its road while in receipt of tolls from travelers must warn travelers of danger threatened by obstructions, and take measures to direct them in the proper route, and these duties cannot be shifted to an independent contractor.

But in City, etc., R. Co. v. Moores, 80 Md. 348, 45 Am. St. Rep. 345, while the general duty of the turnpike company to the public was recognized, it was decided not to be liable for the negligence of an independent contractor who, in using an engine on tracks already laid on the turnpike, is negligent in his mode of running it, the court distinguishing this from the case of an actual obstruction of the road.

9. Master's Duty to Furnish Safe Place for Work. — Trainor v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., 137 Pa. St. 148; Burnes v. Kansas City, etc., R. Co., 129 Mo. 41; The Magdaline, 91 Fed. Rep. 798. See the title MASTER AND SERVANT.

Illustration. — In Herdler v. Buck's Stove, etc., Co., 136 Mo. 3, it was decided that a servant directed to work in an unsafe place had a right of action against the master though the place was rendered unsafe by the negligence of an independent contractor.

who lets the construction thereof to a skilful and experienced builder is not liable to his servant for injuries resulting from negligence in its construction.¹

g. DUTY TO GUESTS. — The owner of premises which are under his control, who employs an independent contractor to do upon them work which, from its nature, is likely to render the premises dangerous to persons who may come upon them by the invitation of the owner, is not relieved, by reason of the contract, from the obligation of seeing that due care is used to protect such persons.²

h. LANDLORD AND TENANT. — A landlord making repairs to premises occupied by a tenant owes to the latter a duty of exercising reasonable care during the making of the repairs to protect the tenant from injuries which might, otherwise result from the character of the work undertaken, and this duty he cannot escape by employing an independent contractor to make the repairs,³ unless there is an agreement between the landlord and tenant that the repairs shall be thus made.⁴

i. ADJOINING OWNERS. — It has been decided in some cases that adjoining owners owe certain duties to each other which cannot be delegated to a contractor. So it has been held that one who is bound to remove a wall to avoid injury to neighboring property cannot exempt himself from liability by making a contract for the removal of the wall;⁵ and that where one adjoining owner has an easement of support in the adjoining land, the owner of the latter is not relieved of liability for the withdrawal of such support, by the fact that the work was done by an independent contractor.⁶ And one having

2. Duty to Guests. — Curtis v. Kiley, 153 Mass. 123.

So a company which by advertisement has induced persons to go on its premises to see an exhibition conducted by an independent contractor has been held liable for injuries to such persons resulting from the character of the exhibition itself, the company being in such case bound to warn or protect the persons invited. Richmond, etc., R. Co. v. Moore, 94 Va. 493; Thompson v. Lowell, etc., St. R. Co., 170 Mass. 577. But see Smith v. Benick, 87 Md. 610.

W. Rep. 404; Wertheimer v. Saunders, 95 Wis. 573; Wilber v. Follansbee, 97 Wis. 577. See the title LANDLORD AND TENANT.

Illustration. — In Sulzbacher v. Dickie, (C. Pl. Gen. T.) 51 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 500, 6 Daly (N. Y.) 469, it was held that where the owner of a building entered into a contract with the builder to put on a new roof at a stipulated price, and during the time of putting it on and after the removal of the old roof the tenant or subtenant was damaged by rain, because of the exposed condition of the building, the owner was liable for damages.

A Contrary View is apparently taken in Lawrence v. Shipman, 39 Conn. 587 (a decision by a Supreme Court judge as arbitrator). And in Missouri the landlord was held not to be liable for the death of the tenant's child caused by the negligence of a contractor employed by him in leaving unguarded an excavation called for by the contract. Wiese v. Remme, 140 Mo. 289. Compare O'Connor v. Schnepel, (N.

Y. Super. Ct. Gen. T.) 12 Misc. (N. Y.) 356, Blake v. Woolf, (1898) 2 Q. B. 426.

Surrender of Premises. — In some cases the landlord has been held liable for such injuries to the tenant, though the work was done under contract, merely because there was no surrender of the premises to the contractor, and, consequently, a want of independence of control. Glickauf v. Maurer, 75 Ill. 289, 20 Am. Rep. 238; Bernauer v. Hartman Steel Co., 33 Ill. App. 491; Mumby v. Bowden, 25 Fla. 454.

The decisions in these cases are likewise, it appears, based upon the liability of an employer contracting for dangerous work. See infra, this section, Work Intrinsically Dangerous or Probably Injurious. See also as to easement of support, Stevenson v. Wallace, 27 Gratt. (Va.) 77; Lemaitre v. Davis, 19 Ch. D. 281.

Statutory Right of Support. — In Dorrity v. Rapp, 72 N. Y. 307, it was decided that the statutory duty of a landowner intending to excavate, to support a wall upon adjoining land, was of a personal character of which he could not relieve himself by delegating the work of excavation to a contractor.

an interest in a party wall has been held to be bound to see that a contractor exercises reasonable care and skill in operations involving the use of the party wall.¹

Employer Not Liable. — Generally, however, the employer is not liable for injuries resulting to his adjoining owner from the negligence of a contractor.²

5. Work Intrinsically Dangerous or Probably Injurious. — If the work contracted for is of such a character that it is intrinsically dangerous or will probably result in injury to a third person, one contracting to have it done is liable for such injuries though the injury may be avoided if the contractor take proper precautions,³ a distinction being made between such a case and one in which the work contracted for is such that if properly done no injurious consequences can arise.⁴

1. Use of Party Wall. — The appellant and the respondent were owners of adjoining houses, between which was a party wall. The appellant's house also adjoined B.'s house, and between them was a party wall. The appellant employed a builder to pull down his house and rebuild it. In the course of rebuilding, the builder's workmen, in fixing a staircase, negligently and without the knowledge of the appellant cut into the party wall between the appellant's house and B.'s house, in consequence of which the appellant's house fell, and the fall injured the respondent's house. The cutting of the party wall was not authorized by the contract between the appellant and his builder, and it was held that the appellant could not get rid of the responsibility of seeing that the operations involving the use of the party wall were conducted with reasonable care, by delegating the performance to a third person, and that he was liable to the respondent for the injury to his house. Hughes v. Percival, 52 L. J. Q. B. 719, 8 App. Cas. 443, 49 L. T. N. S. 189, 31 W. R. 725, 47 J. P. 772.

But in Earl v. Beadleston, 42 N. Y. Super. Ct. Rep. 294, it was decided that one employing a contractor to take down a building whose beams rested in a party wall was not liable for the negligence of the contractor in doing this work in such a manner as to weaken the party wall to the injury of the adjoining owner, the presumption being that the contract was to have the house pulled down in a proper manner. Myers*, 168 Ill. 130.

Clearing Up Land — Spread of Fire. — In Black v. Christchurch Finance Co., (1894) A. C. 48, persons who employed a contractor to clear off brush from their lands, partly by cutting the brush and partly by burning it, were held liable for injuries to the property of an adjoining owner caused by the spreading of the fire, the operation of lighting a fire on open brush land being necessarily attended with danger.

See the title FIRE, vol. 13, p. 404.

4. Distinguished from Other Work. — Wabash, etc., R. Co. v. Farver, 111 Ind. 195, 60 Am. Rep. 696; Wood v. Independent School Dist., 44 Iowa 30; Maltbie v. Bolting, (N. Y. Super. Ct. Gen. T.) 6 Misc. (N. Y.) 339; Bailey v. Troy, etc., R. Co., 57 Vt. 262, 52 Am. Rep. 129. In Bower v. Peate, 1 Q. B. D. 321, Cockburn, C. J., says: "There is an obvious difference between committing work to a contractor to be executed, from which, if

Stipulations in the Contract that the contractor shall use the care to prevent harm which the hazardous nature of the work requires do not relieve him, since the employer is bound at his peril to see that such care is used.¹

6. Duties under License. — The grantee of a public license or privilege, who, by express provision in the grant or by necessary implication therefrom, is under an obligation to perform certain duties in consideration of the grant, is not, it seems, entitled to interpose the defense that he employed a contractor to do the work.²

properly done, no injurious consequences can arise, and handing over to him work to be done from which mischievous consequences will arise unless preventive measures are adopted. While it may be just to hold the party authorizing the work in the former case exempt from liability from injury resulting from negligence which he had no reason to anticipate, there is, on the other hand, good ground for holding him liable for injury caused by an act certain to be attended with injurious consequences if such consequences are not in fact prevented, no matter through whose default the omission to take the necessary measures for such prevention may arise."

New York Rule. — In Engel v. Eureka Club, 137 N. Y. 100, 33 Am. St. Rep. 692, reversing 59 Hun (N. Y.) 593, Andrews, C. J., laid down the rule that if the act to be done may safely be done in the exercise of due care, although in the absence of such care injurious consequences to third persons would be likely to result, the contractor alone is liable, provided it was his duty under the contract to exercise due care. In this case, the owner of property was held not to be liable for injuries caused in taking down a wall which, though weakened by age and decay, was not a nuisance in its existing state, but which fell, on removal of the roof by the contractor, through his failure to support it. Compare Dillon v. Hunt, 105 Mo. 154, 24 Am. St. Rep. 374.

1. Stipulations for Precautions. — Norwalk Gas-Light Co. v. Norwalk, 63 Conn. 495.

"A person causing something to be done the doing of which casts on him a duty, cannot escape from the responsibility attaching on him of seeing that duty performed, by delegating it to a contractor. He may bargain with the contractor that he shall perform the duty, and stipulate for an indemnity from him if it is not performed, but he cannot thereby relieve himself from liability to those injured by the failure to perform it." Lord Blackburn in Dalton v. Angus, 6 App. Cas. 740, citing Hole v. Sittingbourne, etc., R. Co., 6 H. & N. 488; Pickard v. Smith, 10 C. B. N. S. 473, 100 E. C. L. 473; Tarry v. Ashton, 1 Q. B. D. 314, and approving Bower v. Peate, 1 Q. B. D. 321, in which it was held that a man who employed a contractor to remove soil constituting his neighbor's right of support could not exempt himself from liability by providing that the contractor should take measures to support the neighbor's house. See also to the same effect, Black v. Christchurch Finance Co., (1894) A. C. 48; Hardaker v. Idle Dist. Council, (1896) 1 Q. B. 335.

Contrary Decisions. — But see McCleary v. Kent, 3 Duer (N. Y.) 27; Sulzbacher v. Dickie, (C. Pl. Gen. T.) 51 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 523, to the effect that the employer may provide in the contract that the precautions shall be taken by the contractor.

Blasting by Independent Contractors. — See the title EXPLOSIONS AND EXLOSIVES, vol. 12, p. 499.

Metropolitan R. Co.*, 149 Mass. 340, 14 Am. St. Rep. 427; Darmstaetter v. Moynahan, 27 Mich. 188; McWilliams v. Detroit Cent. Mills Co., 31 Mich. 274; Downey v. Low, 22 N. Y. App. Div. 460; Reuben v. Swigart, 15 Ohio Cir. Ct. 565, 7 Ohio Cir. Dec. 638.

Illustrations. — In Bohrer v. Dienhart Harness Co., (Ind. App. 1896) 45 N. E. Rep. 668, it was decided that the owner of a building who directed an independent contractor to place material in the street, the city having given the owner permission to place it in the street provided the gutter was not obstructed, was liable for damages caused by the contractor obstructing the gutter with the material.

So a company which obtained leave to dig up streets and lay its pipes along them was held to be liable for injuries caused by the defective filling of a trench by one who had contracted to do the work for the company. Colgrove v. Smith, 102 Cal. 220; McCamus v. Citizens' Gas Light Co., 40 Barb. (N. Y.) 380.

Contrary Decisions. — But see Fulton County St. R. Co. v. McConnell, 87 Ga. 756, where a railroad company was held not liable for the negligence of a contractor constructing the railroad in the street under a license to do so; Simmons, J., saying: "It was argued, however, that this rule [of independent contractors] does not apply where the work is to be performed in a public thoroughfare; that the license to obstruct the street was given specially to the railroad company, and could not be delegated to the contractor, that where railroads are built in a public thoroughfare the rights of the public to the use of the thoroughfare are involved, and the rule should be stricter than where the rights of individuals merely are affected. We have been unable to find any case where this distinction is recognized." See also Smith v. Simmons, 103 Pa. St. 32, 49 Am. Rep. 113, where it was decided that one who dug a ditch in a street for the laying of a water pipe under a municipal license was not liable for injuries caused by the negligence of the contractor employed to do the work in leaving a trench unprotected.

Building Laws do not confer a privilege of building within this rule, so as to render the employer liable for the acts of the contractor. Burke v. Ireland, 26 N. Y. App. Div. 487.

7. Contract for Illegal Act. — The employer is liable for acts of the contractor done in the performance of an illegal act.¹ On this principle a landowner who employed a building contractor has been held to be liable for any injuries resulting from an excavation illegally made in the sidewalk by the contractor without authority from the city or state.²

8. Violation of Ordinance. — The violation of an ordinance requiring certain precautions to be taken to avoid injuries to third persons during the performance of certain work is not, it has been held, excused by the fact that the one sought to be charged contracted to have another do the work, and the latter failed to take the prescribed precautions.³

9. Delegation of Charter Powers. — The principle that charter powers cannot be delegated sometimes affects the liability of a corporation for the acts of a contractor employed by it. This doctrine has been applied in the case of railroads or other public corporations exercising the power of eminent domain, the corporation being held liable for the acts of a contractor done in the exercise of that power.⁴

In Illinois this ground for imposing liability on the corporation employer has been carried so far, apparently, as to make the corporation liable for any trespass on land caused by a railroad contractor engaged in the work of construction;⁵ a view not adopted in other states.⁶ But even in that state the liability of the employer does not, it is said, extend to cases in which the contractor is acting merely in the exercise of his powers as an individual.⁷

Operation of Railroad. — On the same principle a railroad company has been held liable for the negligence of a contractor to whom it has delegated the operation of its road.⁸

1. Illegal Act. — Ellis v. Sheffield Gas Consumers Co., 2 El. & Bl. 767, 75 E. C. L. 767; Walker v. McMillan, 6 Can. Sup. Ct. 241; Barry v. Terkildsen, 72 Cal. 254, 1 Am. St. Rep. 55; Smith v. Simmons, 103 Pa. St. 32; 49 Am. Rep. 113; Heidenwag v. Philadelphia, 168 Pa. St. 72.

2. Excavation in Sidewalk. — Congreve v. Smith, 18 N. Y. 79, affirming 5 Duer (N. Y.) 495; Creed v. Hartmann, 29 N. Y. 591, 86 Am. Dec. 341; Clark v. Fry, 8 Ohio St. 359, 72 Am. Dec. 590.

In Doran v. Flood, 47 Fed. Rep. 543, where builders gave a contract for hauling piles for a building, at a particularly small price, to one who had no trucks or facilities for hauling them otherwise than by dragging them on the ground, it was held to be a question for the jury whether it was not the understanding that they should be hauled in that way, so as to render the employers liable for injuries caused thereby, such dragging being in violation of an ordinance.

3. Violation of Ordinance. — Where an ordinance required the owner of materials forming an obstruction in the street to place thereon, before dark, lights which would burn until daylight, such owner was held to be liable for an injury arising from the negligent performance of this duty by a contractor employed by him. Wilson v. White, 71 Ga. 506, 51 Am. Rep. 269. And so in the case of an ordinance requiring the protection of an excavation made in building, Spence v. Schultz, 103 Cal. 208; or the erection of a roofed passageway over the sidewalk after the completion of the first story of a building, Smith v. Milwaukee Builders', etc., Exch., 91 Wis. 360, 51 Am. St. Rep. 912.

4. Exercise of Power of Eminent Domain. — In Lesh v. Wabash Nav. Co., 14 Ill. 85, 56 Am.

Dec. 494, and Hinde v. Wabash Nav. Co., 15 Ill. 73, it was held that when the charter of a company authorized it to enter on adjoining lands to take material therefrom, the company could be made liable for material so taken by a contractor for construction, though the contract required the contractor to furnish the material. To the same effect see Vermont Cent. R. Co. v. Baxter, 22 Vt. 365; Waters v. Greenleaf-Johnson Lumber Co., 115 N. Car. 648.

5. Illinois Cases — Trespass by Contractor. — In Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. McCarthy, 20 Ill. 388, 71 Am. Dec. 285, the liability of the company was extended to the case of injuries caused to land through which the road was being built, by the removal of fences therefrom, on the ground that the contractor had no right to be on such land except through the authority of the company under the charter. And in Rockford, etc., R. Co. v. Wells, 66 Ill. 321, and Cairo, etc., R. Co. v. Woosley, 85 Ill. 370, the same rule was applied in the case of the wrongful entry by contractors on and injuries to land upon which the railroad company was not authorized to enter. See also St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Drennan, 26 Ill. App. 263.

6. See infra, Special Applications of Rule — Contracts for Railroad Construction.

7. Contractor's Exercise of Individual Rights. — West v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 63 Ill. 546, where it was held that a railroad company was not liable to an employee of a contractor for injuries caused by the contractor's use of corrosive sublimate to preserve the timbers.

8. Operation of Railroad. — Speed v. Atlantic, etc., R. Co., 71 Mo. 303.

In Philadelphia, etc., R. Co. v. Hahn, (Pa. 1888) 12 Atl. Rep. 479, it was decided that a railroad company which employed a contractor

An Electric-light Company furnishing light to a city has, on the same principle, been held to be liable for injuries caused by contractors operating its works.¹

10. Duties Imposed by Contract. — One who has by contract assumed certain liabilities cannot free himself therefrom by the employment of an independent contractor;² and this principle has been held to be applicable when the contract is merely one implied by law.³

11. Incompetent Contractor. — The employer is, it seems, under the obligation of choosing a fit and competent contractor, and is liable for injuries to third persons resulting from his employment of an incompetent one with knowledge of his incompetency;⁴ and it is said that to exempt him from liato move its cars between certain parts of a city is nevertheless liable for injuries caused by the negligence of such contractor, the court saying: "If it can contract for horsepower so may it for steam, and it follows that it might relieve itself of all responsibility by contract with its engineers and conductors for the running of its locomotives and trains." But see to the contrary, Schular v. Hudson River R. Co., 38 Barb. (N. Y.) 653.

The Carrying of Passengers, as distinct from construction materials, by a contractor for the construction of a railroad, has been made a ground for imposing liability upon the railroad company, Macon, etc., R. Co. v. Mayes, 49 Ga. 355, 15 Am. Rep. 678, but the contrary has likewise been decided. Kansas Cent. R. Co. v. Fitzsimmons, 18 Kan. 34; Union Pac. R. Co. v. Hause, 1 Wyo. 27.

Injuries to Cattle. — It has been held that a railroad company is liable for injuries to cattle by trains which are being run by a contractor. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Finnigan, 21 Ill. 646; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Whipple, 22 Ill. 105; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Kanouse, 39 Ill. 272, 89 Am. Dec. 307; Toledo, etc., R. Co. v. Rumbold, 40 Ill. 143. See also infra, Special Applications of Rule — Contracts for Railroad Construction.

Limitation of Doctrine. — It is stated that "the principle that a railroad company cannot delegate to a contractor its chartered rights and privileges, so as to exempt it from liability, does not extend to the use of the ordinary means employed for the construction of the roads, but to the use of such extraordinary powers as the corporation itself could not exercise without first having complied with the conditions of legislative grant. In other words, where the wrong and injury for which the action is brought were committed in the performance of acts by virtue of the authority of the corporation derived from its charter, and could have been performed in no other way, then the party injured has the right to hold the corporation responsible, because it is really the corporation that is acting." Sanford v. Pawtucket St. R. Co., 19 R. I. 537; Atlanta, etc., R. Co. v. Kimberly, 87 Ga. 172, 27 Am. St. Rep. 231. See also remarks in Rogers v. Florence R. Co., 31 S. Car. 378.

1. In Illinois. — Capital Electric Co. v. Hauswald, 78 Ill. App. 359.

2. Contract Obligations. — Montgomery Gas-Light Co. v. Montgomery, etc., R. Co., 86 Ala. 733; Atlanta, etc., R. Co. v. Kimberly, 87 Ga. 161, 27 Am. St. Rep. 231; Waller v. Lasher, 37 Ill. App. 609.

In St. Paul Water Co. v. Ware, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 566, an incorporated company undertaking to lay water pipes in the city agreed with the city to protect all persons against damages by reason of excavations made in laying the pipes, and to be responsible for damages resulting from the negligence of the defendant's employees; and it was decided that the company was liable for injuries to a traveler caused by the negligence of a person with whom it contracted for the doing of part of the work. But see Blake v. Ferris, 5 N. Y. 48, 55 Am. Dec. 304, in which it was decided that such a proviso did not inure to the benefit of a stranger.

Municipal Corporation. — In Leeds v. Richmond, 102 Ind. 372, it was decided that a municipality which, in securing a right of way through private property, expressly agreed to pay all damages caused by the construction of the improvement, could not evade the payment of such damages by having the work done by an independent contractor.

Contract with State. — In Weber v. Buffalo R. Co., 20 N. Y. App. Div. 292, it was decided that a street-railway company which obtained permission from the state to reconstruct a bridge over a canal on condition that it should be responsible for and pay all damages arising from the reconstruction, as provided by statute, assumed the duty of the state to keep the roadway in proper condition, of which it could not divest itself by delegating the work of reconstruction to an independent contractor, and hence it was liable for the injuries caused by the contractor's failure to keep the roadway in safe condition.

3. Implied Contract. — In Francis v. Cockrell, L. R. 5 Q. B. 185, it was decided that one causing the erection of a building for a public exhibition impliedly warranted the safety of the building to persons entering it to view the exhibition, and that therefore he was liable to such person for injuries caused by defects in the building, though it was constructed by an independent contractor. This case is cited with approval in Edwards v. New York, etc., R. Co., 98 N. Y. 245, 39 Am. Rep. 659; Fox v. Buffalo Park, 21 N. Y. App. Div. 321. But compare Searle v. Laverick, L. R. 9 Q. B. 122.

4. Incompetency of Contractor. — That the employer is liable if he knowingly chooses an incompetent contractor, is recognized in the following cases: Brown v. Accrington Cotton Spinning, etc., Co., 3 H. & C. 511; Connors v. Hennessey, 112 Mass. 96; Sturges v. Society, etc., 130 Mass. 414, 39 Am. Rep. 463; Cuff v. Newark, etc., R. Co., 35 N. J. L. 17, 10 Am. Rep. 205; Ardesco Oil Co. v. Gilson, 63 Pa. St. 146; Mansfield Coal, etc., Co. v. McEnery, 91 Pa. St. 185, 36 Am. Rep. 662. So it was debility it is not enough that he did not knowingly employ an incompetent contractor, but he must have exercised reasonable care to select a competent one.¹ The same principle seems to be involved in a decision that one who employs a contractor whom he knows to be in the habit of doing work in an unsafe manner, is liable as having impliedly contracted for that sort of work.² In Tennessee, however, it is expressly stated that the character of the contractor, and want of care in selecting him, are ordinarily immaterial;³ and the New York rule in this regard does not appear to be clearly settled.⁴

12. Unsafe Premises. — If injury results from the employer's failure to take precautions which he should have taken to render the premises safe, he is liable for such injuries to servants of the contractor, and to others presumably, whom he expressly or impliedly invites to come upon the premises during the doing of the work by the contractor.⁵

Employment of Architect. — But if one employs a competent architect to design a building, he is not liable to employees of a contractor injured by the collapse of the building during its construction.⁶

13. Defective Appliances. — The employer is likewise liable for injuries arising from defects in appliances furnished by him to the contractor for the doing of the work, if he failed to exercise ordinary care to furnish safe and proper appliances.⁷

Appliances on Vessels. — This rule has been quite frequently applied as against owners of vessels furnishing defective appliances for the loading or unloading cided that one who employed a blacksmith to make alterations in a building was liable for the consequences of the latter's unskillfulness under circumstances which would not have rendered him liable if he had employed a competent builder. Evans v. Murphy, 87 Md. 498.

4. New York Decision. — In Berg v. Parsons, 156 N. Y. 109, which was an action for injuries to property from blasting, Gray, J., in a dissenting opinion concurred in by Bartlett and Haight, JJ., said: "It seems to me a proposition as clear as it is reasonable, that the assumption that there has been an exercise of due care in the selection of a competent and careful contractor, is a part of the foundation for the doctrine. I do not think that it would do to hold that a person, by the mere act of employing a contractor to do some work of a nature in itself obviously hazardous to others, thereby discharges himself of all responsibility." This language would seem to restrict the employer's duty in this respect to cases of contracts for work of a necessarily hazardous character. The majority opinion placed the defendant's liability upon the general doctrine of independent contractors, and made no reference, in reciting the recognized exceptions to the rule, or elsewhere, to the question of the employer's duty to exercise care to choose a competent contractor, though this was expressly made by the pleadings a ground of liability, and was the basis of the decision on the intermediate appeal, (84 Hun (N. Y.) 60) in favor of the plaintiff.

5. Unsafe Premises. — Perkins v. Furness, 167 Mass. 403, Horner v. Nicholson, 56 Mo. 220.

In Lake Superior Iron Co. v. Erickson, 39

Mich. 492, 33 Am. Rep. 423, it was decided that a mining company which let out the working of the mine to contractors was liable for the death of a servant of one of the contractors, who was struck by the fall of a piece of rock through the failure to insert a supporting timber, this being a duty which by the contract was imposed on the company and not on the contractor. A similar decision was rendered in Kelly v. Howell, 41 Ohio St. 438.

But if a contractor working the mine assumes complete control thereof, under the terms of the contract, the mine owner is not liable for injuries to a workman caused by a failure to properly inspect it, it being in a safe condition when turned over to the contractor. Samuelson v. Cleveland Iron Min. Co., 49 Mich. 164, 43 Am. Rep. 456.

Injuries to Subcontractor's Servant. — So it was held that an employee of a subcontractor who was injured by the contractor's negligence in doing the portion of work not sublet could recover against the latter. Johnston v. Ott, 155 Pa. St. 17.

A railroad company which furnished to a contractor an engine and train, upon which a fireman already in the service of the company was, by it, ordered to work, was held to be liable to him for personal injuries caused by defects in the engine attributable to the company's negligence, though the train was entirely in the control of the contractor. Savannah, etc., R. Co. v. Phillips, 90 Ga. 829.

of the vessels, where, because of such defects, injuries resulted to employees of the stevedore.¹

Unsafe Scaffolding. — So the owner of property who undertook to furnish a scaffold or staging for the use of the contractor's employees has been held liable for injuries to such employees resulting from his failure to use due diligence to secure a safe scaffold;² and in Massachusetts the owner, though himself free from negligence, has been held liable for injuries caused by a defective scaffold constructed by an independent contractor and accepted by the employer after its completion.³

Repair of Appliances. — But the employer is not liable for injuries resulting from his subsequent failure to keep the appliances in repair if it is not his duty under the contract to do so.⁴

14. Interference by Employer. — The employer is liable for the acts of a contractor originally occupying an independent position, if he assumes control of the work and directs the contractor in regard to the method of doing it.⁵

15. Completion and Acceptance of Work. — An employer who accepts the result of the work done by an independent contractor is, it seems, liable for injuries thereafter arising from defects in the work,⁶ provided he knew of the

4. Repair of Appliances. — In King v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 66 N. Y. 181, 23 Am. Rep. 37, the fact that the employer furnished the machine was held not to make him liable if it subsequently got out of repair while being used by the contractor, especially if the machine was not inherently dangerous.

Duties under Contract. — In Toomey v. Donovan, 153 Mass. 232, a workman employed by an independent contractor who had charge of a department in a factory was held to be entitled to recover as against the owner of the factory for injuries caused by a defective machine, such owner having engaged with the contractor to keep the machine in repair; the court stating that this liability arose not out of any contract, but merely from his neglect of a common-law duty.

5. Interference by Employer. — Burgess v. Gray, 1 C. B. 578, 50 E. C. L. 578; Norwalk

So in Savannah, etc., R. Co. v. Phillips, 90 Ga. 829, where, though the contract for the laying of a railroad track made the employee an independent contractor, the employer thereafter took charge of the work and while it was in progress required certain portions of it to be done over again in accordance with specific directions by the employer, whose officers gave personal attention to the details of the construction and assumed general management of the enterprise, and it was held that the employee was the mere servant of the employer, and that the latter was liable for his acts.

Creation of Nuisance. — Apparently the same idea is involved in the statement that the employer is liable if the work creates a nuisance because improperly done. Surges v. Society, etc., 130 Mass. 414, 39 Am. Rep. 462; Vogel v. New York, 92 N. Y. 10, 44 Am. Rep. 349.

In Deford v. State, 30 Md. 179, it was held that the owner of a building in the course of erection by an independent contractor was liable for injuries caused by the blowing down of a wall which was so defectively constructed by the contractor as to constitute a nuisance.

Work of Subcontractor. — A contractor like-defects or could have known of them by a careful examination of the work,¹ and provided also the defects which caused the accident affected the sufficiency of the structure or article for the purpose for which it was intended.² Nor is a formal acceptance of the work necessary to render the employer liable, if he in fact assumes control of the structure or premises.³

16. Special Applications of Rule—a. EXCAVATIONS AND OBSTRUCTIONS IN STREETS.—There is much confusion in the cases as to the liability of an abutting owner for injuries to travelers from excavations and obstructions in a street caused by an independent contractor working on abutting property. It has in some states been held that the owner of such property who makes a contract which expressly provides for or necessarily involves the making of an excavation in the highway, is liable for injuries caused by a failure to guard such excavation, the work being inherently dangerous, and the excavation if unguarded being a nuisance.⁴ In Massachusetts the rule would seem to be generally as just stated, subject to limitations which may be developed and established in future decisions;⁵ and such seems to be the law in Ohio, though the cases hardly justify a positive statement to that effect.⁶ In New York it wise is liable for the defects in the work of a subcontractor which cause injury to third persons, if he accepts the work on its completion with knowledge of the defects. Berberich v. Ebach, 131 Pa. St. 165; Carey v. Courcelle, 17 La. Ann. 108; Bast v. Leonard, 15 Minn. 304.

2. Propriety of Use.—In Fanjoy v. Seales, 29 Cal. 244, it was decided that the owner of a building, by accepting it from the contractor and allowing it to remain in the condition in which it was accepted, assumed as to third persons its sufficiency for the uses and purposes for which it was constructed, but that he was not liable for injuries to a painter resulting from the fall of a cornice from which the painter had suspended a staging, since the cornice was not constructed for any such use or purpose and was intended merely for ornamental purposes.

5. Massachusetts Decisions.—In Woodman v. Metropolitan R. Co., 149 Mass. 335, 14 Am. St. Rep. 427, a railroad corporation had been authorized to lay a new track in a city street, and a contractor, to whom it committed the work, left the street in a dangerous condition. The railroad company was held liable. Holmes, J., said: "If the performance of a lawful contract necessarily will bring wrongful consequences to pass unless guarded against, and if, as in the present case, the contract cannot be performed except under the right of the employer, who retains the right of access to the premises, the law may require the employer, at his peril, to see that due care is used to prevent harm, whatever the nature of his contract with those whom he employs. Laying the track for the defendant necessitated the digging up of the highway, and the obstruction of it with earth and materials. This obstruction would be a nuisance unless properly guarded against. The work was done under a permit issued to the defendant."

* * * We are of opinion that the defendant, having caused the highway to be obstructed, was bound at its peril to see that a nuisance was not created." This language is quoted and approved in Downey v. Low, 22 N. Y. App. Div. 460; Johnston v. Phoenix Bridge Co., 44 N. Y. App. Div. 581. Compare dicta of Gray, C. J., in Gorham v. Gross, 125 Mass. 232, 28 Am. Rep. 224, and see Hilliard v. Richardson, 3 Gray (Mass.) 349, 63 Am. is held that one who makes an excavation in the street, without authority from a city or the state, is liable for injuries resulting from a failure to guard it, though he employs an independent contractor to do the work;¹ but the employer is not liable if the right to make the excavation is given by the state or city authorities,² nor where the excavation or obstruction was not called for by the contract.³ In other states it has been decided that a property owner is not liable for the failure of the contractor, who has exclusive control of the work, to maintain suitable guards about any excavation necessary for the carrying out of the contract,⁴ though the employer is of course liable if he retains direction and supervision of the work so that the contractor does not stand in an independent position.⁵

b. CONTRACTS FOR RAILROAD CONSTRUCTION. — With the exception of the cases above referred to, deciding that a railroad company cannot relieve itself from its legal duties by employing a contractor to perform them,⁶ nor delegate its charter powers,⁷ a railroad company is as free as any corporation or individual from liability for injuries caused by an independent contractor. Accordingly a railroad company has been held not to be liable for injuries caused to persons or property by the wrongful acts of a contractor in blasting,⁸ removing fences,⁹ clearing land by the use of fire,¹⁰ using appliances calculated to frighten horses,¹¹ managing construction train,¹² loading cars,¹³ or committing trespasses on neighboring property,¹⁴ or for failure to provide drains in constructing the railroad whereby injuries result before the road is turned over to the railroad company.¹ But in case of injuries to property resulting from the depth of cuts or excavations made in the grading of the roadbed by a contractor, the work is, it seems, conclusively presumed to be in accordance with plans furnished by the company's engineer.²

III. CONTRACTOR'S LIABILITY. — Though an independent contractor, as stated above,³ is not responsible for the acts of his subcontractors or their servants, he is liable for injuries caused by his own negligence or that of his servants in the course of his performance of the work.⁴ Independence of control on the part of the contractor in respect to the act which causes the injury is, it would seem, a prerequisite to the imposition of liability upon him;⁵ and so he is not liable for injuries caused by defective plans,⁶ nor for injuries caused by defects in the materials unless he has, by the contract, the right to select the materials; but if the contract does not reserve this right to the employer, the contractor will be presumed to have it.⁷

After Completion of Work. — The contractor is not liable, as a general rule, for injuries to a third person, occurring after his completion of the work and its acceptance by the employer, and resulting from his failure to properly carry out his contract.⁸ His exemption from liability in this respect is that which exists in favor of any person building a structure or furnishing an article, as against a third person injured by defects in such structure or article, and is based on the general rule of law that one is liable for a breach of contractual duty only to the other party to the contract.⁹ This general rule, however, is

If a contractor who erects a house, who builds a bridge, or performs any other work, a manufacturer who constructs a boiler, piece of machinery, or a steamship, owes a duty to the whole world that his work or his machine or his steamship shall contain no hidden defect, it is difficult to measure the extent of his responsibility, and no prudent man would engage in such occupations upon such conditions. It is safer and wiser to confine such liabilities to the parties immediately concerned." Curtin v. Somerset, 140 Pa. St. 80, 23 Am. St. Rep. 220.

Illustration. — In Curtin v. Somerset, 140 Pa. St. 70, 23 Am. St. Rep. 220, it was held that where a contractor for the erection of a hotel building uses improper material in its construction, and in other respects departs from the specifications embodied in his contract, so that when the building is completed it is structurally weak and unsafe, by reason of which an accident occurs after it is accepted and possession taken, the contractor is liable subject to a proviso that the defect in the article or structure must not be such as to render it imminently dangerous to any person using it,¹ and defects in a scaffold built by an independent contractor have been decided to be within this exception.²

INDEX. (See also the titles RECORDING ACTS; RECORDS.)—An index is that which points out; that which shows, indicates, or manifests. In ordinary use, it is a table of reference, pointing out the page of the book where a certain article or subject may be found.³

to the owner thereof, but not liable to a guest of the hotel for an injury caused to him by such defective construction.

1. General Principle.—See the title NEGLIGENCE in this work.

The leading case illustrative of this principle is Thomas v. Winchester, 6 N. Y. 397, 57 Am. Dec. 455, referred to in the next paragraph, where a seller of a poisonous drug who did not properly label it was held to be liable to all persons injured by his negligence.

2. Defective Scaffold.—In Devlin v. Smith, 89 N. Y. 470, 42 Am. Rep. 311, a contractor undertook to build a scaffold for the express purpose of enabling the workmen of one who had a contract for the painting of a court-house dome to stand upon it to do the work, and one of such workmen was killed by the fall of the scaffold. Rapallo, J., said: "Any defect or negligence in its construction, which should cause it to give way, would naturally result in these men being precipitated from that great height. A stronger case where misfortune to third persons not parties to the contract would be a natural and necessary consequence of the builder's negligence can hardly be supposed, nor is it easy to imagine a more apt illustration of a case where such negligence would be an act imminently dangerous to human life. These circumstances seem to us to bring the case fairly within the principle of Thomas v. Winchester, 6 N. Y. 397, 57 Am. Dec. 455." And see to the same effect the opinion of Brett, M. R., in Heaven v. Pender, 11 Q. B. D. 506.

A Defective Brake on a freight car has, on the other hand, been decided not to be such a defect as to render a railroad company furnishing it liable to an employee of a shipper injured thereby. Roddy v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 104 Mo. 234, 24 Am. St. Rep. 333.

3. Index.—Perkins v. Strong, 22 Neb. 731.

Whether Part of Record.—In Calwell v. Prindle, 19 W. Va. 669, it was said: "The index is a guide to the docket; it saves labor and trouble in examining the docket, but is not the docket itself, nor a part of it." See also Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Dake, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 1 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 381, 4 Cent. L. J. 340. And see the titles RECORDING ACTS; RECORDS.

But in Metz v. State Bank, 7 Neb. 172, it was said: "Webster defines index to be that which points out; that which indicates or manifests. One great object of an index is to render the contents of a book readily accessible. At this time, when inventions to save labor are in active demand, it will not be presumed that the legislature, in providing for an index to the judgment record, intended it to be a useless appendage, of no validity—a mere trap for the unwary—or that a purchaser, notwithstanding the index, must spend days or weeks examining the records, in order to ascertain the condition of the title of the property he is about to purchase. Such was not the legislative intent. The index affords a cheap, ready, and convenient method of ascertaining the condition of the title to real estate, and is made a part of the record, and a purchaser may rely upon it as being correct."

In Perkins v. Strong, 22 Neb. 725, however, it was held that a purchaser of real estate who took his deed to the office of the register of deeds, and deposited it with him for record, and paid the fees for recording it, had discharged his duty; and if through the fault of the register alone the deed was not entered in the index, such failure would not work to the prejudice of the title of such purchaser, even in favor of a subsequent purchaser without actual notice. See also the title PUBLIC OFFICERS.

4. Indian Title.—Prior to the treaty of June 3, 1825, with the Kansas Indians, they had the "Indian title," i. e., a life interest in the usufruct of a body of land in eastern Kansas, including that in controversy, the United States holding the ultimate title charged with the interest of the Indian nation, so long as the Indians should remain a nation. This "Indian title" was, by the sixth article of that treaty, vested in certain individuals. Brown v. Belmarde, 3 Kan. 41.

Indian Tribes.—In State v. Newell, 84 Me. 465, it was held that the Indian residents within the state of Maine were not Indian tribes within the treaty-making power of the federal government.

Indian Country.—An Act of Congress of June 30, 1834, defined "Indian country" as "all that part of the United States west of the Mississippi and not within the states of Missouri and Louisiana, or the territory of Arkansas, and also that part of the United States east of the Mississippi river and not within any state to which the Indian title has not been extinguished." In U. S. v. Le Bris, 121 U. S. 278, the court said: "This section was not re-enacted in the Revised Statutes, though other parts of the statute were. Consequently the section was repealed by section 5596 of the revision; but still we held in Ex p. Crow Dog, 109 U. S. 556, 561, that it might be referred to for the purpose of determining what was meant by the term 'Indian country' when found in sections of the Revised Statutes which were re enactments of other sections of this statute."

In the opinion of the Supreme Court by Mr. Justice Miller, in Bates v. Clark, 95 U. S. 208, the definition of "Indian country" is given as follows: "The simple criterion is that, as to all the lands thus described it was Indian country whenever the Indian title had not been extinguished, and it continued to be Indian country so long as the Indians had title to it, and no longer. As soon as they parted with the title it ceased to be Indian country without any further Act of Congress, unless by the treaty by which the Indians parted with their title, or by some Act of Congress, a different rule was made applicable to the case." And later, in the case of Ex p. Crow Dog, 109 U. S. 561, Matthews, J., said: "In our opinion, that definition now applies to all the country to which the Indian title has not been extinguished, within the limits of the United States, even when not within a reservation expressly set apart for the exclusive occupancy of Indians, although much of it has been acquired since the passage of the Act of 1834, and notwithstanding the formal definition in that act has been dropped from the statutes, excluding, however, any territory embraced within the exterior geographical limits of a state, not excepted from its jurisdiction by treaty or by statute, at the time of its admission into the Union." See also U. S. v. Partello, 48 Fed. Rep. 670; U. S. v. Four Bottles Sour-Mash Whiskey, 90 Fed. Rep. 722; Waters

v. Campbell, 4 Sawy. (U. S.) 124; U. S. v. Winslow, 3 Sawy. (U. S.) 337; U. S. v. Seveloff, 2 Sawy. (U. S.) 311.

The term "Indian country" includes such portions of the public domain as are expressly reserved for the use and occupation of the several bands and tribes of Indians, and which are included within the jurisdiction of any state or territorial government. U. S. v. Knowlton, 3 Dak. 58. The court said: "To define what is Indian country, within the meaning of the Act of Congress punishing crimes therein committed, is not entirely free from difficulty. The definition given in the Act of Congress, if not absolutely repealed, has become obsolete and without meaning, as applied to the present condition of the country west of the Mississippi river. Without entering into a more elaborate definition, it is sufficient for the purposes of this case to say that the term 'Indian country' includes such portions of the public domain as are expressly reserved for the use and occupation of the several bands and tribes of Indians, and which are not included within the jurisdiction of any state or territorial government."

Indian Reservation and Indian Country. — In U. S. v. Certain Property, 1 Ariz. 40, it was said: "An Indian reservation and an Indian country are so far legal equivalents that the laws of the United States regulating trade and intercourse with the Indians apply alike to both. Licenses to trade in either are grantable by an Indian superintendent, agent, or sub-agent."

I. LEGAL STATUS OF INDIANS — 1. In Their Tribal Relations — a. GENERALLY — Indian Tribes Domestic Dependent Nations. — The position of the Indian tribes within the limits of the United States is an anomalous one. Although in certain respects regarded as possessing the attributes of nationality, they are considered not as foreign but as "domestic dependent nations."¹

Indians Wards of Nation. — The Indians are denominated the "wards of the nation," and as such are entitled to the care and protection due from a guardian to his ward.²

Status of Particular Tribes. — The status of the Indian tribes varies somewhat in the different parts of the country according to their number, situation, and circumstances. Particular instances will be found discussed in the note.³

1. The Legal Position of the Indian Tribes was so defined by Chief Justice Marshall in the leading case of Cherokee Nation v. Georgia, 5 Pet. (U. S.) 1. See also U. S. v. Kagama, 118 U. S. 375.

The Indians are not a portion of the political community known as the "people of the United States," and, although not foreign nations or persons, they have always been regarded and treated as distinct and independent political communities. U. S. v. Osborne, 6 Sawy. (U. S.) 406.

b. POWER OF SELF-GOVERNMENT — (1) Generally. — The power of Indians while maintaining their tribal relations, to regulate their internal domestic affairs, has been generally recognized by the courts,¹ though this power has been considerably abridged of late by the Acts of Congress enlarging the jurisdiction of the federal courts in respect to crimes committed by Indians.²

Judicial Notice of Tribal Laws. — The courts will not take judicial notice of the laws and customs of the Indian tribes.³

(2) The Five Civilized Nations. — Several of the more powerful Indian tribes occupying the Indian Territory, known as the "five civilized nations," namely the Cherokees, Chickasaws, Choctaws, Creeks, and Seminoles, and the tribes incorporated into these nations, have adopted to a great extent the habits of civilized life, and have established a well-organized constitutional government secured to them by treaties and Acts of Congress. Each nation has its elective executive head, a dual legislative and a judiciary system, with superior and inferior courts. They may enact laws for the regulation of their internal affairs provided such laws are not in conflict with the constitution and laws of the United States, and the proceedings and judgments of their courts in cases within their jurisdiction stand on the same footing and are entitled to status of the Narragansett Indians, see Narragansett Indians, 20 R. I. 715.

The Pueblo Indians in New Mexico are not an Indian tribe within the meaning of the federal statutes. U. S. v. Joseph, 94 U. S. 614; Pueblo Indians, 20 Op. Atty.-Gen. 215; U. S. v. Lucero, 1 N. Mex. 422.

Seneca Nation in New York. — The Seneca Indians in New York are constituted and recognized by the statutes of the state as a distinct community known as the Seneca Nation, and their tribal government is also recognized by the United States. They are a public corporation having power to elect officers and perpetuate their government. Seneca Nation of Indians v. John, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 27 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 253. See also *Crouse v. But where an Indian tribe has lost all territorial jurisdiction, and the individual Indians have become subject to the state laws, an Indian marriage according to the tribal customs but not in accordance with the laws of the state is void. Roche v. Washington, 19 Ind. 53, 81 Am. Dec. 376; State v. Ta-cha-na-tah, 64 N. Car. 614.

Validity of Contracts Between Whites Not Affected by Indian Laws and Customs. — The validity of contracts between citizens of the United States, which are binding and valid under the laws of the United States, and of the states where made, is not affected by the customs or laws of the Indian tribes within whose territory the contract is made. Anheuser-Busch Brewing Assoc. v. Bond, 66 Fed. Rep. 653; Walker Trading Co. v. Grady Trading Co., (Indian Ter. 1897) 39 S. W. Rep. 354.

Customs. — The custom of the Creek nation as to the right of an Indian woman, when married to a white man, to hold in her own right the property which she had before marriage, is a fact to be proved as any other fact, and is for the jury. And one acquainted with the customs of the nation, although not a law-the same faith and credit as those of the territories of the Union.¹ The members by blood of these tribes are not citizens of the United States, nor are they aliens in the sense that citizens of foreign and independent states are aliens. Like other Indians they are regarded as the wards of the nation. Subject to the provisions of the treaties under which their governments are organized, and to the fundamental limitations inherent in the form and character of American institutions, Congress has all the power of legislation over these nations and the area occupied by them that is combined in the federal and state governments.²

The Title to the Land Occupied by the Indian Nations is a title in fee simple,³ vested, however, in the nation and not in the individual citizens thereof.⁴ One not a citizen of an Indian nation cannot acquire any title to nor legally occupy lands within the nation, except with the consent or acquiescence of some citizen thereof.⁵

c. ADOPTION OF WHITES. — A white man may become a member of an Indian nation by adoption when so permitted by the laws of that nation, and the effect of such adoption is to vest the tribal courts with exclusive jurisdiction over civil and criminal cases arising between him and other members of the nation.⁶ But a citizen of the United States who becomes a member of one of the Indian nations by adoption does not thereby become an Indian, but remains a citizen of the United States;⁷ nor can he thereby obtain

The Cherokee nation is a "territory," and its chief executive officer a "governor," within the meaning of a state statute authorizing the registration of deeds acknowledged out of the state, before a judge of the state or territory where the grantor is, when accompanied by a certificate from the governor of such state or territory attesting the official character of such judge. Whitsett v. Forehand, 79 N. Car. 230. See also Mackey v. Cox, 18 How. (U. S.) 100; Mehlin v. Ice, 56 Fed. Rep. 12.

Right of Indian Nation to Require Permits to Reside Therein. — In the absence of treaty or statutory provisions to the contrary, the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations have power to regulate their own rights of occupancy, and to say who shall participate therein and upon what conditions; and hence may require permits to reside in the nation from citizens of the United States, and levy a pecuniary exaction therefor. Improvement of Great Kanawha River, 19 Op. Atty.-Gen. 34. See also Intruders on Lands of Choctaws, etc., 17 Op. Atty.-Gen. 134.

2. Per Lewis, J., in Carter v. U. S., (Indian Ter. 1896) 37 S. W. Rep. 204. In this case it was held that a member of the Chickasaw tribe, otherwise qualified, was competent to serve on the grand jury of the federal courts in the territory.

3. See infra, this title, Indian Lands — Nature of Indian Title.

In this last case the court said: "His adoption into one of these tribes has the effect to bestow on him the privileges and immunities exemption from the laws of the United States regulating intercourse with the Indians.¹

Withdrawal of Citizenship by Tribe. — Citizenship conferred by an Indian tribe upon an alien may be afterwards withdrawn by the tribe, and upon such withdrawal the original status of the adopted member becomes restored.²

Marriage of Whites and Indians. — It has been held that the marriage of a man not an Indian to an Indian woman does not give him the status of a tribal Indian, and that he does not acquire such status from the fact that he resides upon an Indian reservation with his Indian wife.³ By the laws of some of the Indian tribes, however, a white man who marries an Indian woman becomes a member of her tribe by adoption.⁴

This statute is not in conflict with the provision of the Constitution (art. 1, § 8) that Congress shall have power to establish a uniform rule of naturalization. State v. Norris, 37 Neb. 299.

Under this section Indians and persons of Indian descent residing upon lands allotted to them in severalty, and upon which the preliminary patents have been issued, are citizens of the United States and qualified voters of the state in which they reside. State v. Denoyer, 6 N. Dak. 586.

And it is not necessary that the patents should have been actually issued or received, where the land has been allotted to the Indians and they have accepted and taken possession of it and have done all that is required of them by law to entitle them to the lands and the right of citizenship. State v. Norris, 37 Neb. 299.

This section has no application to a tribe of Indians, but is intended to cover the case of the individual Indian who has taken up his residence separate and apart from his tribe, and has adopted the habits of civilized life. U. S. v. Boyd, 83 Fed. Rep. 547.

Indian as Witness. — An Indian is a competent witness in a suit against or between white persons.⁴

c. RIGHT TO VOTE IN STATE ELECTIONS. — A state may make an Indian a voter,⁵ and in several states statutes have been passed giving Indians the right of suffrage.⁶ Obviously, Indians who have become citizens of the state or of the United States are entitled to vote.⁷

II. WHO ARE INDIANS — PERSONS OF MIXED BLOOD. — The statutes of the United States nowhere define an "Indian,"⁸ and several cases have arisen in which the courts have been called upon to decide whether a person of mixed blood was an Indian within the meaning of the federal laws. In an early case in the United States Circuit Court it was held that the condition of the offspring of an Indian and one of another race is not determined by the quantum of Indian blood in the veins, but by the condition of the mother.⁹ This decision is sustained as to the first point by subsequent decisions, but is clearly wrong on the last point so far as the offspring of free persons is concerned. In this respect it has been expressly overruled, it being held that the condition of the child follows that of the father.¹⁰

III. TREATIES WITH INDIANS. — Until the year 1871 the United States conceded to the Indian tribes the right to treat with the United States upon terms of national equality, and numbers of treaties were made in reference to lands, supplies, education, intercourse, and other matters.³ The Act of March 3, 1871, however, provided that no Indian nation or tribe within the territory of the United States should be acknowledged or recognized as an independent nation, tribe, or power, with which the United States might contract by treaty, it being further provided that no obligation of any treaty law, fully made and ratified with any such Indian nation or tribe prior to the date of the Act, should be thereby invalidated or impaired.⁴ Since the passage of this Act, Indian affairs have been regulated by Acts of Congress and by contracts with the Indian tribes practically amounting to treaties.⁵

IV. CONTRACTS BETWEEN WHITES AND INDIANS — Contracts Relating to Rights and Claims Derived from Federal Government. — It is provided by Act of Congress that "no agreement shall be made by any person with any tribe of Indians, or individual Indians not citizens of the United States, for the payment or delivery of any money or other thing of value, in present or in prospective, or for the granting or procuring any privilege to him, or any other person in consideration of services for said Indians relative to their lands, or to any claims growing out of or in reference to annuities, instalments, or other moneys, claims, demands, or thing, under laws or treaties with the United States, or official acts of any officers thereof, or in any way connected with or due from the United States, unless such contract or agreement be executed and approved" in a manner prescribed by the statute.³ Moneys due the Indians under contracts properly made must be paid to them through the United States authorities; and moneys due to persons contracting with the Indians is paid by the United States upon proof of the due performance of the contract.⁴

Ordinary Contracts. — The power of Indians to enter into binding contracts with other persons according to the general law of contracts, where such contracts are not within the prohibition of this Act or similar Acts of Congress, is well established.⁵ But persons dealing with Indians must take notice of public treaties and Acts of Congress concerning them.⁶

Volume XVI,

V. THE INDIAN COUNTRY — 1. Definition. — The courts have frequently had occasion to define the term "Indian country" as used in various Acts of Congress, and to determine whether or not a particular section of territory was within the definition. It seems that the term now applies to all the country within the limits of the United States, whether within a reservation set apart for the exclusive occupancy of Indians or not, to which the Indian title has not been extinguished.¹

2. Indian Reservations. — From an early period it has been the policy and practice of the government, whenever the needs of advancing civilization made such a step necessary, to negotiate with the Indians for the extinguishment of their possessory right to the territory occupied by them and for their removal to reservations set apart for their use in the more remote parts of the country.² The mode of setting apart these reservations is by Act of Congress or executive order, or, prior to the Act of 1871 prohibiting treaties with the Indian tribes, by treaty.³ These reservations are clearly Indian country.⁴

1. Definition of Indian Country. — Bates v. Clark, 95 U. S. 204; Ex p. Crow Dog, 109 U. S. 556; U. S. v. Certain Property, 1 Ariz. 31. Compare Pelcher v. U. S., 3 McCrary (U. S.) 510; U. S. v. Martin, 8 Sawy. (U. S.) 473.

Act of 1834. — The first section of the Indian Intercourse Act of June 30, 1834 (4 Stat. at L. 729), provides: "That all that part of the United States west of the Mississippi, and not within the states of Missouri and Louisiana, or the territory of Arkansas, and also that part of the United States east of the Mississippi river, and not within any state, to which the Indian title has not been extinguished, for the purposes of this Act, be taken and deemed to be the Indian country." This section has been repealed (U. S. Rev. Stat., § 5596), but it may still be referred to for the purpose of determining what was meant by the term "Indian country" when found in sections of the Revised Statutes which are reenactments of other sections of that statute. Ex p. Crow Dog, 109 U. S. 556; U. S. v. Le Bris, 121 U. S. 278.

But by the Act of March 3, 1873 (17 Stat. at L. 530), extending sections 20 and 21 of the Intercourse Act of 1834 over Alaska, that territory becomes Indian country so far as the introduction and disposition of spirituous liquors therein are concerned. In re Carr, 3 Sawy. The policy of the United States has from the earliest times been to protect all citizens in the occupation of ceded Indian country, and to secure cessions as fast as demanded by the increase of population by fair and large compensations paid to the Indians, and when territory has once been solemnly ceded by the Indians to the United States it is not thereafter considered or treated as Indian country for any purpose. *Clark v. 3. The Indian Territory. — The largest single district of Indian country is the Indian Territory, which is an unorganized territory of the United States, set apart in 1834 for the exclusive occupancy of the Indian tribes which were removed at that time from their original homes. This territory is occupied entirely by the five civilized nations.¹

VI. GOVERNMENT OF INDIANS AND INDIAN COUNTRY — 1. Generally — a. GOVERNMENT VESTED IN UNITED STATES. — The Indians and the territory which may have been specially set apart for their use are subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, and Congress may pass such laws as it sees fit prescribing the rules governing the intercourse of the Indians with one another and with citizens of the United States, and also the courts in which all controversies to which an Indian may be a party shall be submitted.² While the Indians, when preserving their tribal relations, are possessed of some of the attributes of sovereignty, having the power of regulating their internal and social relations,³ all such rights are subject to the supreme legislative authority of the United States.⁴ But the existence of the right in Congress to regulate the manner in which the local powers of an Indian nation shall be exercised does not render such local powers federal powers arising from and created by the Constitution of the United States. Hence the question as to whether a statute of an Indian nation, not repugnant to the Constitution of the United States or in conflict with any law or treaty of the United States, has been repealed by another statute of such nation, and the determination of what is the existing law of such nation on a particular point, are matters solely within the jurisdiction of the courts of the nation, and the decision of such a question in itself necessarily involves no infraction of the Constitution of the United States.⁵

Federal Authority Supreme. — The Constitution of the United States and the laws and treaties made in pursuance thereof constitute the supreme law of the land in Indian as well as in other affairs,⁶ and neither the constitution of a state nor an act of its legislature can prevent the application of an Act of Congress to the Indian tribes residing in the state but subject to the control of the general government.⁷

does not depend upon locality, but may be exercised wherever Indian tribes are found irrespective of state lines or governments.¹

President May Prescribe Regulations. — The President may prescribe such regulations as he may think fit for carrying into effect the various provisions of any act relating to Indian affairs.²

Jurisdiction of Federal Courts in Indian Territory. — By the Act of May 2, 1890, jurisdiction was given to the federal courts in all civil cases in the Indian Territory, except cases over which the tribal courts have exclusive jurisdiction, also in all cases on contracts between citizens of any tribe or nation and citizens of the United States, over all controversies arising between members or citizens of one tribe or nation and those of another tribe or nation, and in other cases specially provided for in the Act. It is provided, however, that the judicial tribunals of the Indian nations shall retain exclusive jurisdiction in all civil and criminal cases arising in the country in which members of the nation by nativity or adoption shall be the only parties.³ Certain sections of the statute laws of Arkansas were by the same Act extended over and put in force in the territory.⁴

b. STATE AND TERRITORIAL JURISDICTION. — It does not follow because the authority of the federal government over the Indians and the Indian country is supreme, that the state and territorial governments have no jurisdiction whatever over them. Upon the admission of a state into the Union or the organization of a territory, in the absence of treaty provisions to the contrary, the lands embraced therein occupied by Indian tribes become a part of the state or territory so admitted or organized, and subject to its jurisdiction, except so far as concerns the government and protection of the Indians themselves, and for purposes relating to the treaties and agreements between the United States and the Indians, in which respects the jurisdiction of the United States is exclusive.⁵ But where such reservations are expressly excluded from the limits or jurisdiction of the state or territory, the state or territorial governments have no jurisdiction therein.⁶ The Indians themselves, when off

2. In Criminal Cases — Federal Statutes. — By the Act of Congress of June 30, 1834, as modified somewhat by subsequent acts, it is provided that the general laws of the United States as to the punishment of crimes committed in any place within the sole and exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, except the District of Columbia, shall extend to the Indian country, but that this shall not be construed to extend to crimes committed by one Indian against the person or property of another Indian, nor to any offense committed by an Indian in the Indian country for which he has been punished by the local law of the tribe, nor to any case where, by treaty stipulations, the exclusive jurisdiction over such offenses is or may be secured to the Indian tribes respectively.²

Act of 1885. — By the Act of March 3, 1885, jurisdiction was conferred upon the territorial courts over certain enumerated crimes committed by an Indian against the person or property of another Indian within any territory of the United States and either within or without an Indian reservation; and it was further provided that Indians committing any of such crimes against the person or property of another Indian or other person within any state and within the limits of any reservation shall be subject to the same laws and penalties and tried in the same courts and in the same manner as are all other persons committing any of the crimes named within the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States.³ By this Act the authority previously accorded to tribal Indians, to administer their own criminal laws among themselves, was withdrawn so far as the crimes enumerated therein are concerned, and Indians who commit any of the specified crimes are punishable therefor notwithstanding

But in Stiff v. M'Laughlin, 19 Mont. 300, it was held that a provision in the enabling act of a state that all Indian lands therein should remain under the absolute jurisdiction and control of Congress does not prevent the levy of an execution by an officer of a state court on the personal property of a person not an Indian who resides on an Indian reservation.

It has been held that while the state authorities have a very extensive jurisdiction over the territory included in the White Earth Indian reservation, in Minnesota, the tribal Indians on the reservation have, under their treaties with the United States, and the acquiescence of the state for over thirty years, a license to hunt and fish on the reservation, in their usual and traditional manner, in order to procure food for themselves, notwithstanding that the state laws prohibit such fishing and hunting. State v. Cooney, (Minn. 1899) 80 N. W. Rep. 606.

Voting on Reservation — Jurisdiction of State. — It is no ground for rejecting votes cast in a Crimes Committed by Tribal Indians on Reservation — Jurisdiction of State Courts. — A state court has no jurisdiction over crimes committed by tribal Indians upon a reservation within the state.³

Crimes Committed on Reservation by Others than Indians. — Where, upon the admission of a state into the Union, the enabling act contains no exclusion of jurisdiction as to crimes committed on an Indian reservation by others than Indians or against Indians, the state courts are vested with exclusive jurisdiction over such crimes.⁴ But where the United States has reserved jurisdiction over a reservation for the purpose of protecting the possession, persons, and property of the Indians, the federal courts have jurisdiction over crimes committed on the reservation by whites against the Indians.⁵

Crime by Indian Who Has Severed His Tribal Relations. — An Indian who has severed his tribal relations may be prosecuted in the courts of the state in which he commits a crime, without regard to whether the crime was committed within or without the limits of a reservation.⁶

Crimes Committed by Indian Outside of Indian Country. — When an Indian commits a crime outside of the Indian country, whether upon one of his own race or another, he is amenable to the law of the place where the crime is committed.⁷ Accordingly tribal Indians may be prosecuted in the state courts for offenses against the state laws committed by them outside the limits of their reservation, although such offenses may be against members of the same tribe.⁸

Criminal Jurisdiction of Federal and Indian Courts in Indian Territory. — By the Act of Congress of May 2, 1890, providing for the government of the Indian Territory, it was provided that the judicial tribunals of the Indian nations shall retain exclusive jurisdiction in all civil and criminal cases arising in the country in which members of the nation by nativity or by adoption shall be the only parties; and further, that the constitution and laws of the United States prohibiting crimes and misdemeanors in places within the sole and exclusive jurisdiction of the United States should have the same force and effect in the Indian Territory as elsewhere in the United States; but that nothing in the Act should be so construed as to deprive the courts of the civilized nations of exclusive jurisdiction over all cases arising wherein members of such nations are the sole parties, nor so as to interfere with the right and power of such civilized nations to punish members for violation of the laws of the nations when not contrary to the treaties and laws of the United States.¹ Under this Act it is held that the federal courts have no jurisdiction over crimes by an Indian against a member of the same nation in the territory.²

Criminal Laws of Arkansas Extended over Territory. — By this Act the criminal laws of Arkansas, with certain exceptions, as far as applicable are extended over and put in force in the territory, and jurisdiction to enforce the same is conferred upon the United States courts.³

3. Protection of Indians. — The United States government, recognizing the dependent condition of the Indians as the wards of the nation, has assumed from the beginning the duty of exercising a general supervision over their affairs and of protecting them not only from the encroachments of the whites but also from the consequences of their own ignorance and improvidence.⁴ However imperfectly this duty may have been discharged in particular cases, owing to the inefficiency or dishonesty of the agents employed by the government, there can be no doubt that the United States has always shown a most solicitous regard for the rights of the Indians, and has earnestly sought to promote their interests so far as these have not been inconsistent with the general welfare of the nation. Various statutes have been passed from time to time, designed for the protection of the Indians in their rights

Protection of Indian Allottees. — Whenever an Indian, being a member of any band or tribe with whom the government has entered into treaty stipulations, being desirous to adopt the habits of civilized life, has had a portion of the lands belonging to his tribe allotted to him in severalty in pursuance of such treaty stipulations, he will be protected in the quiet enjoyment of the lands so allotted to him.⁶

Cutting Timber. — Every person who unlawfully cuts or wantonly destroys any timber standing upon any Indian reservation, or lands belonging to or occupied by any tribe of Indians under authority of the United States, is punishable by fine or imprisonment,¹ and the United States may maintain an action to recover possession of timber so unlawfully cut and sold.² By the Act of Feb. 16, 1889, the President is empowered to authorize Indians residing on reservations or allotments, the fee to which remains in the United States, to cut or remove dead timber standing or fallen on such reservations or allotments and dispose of the same for their own benefit.³

4. Regulation of Commerce with Indians — a. GENERALLY — Congress Has Power to Regulate Commerce with Indian Tribes. — It is provided by the Constitution that Congress shall have power to regulate commerce with the Indian tribes.⁴ Under this provision Congress has power to prohibit all intercourse with the Indians except under a license;⁵ and under this power and the treaty-making power numerous treaties have been entered into and laws enacted for the regulation of commercial intercourse with the Indians.⁶

Regulation of Commerce by President. — The President is authorized, whenever in his opinion the public interest may require it, to prohibit the introduction of goods, or of any particular article, into the country belonging to any Indian tribe, and to direct all licenses to trade with such tribe to be revoked and all applications therefor to be rejected.⁷

Who Are Indian Tribes Within Power to Regulate Commerce. — It has been held that the Indian tribes within the meaning of the Constitution are those tribes which are in a condition to determine for themselves with whom they will

1. Cutting Timber on Indian Lands. — Act of June 4, 1888 (25 Stat. at L. 166), amending U. S. Rev. Stat., § 5388. See U. S. v. Reese, 5 Dill. (U. S.) 405.

The act is applicable to an Indian sustaining tribal relations, who cuts timber for speculative purposes on the reservation occupied by the tribe. Labadie v. U. S., 6 Okla. 400.

But an Indian may cut timber on his land, for the purpose of improving or cultivating it. U. S. v. Cook, 19 Wall. (U. S.) 591; Thayer v. U. S., 20 Ct. Cl. 137.

An Indian who, for the purpose of building a house on land allotted to him in an Indian reservation, removes timber cut on the reservation by another Indian, is not guilty of an offense under this statute. U. S. v. Koukapot, 43 Fed. Rep. 64.

Wall. (U. S.) 407; U. S. v. Bridleman, 7 Sawy. (U. S.) 243; U. S. v. Certain Property, 1 Ariz. 31.

Under this clause of the Constitution, Congress has power to regulate all traffic and commercial intercourse among or with Indians, even when the tribe is located wholly within the limits of a single state. Stacy v. La Belle, 99 Wis. 520.

Congress has the exclusive and unfettered power to regulate commerce with the Indian tribes, to treat them as wards in this respect to whom protection is due, and to extend that regulation to intercourse with the individual members of the tribe, not only in the Indian country, but through the states themselves, wherever the Indians who belong to any tribal organization may be found, and to say with whom and by what terms they shall deal. Adams v. Freeman, (Okla. 1897) 50 Pac. Rep. 135.

Jurisdiction of Courts. — In making such regulations Congress may undoubtedly give to the federal courts exclusive jurisdiction. State courts may be precluded from taking jurisdiction in such cases, not only by congressional enactments, but by treaty between the particular tribe and the federal government, since such treaty, when made, under the Constitution, becomes a part of the supreme law of the land. But the state courts may take jurisdiction of actions on contracts between the whites and Indians in the absence of any federal statute or treaty to the contrary. Stacy v. La Belle, 99 Wis. 520.

have commerce, or are in a condition to have Congress determine it for them; and not those small tribes or remnants of tribes, remaining in the original states, which prior to the Constitution were, and have since continued to be, under the control and guardianship of the state, and which are without power to carry on commerce or trade except by permission and under the regulation of the state.¹

b. SALE OF LIQUOR TO INDIANS. — This topic is discussed elsewhere in this work.²

c. INDIAN TRADERS. — Citizens of the United States of good moral character are permitted to trade with Indian tribes upon giving bond conditioned upon their faithful observance of all laws and regulations made for the government of trade and intercourse with the Indian tribes.³ But such traders must be duly licensed.⁴ The commissioner of Indian affairs has the sole power and authority to appoint traders to the Indian tribes, and to make such rules and regulations as he may deem just and proper, specifying the kind and quantity of goods, and the prices at which such goods shall be sold to the Indians.⁵

5. Removal of Persons from Indian Country. — The superintendent of Indian affairs and Indian agents and subagents are authorized to remove from the Indian country all persons found therein contrary to law, and the President is authorized to direct military force to be employed in such removal.⁶ The commissioner of Indian affairs is authorized and required, with the approval of the secretary of the interior, to remove from any tribal reservation any person being therein without authority of law, or whose presence within the limits of the reservation may, in the judgment of the commissioner, be detrimental to the peace and welfare of the Indians, and he may employ such force as may be necessary to enable the agent to effect the removal of such person.⁷

Removal Discretionary with Officer. — The removal of persons from the Indian country under these statutes is a matter entirely within the discretion of the officers to whom the power of removal is committed, and their action is not subject to review by the courts.⁸

4. License to Trade with Indians Required. — U. S. Rev. Stat., §§ 2129-2131, 2133.

A license to trade with the Indians is not assignable, but is a personal privilege. U. S. v. 196 Buffalo Robes, 1 Mont. 489. To the same effect see Gould v. Kendall, 15 Neb. 549.

No license is required to trade with Indians outside of the Indian country. U. S. v. Certain Property, 1 Ariz. 31.

Where a person having a license to trade with Indians upon a reservation took a partner and procured for him a permit to live upon the reservation, and the latter carried on the firm's business without being himself licensed, it was held that this was not in violation of the statute. Dunn v. Carter, 30 Kan. 294.

A white person, not a citizen of the Creek nation, who refuses to pay an occupation tax to which he is by the laws of such nation subject, may be removed by the interior department. Maxey v. Wright, (Indian Ter. 1900) 54 S. W. Rep. 807.

A white man licensed to trade in the Indian country, who sells out his business and abandons his post, has no right to remain in such country, and he, together with his property, may be ousted therefrom. Echols v. Tate, 53 Ark. 12.

An Indian agent has no authority to forcibly eject persons from premises not within the limits of an Indian reservation. Thus where a person entered in good faith under the homestead law, upon land not within the boundaries of a reservation, and made valuable improvements thereon, but the government, after receiving his homestead application, included the land in allotments made to certain Indians in fulfillment of a treaty, and canceled the homestead filing, it was held that an agent had no authority to forcibly eject such person from the land, and might be enjoined from so doing until the validity of the homestead claim should be determined. La Chapelle v. Bubb, 62 Fed. Rep. 545, 69 Fed. Rep. 481.

State Statute. — A state may pass a law providing for the removal of intruders from Indian lands within the state, this being a valid police regulation. New York v. Dibble, 21 How. (U. S.) 366, affirming 16 N. Y. 203.

Employment of Military Forces. — The military forces of the United States may be employed in such manner and under such regulations as the President may direct in the apprehension of every person who may be in the Indian country in violation of law, and in conveying him immediately from the Indian country, by the nearest convenient and safe route, to the civil authority of the territory or judicial district in which such person shall be found, to be proceeded against in due course of law; and also in preventing the introduction of persons or property into the Indian country contrary to law.¹

Return After Removal. — If any person who has been removed from the Indian country shall thereafter at any time return or be found within the Indian country, he is liable to a penalty of one thousand dollars.²

VII. INSTRUCTION OF INDIANS. — The President is empowered, in every case where he shall judge that improvement in the habits and condition of the Indians is practicable, and that the means of instruction can be introduced with their own consent, to employ capable persons of good moral character to instruct them in the mode of agriculture suited to their situation, and for teaching their children in reading, writing, and arithmetic, and performing such other duties as may be enjoined, according to such instructions and rules as the President may give and prescribe for the regulation of their conduct in the discharge of their duties.³ Where any of the tribes are, in the opinion of the secretary of the interior, competent to direct the employment of their blacksmiths, mechanics, teachers, farmers, or other persons engaged for them, the direction of such persons may be given to the proper authority of the tribe.⁴

VIII. INDIAN LANDS — 1. Nature of Indian Title. — Following the policy adopted by the European nations in respect to their American possessions, the colonial governments recognized in the Indian tribes a possessory right to the land occupied by them, but asserted in themselves the ultimate title to the soil. Since the Revolution the original states as to lands within their respective jurisdictions, and the United States as to all other lands, have

1. Employment of Military Forces. — U. S. Rev. Stat., § 2150.

Where military forces are employed to effect the removal of persons, this authority must be exercised in the manner provided by the statute, that is, such persons must be conveyed, by the nearest convenient and safe route, to the civil authority of the territory or judicial district in which they shall be found, to be proceeded against in due course of law. The statute does not authorize the removal of persons from one part of the country to another in time of peace, against their consent. U. S. v. Crook, 5 Dill. (U. S.) 453.

2. Return to Indian Country After Being Removed Therefrom. — U. S. Rev. Stat., § 2148; U. S. v. Sturgeon, 6 Sawyer. (U. S.) 29.

The penalty provided for in this section may be recovered by indictment or information. U. S. v. Howard, 17 Fed. Rep. 639, 9 Sawyer. (U. S.) 155; U. S. v. Stocking, 87 Fed. S.) 289, 8 Fed. Rep. 883.

3. Instruction of Indians. — U. S. Rev. Stat., § 2071. Numerous acts have been passed by Congress providing for the education of the Indians, and annual appropriations are made for this purpose. By the Act of May 17, 1882 (22 Stat. at L. 70), the President is authorized to appoint an inspector of Indian schools. By the Act of July 4, 1884 (23 Stat. at L. 98, § 9), the agent in his annual report is required to submit a census of the number of school children between the ages of six and sixteen years, the number of schoolhouses at his agency, the number of schools in operation and the attendance at each, and the names of the teachers employed and the salaries paid such teachers.

The government does not assume to force an education upon the Indians against their consent, nor have the Indians surrendered to the United States the right to compel their children to attend school. Hence a writ of habeas corpus will not lie in favor of an Indian agent to recover the custody of Indian children taken from an agency school, where this was not done against the consent of their parents. U. S. v. Imoda, 4 Mont. 38.

As to the education of Indian children in Alaska, see In re Can-ah-conqua, 29 Fed. Rep. 687.

The North Carolina Act of 1885, as amended by the Act of 1889, providing separate schools for Croatan Indians, is not unconstitutional. McMillan v. District No. 4, 107 N. Car. 609.

adopted the same policy. The Indians have a right to the use and occupancy of the land, subject to the dominion and control of the state or the United States, but they are not permitted to sell or transfer their right to the land without the consent of the dominant power, while on the other hand this right can be extinguished only by the voluntary consent of the Indians.¹

United States May Dispose of Fee. — The United States may dispose of the fee of lands to which the Indian title has not been extinguished, subject, however, to the Indian right of occupancy.² Moreover, the national government may dispose of public lands within an Indian reservation without the consent Formerly in Massachusetts the title to Indian lands within the commonwealth was in the state, and the use and improvement of such lands were regulated by the legislature. See cases cited supra, this title. Legal Status of Indians.

In Their Tribal Relations — Generally. — This has now been changed by statute. Under the statutes of 1869, c. 463, and 1870, c. 293, every Indian became entitled to have his share of the common lands of his tribe set out to him or sold for his benefit, and acquired both the legal and equitable rights of tenants in common which could be conveyed by deed. Coombs's Petition, 127 Mass. 278; Drew v. Carroll, 154 Mass. 181.

The New York Indians have an unquestionable right to the use, possession, and occupancy of the lands of their respective reservations which they have not voluntarily ceded to the state nor granted to individuals by its permission. The ultimate fee of such reservations is vested in the state, or in its grantees, subject to such right of use and occupancy by the Indians until they shall voluntarily relinquish the same. *Strong v. It has been the uniform policy of the government to prohibit settlements on Indian lands and to make grants of such lands only subject to the Indian right of occupancy. See *Preston v. of the Indians.¹

Grant of Right of Way through Indian Country. — The United States government may grant a right of way through the Indian country to a railroad company for its line.²

Title of the Five Civilized Tribes. — While it has not in general been the policy or practice of the United States to convey the absolute title to lands upon which it has located Indian tribes to such Indians while they sustain their tribal relations, a contrary policy has been adopted in several instances. The five civilized tribes, the Cherokees, Chickasaws, Choctaws, Creeks, and Seminoles, have received from the United States grants and patents conveying to them their lands in fee simple, subject, however, to the proviso that such lands shall revert to the United States if the Indians become extinct or abandon the same.³

2. Extinguishment of Indian Title. — As has already been stated, the Indian title to land can be extinguished only by the consent of the Indians and by its surrender by them to the United States.⁴ Numerous treaties have been entered into between the United States and the various Indian tribes, by which the Indians have ceded their right to the lands occupied by them to the United States, in exchange for money and other lands, the land so ceded being then opened for settlement.⁵ So also the original states, both before Interference by Government with Building of Railroad. — The federal government has no right to interfere with the construction of a line of railroad on lands embraced in the Puyallup reservation, which were granted to Indians pursuant to the treaty of December 26, 1854 (10 Stat. at L. 1132), when the person so constructing the line was proceeding with the license of such grantees. Ross v. Eells, 56 Fed. Rep. 855.

3. Title to Lands Granted to Certain Tribes in Fee Simple. — See Keokuk v. Ulam, 4 Okla. 5.

By section 3 of the Act of May 28, 1830 (4 Stat. at L. 411), providing for the exchange of lands with the Indians residing in any of the states or territories, and for their removal west of the Mississippi river, it was provided that in the making of any such exchange it should be lawful for the President solemnly to assure the tribe or nation with which the exchange was made that the United States would forever secure and guarantee to them and their heirs or successors the country so exchanged with them, and if they should prefer it, would cause a patent or grant to be executed to them for the same, provided that such lands should revert to the United States if the Indians became extinct or abandoned them. See the following treaties: With the Creeks, March 24, 1832, 7 Stat. at L. 366; February 14, 1833, 7 Stat. at L. 417. Cherokee Nation. — Under the patent of December 31, 1838, the Cherokee nation acquired a fee simple title to their land, subject to the possibility of reversion to the United States should the nation become extinct or abandon the land. Holden v. Joy, 17 Wall. (U. S.) 211; U. S. v. Reese, 5 Dill. (U. S.) 405; U. S. v. Rogers, 23 Fed. Rep. 658; Cherokee Nation v. Southern Kansas R. Co., 135 U. One not a citizen of the Cherokee nation cannot acquire any title to land situated therein, nor legally occupy the same except with the consent and acquiescence of some citizen of the Cherokee nation. Case v. Hall, (Indian Ter. 1898) 46 S. W. Rep. 180.

5. Extinguishment of Indian Title by United States. — For examples of such treaties, see those with the five civilized nations cited supra, this section, Nature of Indian Title. Where an Indian tribe makes an agreement with the United States to cede all its interest in certain lands theretofore occupied as a reservation, and such agreement is ratified by Congress, and allotments are provided for by the agreement for the individual Indians, and accepted by them, the interest of the tribe in such lands becomes extinguished. U. S. v. Choctaw, etc., R. Co., 3 Okla. 404.

and after the adoption of the Federal Constitution, assumed the right of entering into treaties with the Indian tribes for the extinguishment and acquisition of their title to lands within their respective jurisdictions.¹

When Indian Land Sold Ceases to Be Indian Country. — When the Indians part with their title to the land occupied by them, it thereupon ceases to be Indian country without any further act of Congress, unless by the treaty under which the Indians parted with their title, or by some Act of Congress or executive order, a different rule is made applicable to the case.² In this latter case a country purchased from the Indians does not ipso facto cease to be Indian country.³

Power to Compel Removal of Indians upon Sale of Lands. — Where an Indian tribe has sold its lands within a state and agreed to remove elsewhere, the power to compel such removal resides in the United States, and the state courts have no jurisdiction in the matter.⁴

3. Allotments in Severalty — Under Treaties. — Under various treaties with the Indian tribes, individual Indians have acquired lands in severalty, either with or without full power of alienation.⁵

Under Acts of Congress. — Congress has also passed numerous acts providing for

Where the United States in a treaty with an Indian tribe for the release of their rights to their lands acts merely as the agent of the tribe, the United States is not responsible to the purchasers for expenses and losses incurred by the purchasers by reasons of the failure of the Indians to deliver possession. McKeon v. Tillotson, 3 Abb. App. Dec. (N. Y.) 110.

the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians under certain conditions and with certain restrictions.¹

Homesteads. — Congress has passed several statutes enabling Indians to avail themselves of the homestead laws.²

4. Alienation of Indian Lands — a. BY INDIAN TRIBES. — The title of the Indian tribes to the lands occupied by them being a mere title by occupancy, it follows necessarily that such tribes are incapable of conveying a valid title to the land. Nor can their right of occupancy be extinguished except by the consent of the United States.³ These principles were established in an early case decided by Chief Justice Marshall, in which it was held that a title to lands derived from a grant made by an Indian tribe could not be recognized by the courts of the United States.⁴ And in 1834 it was provided by Act of Congress that no purchase, grant, lease, or other conveyance of lands, or of any title or claim thereto, from any Indian nation or tribe, should be valid unless made by treaty or convention entered into pursuant to the Constitution.⁵

b. BY INDIVIDUAL INDIANS. — In making allotments of lands to individual Indians the United States may impose such restrictions on alienation as may be deemed proper, and the regulations of the federal government in this respect constitute the supreme law of the land in this as in other Indian affairs, anything in the state laws to the contrary notwithstanding.⁶ It is the general practice of the government in making allotments to prescribe that the lands so allotted shall not be alienated without the consent of the President or of the secretary of the interior, or until after the expiration of a stated period. These restraints are designed for the protection of the allottees, and are

Conveyance in Contravention of Restraints on Alienation Void. — Any grant or conveyance of lands so allotted made in contravention of such restraints on alienation is absolutely void.² But where land is patented to an Indian with a restriction upon his right to convey unless with the approval of the President or the secretary of the interior, a conveyance so approved passes a good title, free from all restrictions or alienation.³ And such approval may be given after the execution of the conveyance, and will relate back to the time of execution so as to vest title in the grantee from that time.⁴

Dedication of Highway by Indian. — An Indian under disability to convey his lands without the consent of the secretary of the interior has no power to dedicate a highway, and no presumption of a dedication by him can arise from user of the land by the public as a highway, or from his acts and conduct in reference thereto. State v. O'Laughlin, 19 Kan. 504.

Indian May Convey Right of Occupancy. — While the sale of land in the Choctaw nation by a member of the tribe to a citizen of the United States does not pass title to the land, it does pass the grantee's right of occupancy, and the grantor may defend such right as against third persons. Kelly v. Johnson, (Indian Ter. 1897) 39 S. W. Rep. 352.

Lease for Grazing or Mining Purposes. — An allotment may be leased for grazing or mining purposes where the allottee cannot personally occupy or improve it. Act of February 28, 1891 (26 Stat. at L. 795, § 3); Mosgrove v. Harper, 33 Oregon 252.

Patents to Heirs of Deceased Allottees — Conveyances by Heirs Before Patent. — By the Act of Congress of August 4, 1886, § 2 (24 Stat. at L. 219), it is made the duty of the secretary of the interior upon the death of an allottee under the treaty of 1862 with the Kickapoo Indians in Kansas, leaving heirs and without having obtained a patent, to issue a patent in the name of the original allottee. For decisions under this act, see Briggs v. Wash-pukqua, 37 Fed. Rep. 135; Briggs v. McClain, 43 Kan. 653.

Under the treaties and Acts of Congress with and concerning the Indian tribes in Kansas, conveyances by the heirs of a deceased allottee before the issuance of a patent are valid. Briggs v. Wash-pukqua, 37 Fed. Rep. 135; Oliver v. Forbes, 17 Kan. 113.

Where the President has given his permission to a conveyance of land by an Indian, such permission cannot be revoked or annulled by his successor. Godfrey v. Beardsley, 2 McLean (U. S.) 412.

In Murray v. Wooden, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 531, it was held, under the New York statutes requiring conveyances by an Indian to be approved by the surveyor-general, that though a conveyance of land by an Indian be subsequent to its date duly approved, it was still inoperative if previous to such approval the Indian had conveyed the land to a second grantee, and the second conveyance had been approved before the first.

tain restraints on alienation, such restraints are not affected by the fact that the same act declares that the Indians to whom the lands have been so allotted shall be citizens of the United States.¹

Conveyance of Lands Where There Is No Restraint on Alienation. — Where lands are allotted to individual Indians by treaty or statute without any restraints on alienation, the allottees may make a valid conveyance of the same even before the issuance of patents to them, and the patents when issued inure to the benefit of the assignees or grantees.²

Indirect Alienation. — It has been held that land allotted to an Indian with certain restraints on alienation may nevertheless be sold under execution upon an attachment at law against the allottee, and that such sale passes a good title to the purchaser although the conditions imposed have not been complied with.³ This decision seems to be opposed to the policy of the government in imposing such restrictions upon the power to convey for the protection of the Indians, for by such means a conveyance which could not be made directly may be accomplished by indirection; and it has been expressly held that this cannot be done by subjecting Indian lands to sale for taxes levied by the state.⁴

5. How Far Subject to State Laws — a. GENERALLY. — The general rule deducible from the authorities is, that so long as the Indian title to lands is not extinguished, and the Indians themselves maintain their tribal relations or remain under federal protection and control, and in the absence of provisions in the organic or enabling act of the territory or state to the contrary, Indian lands lying within the limits of a state or territory are not subject to the state or territorial laws respecting real estate. But when these conditions cease to exist or become inoperative, Indian lands become subject to local laws to the same extent as lands of other persons.⁵

b. ADVERSE POSSESSION. — So long as land granted to Indians remains inalienable, no title thereto can be acquired by adverse possession;⁶ but when Indian lands become taxable, and subject to unrestricted alienation, the owners are under the same necessity of exercising vigilance in asserting their rights as rests upon other owners, and adverse possession of such land for the statutory period vests title in the adverse holder.⁷

So much of this act as requires the repayment of the purchase money where the Indian title has not been extinguished is void. McGannon v. Straightlege, 37 Kan. 87.

c. DESCENT. — Lands belonging to individual Indians who are members of an organized tribe descend according to the laws and customs of the tribe, and not according to the laws of the state in which the lands lie.¹ But land which has been allotted to Indians in severalty, who have acquired title thereto in fee simple, descends according to the laws of the state.²

d. TAXATION. — Lands secured to Indians either as tribes or as individuals by treaties expressly exempting such lands from taxation, or imposing restraints on alienation, are not subject to taxation by the state in which they lie.³ But land held by an Indian under a patent vesting in him the absolute ownership free from any restraint on alienation, and not exempted from taxation by any treaty provisions, may be taxed by the state.⁴ But the mere unrestricted right to alienate does not make Indian lands taxable which otherwise would not be.⁵ Where lands allotted to Indians are made exempt from state taxation for the protection of the allottees, this exemption ceases upon the passing of the title from the Indian owners.⁶

IX. OFFICERS OF INDIAN AFFAIRS. — The secretary of the interior is charged with the supervision of public business relating to the Indians.⁷ For the administration of Indian affairs there are also the following special officers:

In Foster v. Blue Earth County, 7 Minn. 140, it was held that the state of Minnesota could not tax property within the Indian reservations.

Under the third section of the ordinance of 1787, and the treaties subsequently made with the Indians, lands patented to Indians sustaining tribal relations are exempt from taxation by the state of Indiana. Wau-pe-man-quia v. Aldrich, 28 Fed. Rep. 489; Me-shing-go-me-sia v. State, 36 Ind. 310; Allen County v. Simons, 129 Ind. 193.

This is the case notwithstanding the lands are patented to individual Indians in fee simple without any restraint upon alienation, and for their own use and not for the benefit of the tribe. Allen County v. Simons, 129 Ind. 193; Wau-pe-man-quia v. Aldrich, 28 Fed. Rep. 489.

But when such lands pass to a white man they are subject to taxation, notwithstanding they may be subsequently reconveyed to Indians. Revoir v. State, 137 Ind. 332.

In Wisconsin it is provided by statute that the property of Indians who are not citizens, except lands held by them by purchase, is exempt from taxation. Sanb. & B. Annot. Stat., § 1038; Farrington v. Wilson, 29 Wis. 383.

Lands held by purchase may be taxed. Quinney v. Stockbridge, 33 Wis. 505; Hilgers v. Quinney, 51 Wis. 62.

Osage Trust Lands in Kansas. — Congress having full control over the "Osage trust and diminished reserve lands" in Kansas, may make them subject to state taxation under such conditions as are deemed proper, not in conflict with the constitution of the state. Logan v. Clark County, 51 Kan. 747.

4. Pennock v. Commissioners, 103 U. S. 44, distinguishing Kansas Indians, 5 Wall. (U. S.) 737, and affirming 18 Kan. 579; McMahon v. Welsh, 11 Kan. 280.

By statute in Indiana all lands reserved to or for any individual by any treaty between the United States and any Indian tribe or nation, are liable to taxation from the time of the confirmation of such treaty. Frederickson v. Fowler, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 409; State v. Miami County, 63 Ind. 497. The statute applies only to reservations for individuals, and not to a reservation for a band of Indians. Me-shing-go-me-sia v. State, 36 Ind. 310.

5. Wau-pe-man-quia v. Aldrich, 28 Fed. Rep. 489, distinguishing Pennock v. Commissioners, 103 U. S. 44; Allen County v. Simons, 129 Ind. 193.

6. Peck v. Miami County, 4 Dill. (U. S.) 370; Miami County v. Brackenridge, 12 Kan. 114.

7. Officers over Indian Affairs. — See U. S. Rev. Stat., § 441.

the commissioner of Indian affairs,¹ the board of Indian commissioners,² Indian inspectors,³ superintendents,⁴ and agents.

Agents. — The most numerous class of Indian officers are agents. These are appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.⁵ They hold office for a term of four years,⁶ and are required to furnish bonds before entering upon the duties of their office.⁷ The President may require any military officer of the United States to execute the duties of an Indian agent, provided this does not separate him from his company or otherwise interfere with his military duties proper.⁸ The duties of an Indian agent are to manage and superintend the intercourse with the Indians, within his agency, agreeably to law; and to execute and perform such regulations and duties, not inconsistent with law, as may be prescribed by the President, the secretary of the interior, the commissioner of Indian affairs, or the superintendent of Indian affairs.⁹

X. INDIAN DEPREDACTIONS. — Congress has passed several acts providing for the payment of claims arising out of depredations by Indians.¹⁰ By the Act of March 3, 1891, jurisdiction was conferred upon the Court of Claims over all claims for property of citizens of the United States taken or destroyed by Indians belonging to any band, tribe, or nation in amity with the United States, without just cause or provocation on the part of the owner or agent in charge, and not returned or paid for. Numerous cases have arisen under this act in which the rights of persons injured by the Indians have been adjudicated.¹¹

3. U. S. Rev. Stat., § 2043; 18 Stat. at L. 422.

Although the general functions and duties of Indian inspectors do not include specifically the disbursement of public money, and these officers are not required by statute to give bond, yet the secretary of the interior may lawfully assign to them other duties relating to business concerning the Indians, in addition to those prescribed, whenever the exigencies of the public service require it, and when such other duties involve the receipt or disbursement of public money, the secretary may require a bond. Indian Inspector, 17 Op. Atty.-Gen. 391.

As to inspector's traveling expenses, see U. S. v. Smith, 35 Fed. Rep. 490.

The superintendent of Indian affairs cannot be held personally liable for the torts of the Indians under his charge which he has neither authorized nor adopted. Huebschman v. Baker, 7 Wis. 542.

5. Appointment of Indian Agents. — U. S. Rev. Stat., § 2052. The appointment of Indian agents is regulated from time to time under the annual appropriation acts.

6. Term of Office. — U. S. Rev. Stat., § 2056.

7. Bond of Indian Agent. — U. S. Rev. Stat., § 2057; U. S. v. McClane, 74 Fed. Rep. 153.

An Indian agent who has given bond to secure the faithful performance of his duties as agent on a particular reservation is not liable on such bond for his delinquencies while acting as agent on another reservation. U. S. v. Barnhart, 17 Fed. Rep. 579.

In an action on the bond of an Indian agent for delinquencies in office, a transcript of the books and proceedings of the treasury department is admissible in evidence under U. S. Rev. Stat., § 856, and is sufficient prima facie evidence to establish an indebtedness on the part of the agent to the government for moneys received by him and not properly disbursed or accounted for. U. S. v. Smith, 35 Fed. Rep. 490; U. S. v. Allen, 36 Fed. Rep. 174; U. S. v. Young, 44 Fed. Rep. 168.

An agent and his sureties are liable on his official bond for money paid out by him contrary to his authority. U. S. v. Sinnott, 26 Fed. Rep. 84, 89.

8. Employment of Military Officer as Indian Agent. — U. S. Rev. Stat., § 2062; 19 Stat. at L. 240; 27 Stat. at L. 120; Minis v. U. S., 15 Pet. (U. S.) 424.

9. U. S. Rev. Stat., § 2058.

Liability of Agent for Negligence of Clerks. — An Indian agent is not liable for the negligence, errors, or breach of duty of doctors and clerks appointed and furnished by the government, unless by the exercise of reasonable diligence he could have prevented such negligence, etc.; and where the government fails to furnish the agent with a clerk, the agent is only responsible for the performance of the clerical duties of the agency in the best way practicable for him. U. S. v. Young, 44 Fed. Rep. 168. See also U. S. v. Patrick, 73 Fed. Rep. 800.

Expenditures by Agent. — In U. S. v. Duval, Gilp. (U. S.) 356, it was held that expenditures by an Indian agent for the benefit of the Indians, and on a tract of land reserved and held by themselves, could not be charged to the United States.

10. See U. S. Rev. Stat., §§ 2098, 2156.

11. Claims for Indian Depredations. — 26 Stat. at L. 851. See generally Leighton v. U. S., 161

Indians Must Be in Amity with United States. — In order to come within the provisions of the statute the depredations must have been committed by an Indian or Indians belonging to a tribe in amity with the United States.¹

Claimant Must Be Citizen of United States. — In order to maintain an action in the court of claims under this statute, the claimant must have been a citizen of the United States at the time the depredations were committed.²

Transfers of Claim — Attorney's Fees. — By the terms of the statute, all sales, transfers or assignments of claims theretofore or thereafter made, except in the administration of the estates of persons deceased, and all contracts theretofore made for fees and allowances to the claimant's attorneys, are declared void; and all treasury warrants in payment of the judgments of the court shall be made payable and delivered only to the claimant, or to his heirs, executors, or administrators, except so much thereof as the court at the time of rendering the judgment, and as part thereof, shall allow to be paid directly to the claimant's attorney, not exceeding in any case twenty per cent. of the amount recovered.³

Claims Allowed by Interior Department. By this statute the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims was also extended to all cases which had been examined and allowed by the interior department, and to such cases as were authorized to be allowed under the Act of March 3, 1885 (23 Stat. at L. 376), and under subsequent acts. See Johnson v. U. S., 160 U. S. 546; Marks v. U. S., 161 U. S. 297; U. S. v. Navarre, 173 U. S. 77, affirming 33 Ct. Cl. 235; Yerke v. U. S., 173 U. S. 439; Price v. U. S., 28 Ct. The United States Are Responsible for Damages under the Depredation Act only in two classes of cases, first, where the Indian defendants are responsible, but without funds to respond in damages; second, where the depredations were committed by Indians whose tribal relations cannot be ascertained. Woolverton v. U. S., 29 Ct. Cl. 107.

Judgment Against United States Alone. — The Court of Claims may render judgment against the United States alone under the Depredation Act where the tribe of Indians to which the depredators belong cannot be identified, and such inability is stated and judgment rendered against the United States only. U. S. v. Gorham, 165 U. S. 316, affirming 29 Ct. Cl. 97.

No Claim for Personal Injuries. — The Depredation Act relates exclusively to claims for property, and does not authorize a recovery for personal injuries. Friend v. U. S., 29 Ct. Cl. 425; Swope v. U. S., 33 Ct. Cl. 223.

Creditors have no rights under the act. Labadie v. U. S., 32 Ct. Cl. 368, 33 Ct. Cl. 476.

Laches in Presenting Claim. — Though no statute of limitation may attach to an Indian depredation case, the fact that the government has again and again notified claimants by statutes to present their claims, and the fact that the claimant has wholly neglected to do so, suggest moral presumptions against the claim, and these presumptions must be overcome by satisfactory evidence. INDICATE. — See note 1.

INDICAVIT. — In English practice, a writ of prohibition.²

INDICTMENT. — See ENCYC. OF PL. AND PR., title INDICTMENTS, INFORMATIONS, AND COMPLAINTS, vol. 10, p. 344.

INDIFFERENT. — Impartial; unbiased.³

INDIGENT — See note 4.

1. Indicate and Show. — The trial court instructed that a declaration under the circumstances, in view of the condition of the deceased when it was made, "indicates that she then realized she was about to die." The appellate court said: "The word indicates, as here used, is the same as 'shows,' and renders the instruction a charge upon the effect of the evidence, which the statute forbids." White v. State, 111 Ala. 92.

On a trial for grand larceny, the court instructed the jury, that if satisfied, beyond a reasonable doubt, "that defendant killed, or had the calf killed, by the witnesses, and that she then cut out the brand and cut off the ears of the calf, and burned up the ears and part of the hide so cut out, this would be a circumstance to be considered by you, indicating that the defendant was not the owner of the calf, and of her knowledge that she was not the owner," etc. It was held that the word indicating, as used in the instruction, would be understood by the jury as tending to show a certain result, and that the language of the instruction was not in violation of the constitutional provision prohibiting the court from charging the jury with respect to matters of fact. State v. Loveless, 17 Nev. 424.

But in Coyle v. Com., 104 Pa. St. 133, it was said: "It is true, perhaps, that what is merely indicated by certain facts may not be shown by them. Although the words 'show' and indicate are sometimes interchangeable in popular use, they are not always so. The present ordinary use of the words discloses a difference in signification, and that difference is perhaps more recognizable when these terms are applied to the law or to medical science. To show is to make apparent or clear by evidence, to prove; whilst an indication may be merely a symptom, that which points to or gives direction to the mind. The commonwealth, however, had a right, we think, to inquire in proper form, of a competent expert, whether any condition of facts assumed either proved or indicated insanity; whether such facts were conclusive or merely symptomatic, or neither."

2. In State v. Road Com'rs, 1 Mill (S. Car.) 55. 12 Am. Dec. 601, the court said: "In Fitzherbert's Nat. Brev., p. 70, it is said, 'A person who is sued in the spiritual court may purchase a writ which is called indicavit, which writ is a prohibition,' etc. This last authority is cited merely to show the special names which writs of the same nature often assumed as they happened to be adapted to particular cases."

3. Indifferent. — Under an act requiring the appointment of indifferent appraisers of land taken under execution, an uncle of the plaintiff is not indifferent. Tweedy v. Pickett, 1 Day (Conn.) 109. Nor is a nephew by marriage indifferent. "The legislature, in directing that the appraisers should be indifferent, must have intended that there should not be such a relation between them and the parties as could bias their minds and induce them to act with partiality. As the degree of relationship is not designated, it is reasonable to adopt the rule presented by statute as to the cases in which judges are disqualified to judge between parties." Fox v. Hills, 1 Conn. 295. An appraiser who bears the relation of tenant to one of the parties is not indifferent. Mitchell v. Kirkland, 7 Conn. 229.

Jury and Jury Trial. (See also the title JURY AND JURY TRIAL.) — Upon the question who is an indifferent juror the court in People v. Vermilyea, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 122, said: "What is meant by a person standing indifferent? Manifestly, that the mind is in a state of neutrality, as respects the person, and the matter to be tried; that there exists no bias for or against either party, in the mind of the juror, calculated to operate upon him; that he comes to the trial with a mind uncommitted, and prepared to weigh the evidence in impartial scales." See also State v. Pike, 49 N. H. 399.

Highways. — In Anthony v. South Kingstown, 13 R. I. 129, it was held that the petitioners for the laying out of a highway were not "indifferent men" and therefore could not act as committeemen to mark out a highway under the Rhode Island highway act.

4. A Trust to aid "indigent young men * * * in fitting themselves for the evangelical ministry" is not void for uncertainty. "Neither of the words indigent or 'evangelical' is of rare use or hidden meaning. They are quite within ordinary intelligence and point with a sufficient degree of certainty to the individual to enable the statute of charitable uses to distinguish him from all others. It is a sufficiently accurate statement in this connection to say that they describe a man who is without sufficient means of his own, and whom no person is bound and able to supply, to enable him to prepare himself for preaching the gospel." Storrs Agricultural School v. Whitney, 54 Conn. 352, 35 Alb. L. J. 384. See generally the title CHARITIES AND TRUSTS FOR CHARITABLE USES, vol. 5, p. 893.

A Statute enacted that any person unable to maintain himself should be provided for or assisted by a municipality. The court said: "No other word perhaps in the language more appropriately describes the persons here designated than the word indigent. It means the needy, the poor, those who are destitute of property and the means of comfortable subsistence." City of Lynchburg v. Slaughter, 75 Va. 62.

Indigent Insane. (See also the titles INSANITY, post; POOR AND POOR LAWS.) — The Constitution of North Carolina provided that the legislature might enact a statute for the care of

INDIGNITY. — Indignity means unmerited contemptuous conduct towards another.¹

INDIRECT. — See note 2.

INDIRECTLY. — See note 3.

INDISPENSABLE PARTIES. (See also ENCYC. OF PL. AND PR., title PARTIES TO ACTIONS, vol. 15, p. 611.) — Indispensable parties are those who have not only an interest in the subject-matter of the controversy, but an interest of such a nature that a final decree cannot be made without either affecting their interests or leaving the controversy in such a condition that its final determination may be wholly inconsistent with equity and good conscience.⁴

INDISPUTABLE. — See note 5.

INDIVIDUAL. — "Individual" is frequently used in the sense of a natural person,⁶ as opposed to a corporation.

the indigent insane. In conformity with this, Code N. Car., § 2273, provides that "priority of admission shall be given to the indigent insane." It was held that by the term "indigent insane" were meant all those who had no income over and above what was sufficient to support those who might be legally dependent on the estate. In re Hybart, 119 N. Car. 359.

Paupers and Indigent Insane Distinguished. — See People v. Schjarlie County, 121 N. Y. 350.

1. Indignity to the Person. — In construing a statute law allowing divorce for indignity to the person, the court said: "What is an indignity to the person? Indignity is defined by Mr. Webster to be 'unmerited contemptuous conduct towards another; any action towards another which manifests contempt for him; contumely; incivility, or injury accompanied with insult.' It is manifest from this definition that an indignity to the person may be offered without striking the body, or even touching it in a rude and offensive manner. Contumelious words, especially when accompanied with a contemptuous demeanor towards a person, may amount to an indignity which would be felt by a sensitive mind with far keener anguish than would be inflicted by a blow." Coble v. Coble, 2 Jones Eq. (55 N. Car.) 395. See also the title DIVORCE, vol. 9, p. 811.

2. Indirect. — The vendor of a stage line pledged himself "not to be concerned, direct or indirect, in any line of stages in opposition to" the purchaser. It was held that the word indirect was used for the special purpose of guarding against any kind of interference by the defendant in aiding or in any manner promoting the use or carrying on of any opposition. Davis v. Barney, 2 Gill & J. (Md.) 402. And see Guerand v. Dandeleit, 32 Md. 570. See also the title RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

Indirect Tax. (See also the title TAXATION.) — In Springer v. U. S., 102 U. S. 602, it was said: "All taxes are usually divided into two classes, those which are direct and those which are indirect, and * * * under the former denomination are included taxes on land or real property, and under the latter taxes on consumption."

3. Usury. (See also the title USURY.) — Where the expression "shall take directly or indirectly for loan of money" is used in a usury statute, any contrivance, if the substance of it be a loan, will come under the word indirectly. Floyer v. Edwards, 1 Cowp. 112.

Indirectly or Secondarily Liable. — In Bell v. Ottawa Trust, etc., Co., 28 Ont. 519, it was held that a partner who had individually joined as a maker in a promissory note of his firm for its accommodation was not indirectly or secondarily liable for the firm to the holder, but was primarily liable.

5. Indisputable Title. (See also the titles COVENANTS, vol. 8, p. 43; VENDOR AND PURCHASER.) — In Courcier v. Graham, 1 Ohio 330, it was held that where one covenanted to make an indisputable title, a complete connected paper title was necessary.

Indisputable Presumption. — See the title PRESUMPTIONS.

6. Natural and Artificial Persons. — Com. v. Pittsburgh, 41 Pa. St. 283, cited in Seybert v. Pittsburg, 1 Wall. (U. S.) 273, note.

In an act giving to individuals the right to use the road of a railroad and to place cars thereon, individual includes partnerships and corporations. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Canal Com'rs, 21 Pa. St. 20. So in an act providing that "no abatement shall be made of the taxes assessed upon any individual until," etc. Otis Co. v. Ware, 8 Gray (Mass.) 509.

A statute provided that every company operating a telegraph line in a state should receive dispatches from and for other telegraph lines and from and for any individual. In construing this statute the court said: "The word individual is here used in the sense of person, and embraces artificial or corporate persons as well as natural. The dispatches so received 'from or for' must be transmitted 'with impartiality,' that is, without discrimination, either in respect to persons or in the time or manner of transmission." State v. Bell Telephone Co., 36 Ohio St. 310. And see the title TELEGRAPH COMPANIES.

Name of an Individual. (See also the title Volume XVI.

As an adjective, it means personal.¹

INDUBITABLE.—See note 3.

TRADEMARK.—In In re Holt, (1896) 1 Ch. 711, it was held that a fictitious name, such as the name of a character in fiction, was a word capable of being registered as a trademark, the court holding that "Trilby" was not a name of an individual. Lindley, L. J., said: "It is hardly to be supposed that the legislature meant individual to be taken in a fanciful or metaphorical sense, or meant it to denote an imaginary person who has not, and never had, any real existence. I do not think that such words as Hamlet, Sam Weller, Jupiter, Venus, etc., can be called names of individuals."

Indians.—In an Indian treaty providing for the assignment of lands to families and individuals, it was held that the word individual meant a person not a member of the family. Summers v. Spybuck, 1 Kan. 394.

Civil Damage Act. (See the title CIVIL DAMAGE ACTS, vol. 6, p. 36.)—Under a statute providing that persons licensed to sell intoxicating liquors "shall pay all damages that the community or individuals may sustain in consequence of such traffic," a person himself purchasing and drinking such liquor may maintain an action against the seller for a personal injury sustained in consequence thereof. Buckmaster v. McElroy, 20 Neb. 557, 57 Am. Rep. 843. The court said that the decision turned upon the question whether the word individuals included a person who participates in the traffic by purchasing the liquor, and held that it did.

1. Individual Banker.—A New York statute provided that every private and individual banker might charge six per cent. interest, and that if he knowingly charged a greater rate, double the amount might be recovered from the private or individual banker receiving the same. In construing this statute the court said: "Notwithstanding the fact that the terms 'individual banker' and 'private banker' are used as synonyms in section 99, of chapter 409, Laws of 1882, and in the statute from which that section is derived, we think the terms are independent, and each had a well-understood meaning when chapter 567, Laws of 1880, and chapter 409, Laws of 1882, were enacted. Since the passage of chapter 363, Laws of 1840, the term 'individual banker' has been frequently used in our statutes and reports, and has acquired a definite meaning. It denotes a person who, having complied with the statutory requirements, has received authority from the banking department to engage in the business of banking, subject to its inspection, supervision, and to the burdens imposed. People v. Doty, 80 N. Y. 225, 228. Private bankers are persons or firms engaged in banking without having any special privileges or authority from the state." Perkins v. Smith, 116 N. Y. 441.

Liability of Directors. (See also the title PUBLIC OFFICERS.)—Under an act making every neglect to keep and preserve the road in good repair a misdemeanor in the president and individual directors of a turnpike company, the liability of the directors is personal and several. "If the individual officers are deemed guilty of an offense, they must be individually punishable, which of course must be personal." Kane v. People, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 363.

Individually—Stockholders. (See also the title STOCKHOLDERS.)—Individually is used of the liability of stockholders in distinction from their liability in their corporate capacity. Sewall v. Allen, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 347. It means "personally," not "severally." Mann v. Pentz, 2 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 270.

Upon the question whether the term, as used within a statute imposing additional liability upon stockholders, raised joint or several liabilities, the court said: "In some of the cases referred to the word 'each' is used, and in some the word 'severally'; and it is argued that the word individually, as used here, is in no sense equivalent to either of those words, and that there is no several liability. The word individually means separately, and this again means singly. Again, the word 'severally' means separately. To separate is to disunite, to divide, to disconnect, to sever. Things which are equal to the same thing are equal to each other." Meisser v. Thompson, 9 Ill. App. 370.

2. Wills. (See also the title WILLS.)—Promissory notes do not pass by a bequest of "indoor movables." Penniman v. French, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 404, 28 Am. Dec. 309.

A bequest of "all that I possess, indoors and outdoors," will pass real estate. Tolar v. Tolar, 3 Hawks (to N. Car.) 74, 14 Am. Dec. 575.

3. Indubitable Proof.—"When such terms as clear, precise, explicit, unequivocal, and indubitable are used by the courts in defining the requisite proof of a particular fact to be made out by verbal testimony, it is meant that a conviction shall be fastened in the minds of jurors as strong as verbal testimony is able to convey. It is meant that witnesses shall be found to be credible; that the facts to which they testify are distinctly remembered; that details are narrated exactly and in due order, and that their statements are true. The word indubitable * * * was used in a sense subject to these limitations, and would necessarily so be understood. Absolute certainty is of course out of the question. Terms are used with relation to their subject-matter." Spencer v. Colt, 89 Pa. St. 318.

Indubitable Proof is evidence that is found to be not only credible, but of such weight and directness as to make out beyond reasonable doubt the facts alleged. Boyertown Nat. Bank v. Hartman, 147 Pa. St. 562. See also the title REASONABLE DOUBT.

3. Carver Mercantile Co. v. Hulme, 7 Mont. 566.

Industrial Business. — The Revised Statutes of the United States, § 1889, provide that the legislative assemblies of the territories may by general acts permit persons to associate themselves together as bodies corporate, for mining, manufacturing, and other industrial pursuits. It was held that a mercantile business for the sale of goods, mining supplies, etc., was an industrial business within this statute. Bashford-Burmister Co. v. Agua Fria Copper Co., (Ariz. 1894) 35 Pac. Rep. 983. See also Carver Mercantile Co. v. Hulme, 7 Mont. 566. In Wells v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 23 Fed. Rep. 469, it was held that the express business was an industrial pursuit.

Mill. — A statute provided that railroads might grant special rates to any person or corporation, to aid in the development of "any industrial enterprise" in the state. It was held that a mill was an industrial enterprise. The court said: "It cannot be disputed that 'industrial enterprises' include all kinds of manufacturing. Mr. Worcester defines industrial as 'relating to manufactures or to the product of industry or labor.' It being in evidence that the plaintiff was a miller, and used the coal shipped to him in the manufacture of corn into meal, we are constrained to hold that the plaintiff had the right to rely on the promised rebate, and that the claim here made should be allowed." 5. Ineffectual. — A statute provided for certain exemptions, and further provided that "a mortgage hereafter executed upon property so exempt is ineffectual until the exemption has been canceled as prescribed in this section." It was held that the mortgage, after it was executed, was not void. The court said: "The word ineffectual seems to have been chosen to express that the mortgage was ineffectual to cancel the exemption. It is not equivalent to 'void.' For it will be seen that it is ineffectual only till the exemption has been canceled. Therefore, it is plainly only as to the exemption that it is ineffectual. And the judgment appealed from so treats it." Peck v. Ormsby, 55 Hun (N. Y.) 267.

6. Carroll v. Green, 148 Ind. 362.

In State v. Murray, 28 Wis. 99, it was said: "The term ineligible means as well disqualification to hold an office as disqualification to be elected to an office." This case was distinguished in Smith v. Moore, 90 Ind. 307.

Ineligible and Disqualified. — These terms, as applied to candidates for public offices, have been held equivalent. Carroll v. Green, 148 Ind. 362.

7. Bouv. L. Dict.

Inevitable Accident. — An accident is said to be inevitable when it is not occasioned in any degree, either remotely or directly, by the want of such care and skill as the law holds every man bound to exercise. Dygert v. Bradley, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 473.

"To make an accident, or casualty, or, as the law sometimes states it, inevitable accident, it must be such an accident as the defendant could not have avoided by the use of the kind and degree of care necessary to the exigency, and in the circumstances in which he was placed." If one who is doing a lawful and proper act, using due care and proper precautions necessary to the exigency of the case to avoid injuring others, accidentally does injure another, it is the result of pure accident, or is involuntary and unavoidable, and no action will lie. Brown v. Kendall, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 296.

Negligence Distinguished from Inevitable Accident. — In The Schwan, (1892) P. D. 429, Esher, M. R., said: "What is the proper definition of inevitable accident? To my mind these cases show clearly what is the proper definition of inevitable accident as distinguished from mere negligence—that is, a mere want of reasonable care and skill. In my opinion, a person relying on inevitable accident must show that something happened over which he had no control, and the effect of which could not have been avoided by the greatest care and skill. That seems to me to be the very distinction which was taken, and was meant to be taken, between the case of inevitable accident and a mere want of reasonable care and skill."

Inevitable Accident and Act of God Distinguished.—In Fergusson v. Brent, 12 Md. 33, it was said: "It is true that every 'act of God' is an inevitable accident, because no human agency can resist it; but, because it is so, it does not therefore follow, in the sense of the books, that every inevitable accident is an act of God. Damage done by lightning is an inevitable accident and also an act of God; but the collision of two vessels in the dark is an inevitable accident, but not an act of God, such as the stroke of lightning, nor is it so considered by the authorities."

"All causes of inevitable accident—casus fortuitus—may be divided into two classes, those which are occasioned by the elementary forces of nature, unconnected with the agency of man or other cause, and those which have their origin either in the whole or in part in the agency of man, whether in acts of commission or omission, of nonfeasance or of misfeasance, or in any other cause independent of the agency of natural forces. It is obvious that it would be altogether incongruous to apply the term 'act of God' to the latter class of inevitable accident." Nugent v. Smith, 1 C. P. D. 435, citing Forward v. Pittard, 1 T. R. 27.

"The general principle is clear. The act of God is natural necessity, as wind and storms, which arise from natural causes, and is distinct from inevitable accident." Lord Mansfield, C. J., in Trent, etc., Nav. Co. v. Wood, 4 Dougl. 287, 26 E. C. L. 358.

And in the following cases the distinction pointed out above between inevitable accident and act of God was recognized: Trent, etc., Nav. Co. v. Wood, 4 Dougl. 290, 26 E. C. L. 361; Forward v. Pittard, 1 T. R. 27; Fay v. Pacific Imp. Co., 93 Cal. 261; McHenry v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., 4 Harr. (Del.) 448; Central Line of Boats v. Lowe, 50 Ga. 511; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Shea, 66 Ill. 471; Merchants' Dispatch Co. v. Smith, 76 Ill. 542; Hall v. Cheney, 36 N. H. 32; McArthur v. Sears, 21 Wend (N. Y.) 198; Merritt v. Earle, 29 N. Y. 115; Michaels v. New York Cent. R. Co., 30 N. Y. 571; Dennis v. Massachusetts Ben. Assoc., 47 Hun (N. Y.) 343; Hays v. Kennedy, 41 Pa. St. 379.

The term, however, in some cases has been held to be synonymous with "act of God." Thus, in Neal v. Saunderson, 2 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 576, it was said: "Indeed, inevitable accident is now used as a phrase synonymous with 'the act of God.' Judge Story says by the act of God is meant inevitable accident, or casualty. In Crosby v. Fitch, 12 Conn. 419, 31 Am. Dec. 747, it was said: "'The act of God,' inevitable accident, 'dangers of the sea,' etc., are expressions of very similar legal import." Compare Merritt v. Earle, 29 N. Y. 116.

Where a car was blown from a track by a violent wind storm and the goods in it were destroyed by a fire which immediately followed, upon the distinction between inevitable accident and "act of God," the appellate court said: "Considerable attention is given to the eighth instruction, in which the learned judge charged: 'Where one is pursuing a lawful avocation, in a lawful manner, and something occurs which no human skill or precaution could foresee or prevent, and as a consequence the accident takes place, this is called inevitable accident or the "act of God." The objection urged is more technical than substantial. While it is possibly not technically correct, and while there is a legal distinction between inevitable accident and the 'act of God,' we can see nothing in it to the prejudice of the plaintiff, or that could have misled the jury. The immediate resulting cause producing the loss was the fire, which might properly be termed an inevitable accident growing out of the former disaster; while the direct cause of the agency that worked the destruction was the 'act of God,' putting the resulting agent at work." Blythe v. Denver, etc., R. Co., 15 Colo. 338.

Irresistible Superhuman Cause.—The words "irresistible superhuman cause" are equivalent to and are used in the same sense as "act of God," which is natural necessity, as wind and storms, which arise from natural causes, and which operate without any aid or interference from man. The term is distinct from inevitable accident. Clay County v. Simonson, 1 Dak. 387.

Unavoidable Accident and Inevitable Accident Synonymous.—Fish v. Chapman, 2 Ga. 356.

A casualty which might have been prevented by the use of known and proper precautions against the danger is not an inevitable accident. Ladd v. Foster, 12 Sawy. (U. S.) 547.

Where a master proceeds carelessly on his voyage, and afterwards circumstances arise when it is too late for him to do what is fit and proper to be done, an accident ensuing is not an inevitable accident. He must show that he acted seasonably and that he "did everything which an experienced mariner could do, adopting ordinary caution," and that the collision ensued in spite of such exertions. The Rose, 7 Jur. 381, citing The Juliet Erskine, 6 Notes Cas. (Eng.) 634; The Virgil, 2 W. Rob. 201; Union Steamship Co. v. New York, etc., Steamship Co., 24 How. (U. S.) 313.

Same — Relative Term. — In Amoskeag Mfg. Co. v. The Steam Ferry-Boat John Adams, 1 Cliff (U. S.) 412, it was said: "Inevitable accident, in the absolute and strict sense of the term, says Dr. Lushington, in the case of The Europa, 2 Eng. L. & Eq. 559, very seldom takes place. According to his view, the word inevitable must be considered as a relative term, and must be construed, not absolutely, but reasonably, with regard to the circumstances of each particular case." See also The Grace Girdler, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 203; Ladd v. Foster, 12 Sawy. (U. S.) 553.

Inevitable Dangers of the River. — Evidence of usage or custom fixing the construction of the words "inevitable dangers of the river," in a bill of lading for the transportation of goods by inland navigation, is admissible. Gordon v. Little, 8 S. & R. (Pa.) 533.

Leases. (See also the titles LANDLORD AND TENANT; LEASES.) — Fire, against the will and without the negligence or other default of the lessee, happening from some cause to him wholly unknown, is an inevitable casualty within the meaning of the term as used in an exception in a covenant to keep in good repair. The court said: "It is admitted that a casualty may be inevitable without happening by the act of God or by the public enemies of the country. In the present case, the expression seems to me to mean only such casualties as are inevitable by the defendant, and not such as might not be avoided by the united efforts of the whole society. * * * An accident which happens without the slightest degree of negligence or default of the defendant is, as to him, an inevitable casualty." Hodgson v. Dexter, 1 Cranch (C. C.) 109, 1 Cranch (U. S.) 345. See also Kelly v. Duffy, (Pa. 1887) 9 Cent. Rep. 410.

A lease contained a proviso that in case the warehouse, or any part thereof, should at any time during the term "be destroyed or damaged by fire, flood, storm, tempest, or other inevitable accident," the rent, or a just proportion thereof, should cease or abate so long as the premises should continue wholly or partly untenable or unfit for use or occupation in consequence of such destruction or damage. During the period in which the lessor was executing the repairs the lessee was excluded from the use and occupation of the whole or a part of the premises, and he claimed an abatement of rent under the proviso. It was held that the words "inevitable accident" imported something ejusdem generis with what had been previously mentioned, and did not apply to that which, though not avoidable so far as the lessee was concerned, was not in its nature inevitable, but resulted from the default of the lessor, and that the lessee was not entitled to an abatement of rent. Saner v. Bilton, 7 Ch. D. 815, followed in Manchester Bonded Warehouse Co. v. Carr, 5 C. P. D. 513.

A tenant was bound to restore the premises in good order, "loss by fire or inevitable accident or ordinary wear excepted." Upon the construction of this lease the court said: "A window broken by a stone accidentally kicked by a passing team is not broken by inevitable accident. The kicking of the stone, so far as appellee is concerned, may have been inevitable, but not the breaking of the window; that might have been protected by a blind or wire netting." Peck v. Scoville Mfg. Co., 43 Ill. App. 362.

1. Infamous Conduct in Professional Respect. (See generally the title PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS.) — An English statute provided that if the general council of medical education and registration should judge any medical practitioner to have been guilty of infamous conduct in any professional respect, the general council might, if it saw fit, direct the register to erase the name of the practitioner from the register. In Allinson v. General Council, etc., (1894) 1 Q. B. 760, 763, the court adopted the following definition of infamous conduct: "If it is shown that a medical man, in the pursuit of his profession, has done something with regard to it which would be reasonably regarded as disgraceful or dishonorable by his professional brethren of good repute and competency, then it is open to the general medical council to say that he has been guilty of 'infamous conduct in a professional respect.' That is at any rate evidence of 'infamous conduct' within the meaning of section 29."

The publication by a medical man of a book setting forth prescriptions to prevent conception has been held to be infamous conduct, within this statute. Allbutt v. General Council, etc., 23 Q. B. D. 400.

In Lecson v. General Council, etc., 38 W. R. 303, it was held that where a medical man allowed his name to be used as a "cover" for an unqualified person he was guilty of infamous conduct.

In U. S. v. Maxwell, 3 Dill. (U. S.) 275, Judge Dillon said: "The words 'infamous crime' have a fixed and settled meaning. In a legal sense they are descriptive of an offense that subjects a person to infamous punishment or prevents his being a witness."

"Infamous" in Popular Sense. — The term "infamous" in its popular and general sense has been said to be synonymous with "detestable, odious, scandalous, disgraceful, base, vile, shameful, ignominious." Webster's Dictionary; Polson v. Polson, 140 Ind. 310; Com. v. Shaver, 3 W. & S. (Pa.) 343.

Burglary, at common law, is a felony, and a conviction therefor renders a witness incompetent. Taylor v. State, 62 Ala. 164. Aliter as to burglary in the third degree under the New York statute. People v. Park, 41 N. Y. 24.

well-settled doctrine of the common law, renders a witness incompetent. The same result follows conviction for any form of the crimen falsi,¹ but what crimes are to be designated by the term crimen falsi is not so well settled. Under this head have been enumerated: ² "forgery,³ perjury,⁴ subornation of perjury,⁵ suppression of testimony by bribery,⁶ or conspiracy to procure the absence of a witness,⁷ or other conspiracy to accuse one of a crime,⁸ and barratry."⁹ From these instances, the deduction has been made that, at common law, a crime involving a charge of falsehood or fraud must, to be a crimen falsi, and consequently to be infamous, not only involve a falsehood or fraud of such a nature and purpose as make it probable that the party committing it is devoid of truth and insensible to the obligation of an oath, but the falsehood or fraud must be calculated to affect injuriously the public administration of justice.¹⁰ Accordingly the effect of disqualification to testify seems not to be extended to cases of private cheats, such as the obtaining of goods under false pretenses,¹¹ embezzlement,¹² or conspiracy to defraud some private person.¹³

Statutory Enumeration of Infamous Crimes. — In some states wherein the doctrine of infamy exists, the common-law tests as to what are infamous crimes are superseded by a statutory enumeration, and the incident of infamy attaches only to the offenses enumerated.¹⁴

2. Infamy Determined by Crime and Not by Punishment. — The infamy which disqualifies a convict was formerly held to arise from two sources, the conviction of certain offenses, and the infliction of certain penalties. The mere conviction, properly evidenced, of some crimes, was always sufficient to render the offender infamous, while some punishments of a personally degrading character had also the same effect, whatever the crimes might be for which they were inflicted.¹⁵ But at present it is the settled rule of the common law that it is the character of the crime, and not the nature of the punishment,

13. Conspiracy to Defraud Not Crimen Falsi. — In the case of Ville de Varsovie's Case, 2 Dods. 174, the testimony of a person who had been convicted of a conspiracy to defraud was admitted in the court of admiralty.

And in Crowther v. Hopwood, 3 Stark. 21, 14 E. C. L. 149, the testimony of such a person was admitted on a trial at common law. To the same effect see Bickel v. Fasig, 33 Pa. St. 463.

which creates the infamy and destroys the competency of the witness.¹ At present, therefore, a conviction of treason or felony, or of any species of the crimen falsi, will incapacitate the party convicted from giving evidence while it continues in force, without regard to the punishment inflicted.²

Sentence of Minor to House of Refuge. — Under statute in New York it has been held that where a person is convicted of burglary in the third degree, which is a felony within the statutory definition of that term, he will be incompetent as a witness, though he is but sixteen years of age and is therefore exempt from punishment by imprisonment in the state prison, and is sentenced to the house of refuge instead.³

3. Sentence or Judgment as Prerequisite to Disqualification. — The competency of a witness guilty of an infamous crime is not affected by conviction merely, and nothing short of a final judgment on the conviction will be sufficient.⁴

Reason of Rule. — This rule is founded on the reason that it is always within the power of the court, on motion in arrest or for a new trial, to set aside a verdict illegally and improperly rendered at any time before judgment; and the prosecution may, in the end, result in the defendant's acquittal.⁵

Defective Judgment. — A conviction of larceny before a justice of the peace in a case within his jurisdiction, and the performance of the sentence, render the convict an incompetent witness, although the complaint on which the justice proceeded was so defective that judgment might have been arrested or reversed on error. *Com. v. Admission of Infamous Crime. — Thus the mere admission of the commission of an infamous crime does not render the person so admitting an incompetent witness.¹

4. Mode of Proof of Conviction. — It has been laid down as a general rule, that the conviction and sentence of an infamous crime can be proved only by the record or by an authenticated copy thereof.² Accordingly it has been held that the admission as to his conviction of an infamous crime, made by a witness in response to a question upon cross-examination, is not admissible for the purpose of establishing his incompetency when the production of the record of conviction was demanded before exclusion of the witness, since, in such case, his admission would not be the best evidence of which the case was susceptible.³ But it has been held that the right to have the record produced may be waived, and the conviction may be shown by the testimony of the witness himself in the absence of objection to that manner of making the proof.⁴

Right of Witness to Refuse to Testify as to His Infamy. — It has been held that not only is an admission of a witness made on cross-examination inadmissible to establish his incompetency upon his objection thereto, but he may, either on the voir dire or on cross-examination, refuse to answer any question which is asked for the purpose of eliciting an answer which would render him infamous and hence incompetent.⁵ But it seems that this rule does not apply when the Admission of False Swearing. — In Rex v. Teal, 11 East 307, it was held that a witness admitting himself to have sworn falsely before upon a particular point is not an incompetent witness, but the objection goes strongly to his credit.

But it has been held that a witness on a cross-examination, in order to discredit him, may be asked if he has not committed perjury in another state. State v. March, 1 Jones L. (46 N. Car.) 526.

In Hilts v. Colvin, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 182, it was held that where the clerk's office of the county had been burnt down and the record probably destroyed conviction should be proved by the transcript delivered into the Court of Exchequer by the district attorney; and that, so long as the existence of the transcript was not disproved, parol evidence was not admissible.

In Illinois, in civil cases the previous conviction of a witness may be proved by the witness himself or by other parol evidence, but in criminal cases it seems that it can only be proved by producing the record of the conviction. Burke v. Stewart, 81 Ill. App. 506; Gage v. Eddy, 167 Ill. 102.

Admissibility of Defective Record. — A record of a conviction of felony without a caption showing by what authority the indictment was found, is not admissible in evidence to incapacitate a witness. Cooke v. Maxwell, 2 Stark. 183, 3 E. C. L. 368.

Parol Evidence as to Transported Convict. — In Maryland it was at one time held that parol evidence was admissible to prove that a man was a convict transported from Great Britain to the colonies to serve a term of years for some felonious or infamous offense. State v. Ridgely, 2 Har. & M. (Md.) 120; Clarke v. Hall, 2 Har. & M. (Md.) 378. See also Cole v. Cole, 1 Har. & J. (Md.) 572.

In Com. v. Hanlon, 3 Brews. (Pa.) 461, it was held that a witness is not disqualified by his own acknowledgment on cross-examination of a conviction of felony in another state, no record being produced.

4. Waiver of Right to Have Record Produced. — White v. State, 33 Tex. Crim. 177, where the examination of the witness by parol as to his previous conviction was made before he testified. If, however, the witness has already testified without objection, an admission of a previous conviction made by him on cross-examination will go merely to his credit. Batson v. State, 36 Tex. Crim. 606. See also Moore v. State, 39 Tex. Crim. 266.

credibility of a witness only is sought to be attacked on examination, for in that state of the case he may be compelled to answer as to his previous conviction of infamous crimes.¹

5. Effect of Conviction in Another Jurisdiction. — In some jurisdictions it has been held that a conviction in another state of a crime which, by the laws of that state, disqualifies the party from being heard as a witness, and which, if committed in the state where the witness is to testify, would have operated as a disqualification, is sufficient to exclude his testimony in the same manner as if the offense had been committed and the conviction had been taken in the latter jurisdiction.² But the better view appears to be that at common law, and on general principles of jurisprudence, when not controlled by express statute giving effect within the state which enacts it to a conviction and sentence in another state, such conviction and sentence can have no effect by way of disqualification of a witness beyond the limits of the state in which the judgment is rendered.³

6. Removal of Disqualification — a. PARDON — (1) In General. — It is settled law that the pardon of an offense not only blots out the crime committed, but removes the disability to testify in court.⁴

Pardon Prior to Conviction. — If the power to pardon before conviction exists, its exercise prevents the disability to testify from attaching.⁵

Effect of Pardon After Endurance of Punishment. — And a full pardon by the President of the United States or by the governor of a state, although granted after the prisoner had served out his term of imprisonment,⁶ thenceforth takes away all disqualifications as a witness, and restores his competency to testify

Under statute in Texas it has been held that a person convicted of felony in another state is disqualified to testify as a witness in criminal cases in Texas, and the judgment of such other state offered to disqualify a witness need not show on its face that the offense was a felony by the law of the state where committed, but extraneous proof may be given of that fact. Pitner v. State, 23 Tex. App. 366. See also Logan v. U. S., 144 U. S. 263.

to any facts within his knowledge, even if they came to his knowledge before his disqualification was removed by pardon.¹

Conviction May Be Proved After Pardon to Affect Credit. — While a pardon restores the competency of a witness, it has been held that the conviction is still provable against him to affect his credit.²

(2) Effect of Pardon where Disability Annexed to Crime by Statute. — In England, however, a special exception was made in the case of perjury, where a distinction was taken between conviction on an indictment at common law and on an indictment under the statute of 5 Eliz., c. 9, which declares that no person so convicted shall thenceforth be received as a witness to be deposed and sworn in any court of record until such judgment be reversed.³ This rule has been followed by the decisions in a few jurisdictions in the United States.⁴ But in a recent case in Pennsylvania it was held that no distinction can be made between the effect of a pardon upon a conviction for perjury under statute, and upon a conviction at common law.⁵

(3) Mere Remission or Commutation of Punishment. — It has been held that a mere remission or commutation of punishment cannot restore a felon's competency as a witness.⁶

(4) Conditional Pardon. — It has been held that every condition and restriction annexed to a pardon must be reasonable and consistent with the sound rules of law, and that, where a pardon contained the proviso that it should not be construed to remove the disabilities which attached to the prisoner on his conviction and condemnation, the incongruity between the pardon and the proviso rendered the rejection of the proviso indispensable in order to give legal effect to the pardon, and the person pardoned was a competent witness notwithstanding the proviso.⁷ In Texas, however, a distinction is made. If a conditional pardon is issued before the convict has served out his term, the condition being valid, the pardon is subject to revocation and the convict is not restored to his rights of citizenship.⁸ But if the pardon

In Rex v. Ford, 2 Salk. 690, Holt, J., said: "If one be convicted of perjury upon the statute, he cannot be restored to his credit by the king's pardon. for, by the statute, it is a part of the judgment that he be infamous and lose the credit of testimony; but he may by a statute pardon. But in other cases, where the infamy is only the consequence of the judgment, the king's pardon may restore the party to his testimony."

4. Infamy Created by Conviction under Certain Statutes Not Removed by Pardon. — Foreman v. Baldwin, 24 Ill. 298 (larceny); Houghtaling v. Kelderhouse, (Supm. Ct. Gen. T.) 1 Park. Crim. (N. Y.) 241 (perjury). See also Holridge v. Gillespie, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 35.

In Tennessee, by statute (Shannon's Code Tenn. 1896, § 5595), a person convicted of any one of a number of enumerated crimes becomes incompetent, and this incompetency is not removed by pardon. See Evans v. State, 7 Baxt. (Tenn.) 12. See also Foster v. State, 9 Baxt. (Tenn.) 353.

6. Competency Not Restored by Commutation of Punishment. — Perkins v. Stevens, 24 Pick. (Mass.) 277. In this case there was a remission to the criminal of "the residue of the punishment he was sentenced to endure." To the same effect see State v. Timmons, 2 Harr. (Del.) 528.

But in Hoffman v. Coster, 2 Whart. (Pa.) 453, it was held that a pardon by the President of the United States reciting that J. B. was convicted at a circuit court of the United States of passing a counterfeit bank-note and sentenced to three years' imprisonment, and declaring: "I do hereby remit unto him, the said J. B., the remainder of the said sentence, and order him to be liberated from further imprisonment on payment of the costs," removed the incompetency of J. B. as a witness.

Effect on Full Pardon of Previous Conditional Pardon. — The fact that a previous conditional is granted after the convict's term of imprisonment has expired, the condition is void, and the convict is restored to his full rights, as if the pardon were absolute.¹

(5) Proof of Pardon. — The pardon is proved, as a general rule, by its production under seal.² But it has been held that where a witness for the commonwealth stated, in answer to the prisoner's counsel, that he had been convicted of a felony and pardoned, he was a competent witness without producing the pardon.³

b. REVERSAL OF JUDGMENT. — It has been said that the competency of a witness may be restored by reversal of the judgment, and the reversal of the judgment is proved in the same manner as the judgment itself.⁴

c. SERVING OUT SENTENCE. — At common law, the endurance of the penalty, or the serving out the time of punishment, has no effect in removing infamy or restoring the competency of a witness.⁵ But a different rule obtains under statute in some states.⁶

7. Abolition of Common-law Rule by Statute. — In England, and in many jurisdictions in the United States, the common-law rule as to the competency of persons convicted of infamous crimes has been abolished, and the convict is just as competent as any other person to testify in any civil or criminal proceeding, but the conviction of such crimes may be shown to affect the credibility of the witness.⁷

See also the statutes of the several states.

In Kentucky the common-law doctrine has been modified by statute, and it is only when a conviction is for perjury, false swearing, or subornation of perjury, that the party convicted is disqualified from testifying. Com. v. McGuire, 84 Ky. 57; Combs v. Com., (Ky. 1894) 25 S. W. Rep. 590; Patterson v. Com., 86 Ky. 313. Thus it has been held that a person convicted of murder is not an incompetent witness in this state. Combs v. Com., (Ky. 1894) 25 S. W. Rep. 590. See also Com. v. Minor, 89 Ky. 555.

In Arkansas a statute containing a somewhat similar enumeration exists, and is applicable in civil cases. Werner v. State, 44 Ark. 122.

In Pennsylvania the common-law rule is abolished except as to perjury and subornation of perjury, so that a convicted murderer is competent. Com. v. Clemmer, 190 Pa. St. 202. See also Com. v. Barry, 8 Pa. Co. Ct. 216.

The Kansas statute removes the disability for infamy of witnesses in civil cases, but not in criminal cases. State v. Clark, 60 Kan. 450.

So in Arkansas the statute which modifies the common-law rule as to disqualification for infamy applies only in civil cases. Werner v. State, 44 Ark. 122; Warner v. State, 25 Ark. 447.

In Virginia under statutes in force in 1845, while the general doctrine of incompetency for infamy obtained, yet when a convict from the penitentiary was on trial for felony, another convict therein confined for felony was competent for the prosecution. Johnson v. Com., 2 Gratt. (Va.) 581.

III. As DISQUALIFICATION OF JUROR. — Infamy may, at common law, exclude from the jury service.¹

IV. As AFFECTING RIGHT TO HOLD OFFICE. — Under the constitution of Pennsylvania, providing that officers "shall be removed on conviction of misbehavior in office or of any infamous crime," it has been held that the offense of bribing a voter by a sheriff previously to his election to that office is not an infamous crime within the meaning of the constitution.²

V. As AFFECTING RIGHT OF SUFFRAGE. — The question as to the effect of the commission of infamous crime under the various state constitutions, upon the right of suffrage, has been discussed in another portion of this work.³

VI. As GROUND FOR DIVORCE. — Under statute in some states, the conviction of an infamous crime is a ground for divorce.⁴

VII. As AFFECTING CRIMINAL PROCEDURE UNDER FEDERAL CONSTITUTION. — Under the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, providing that no person shall be held to answer for a capital or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a grand jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the militia when in actual service in time of war or public danger, the proposition was at one time laid down that no crime is infamous within the meaning of this amendment that has not been so declared by Congress.⁵ But in the later decisions this doctrine has been overturned, and it has been held that a crime which is punishable by imprisonment in the state prison or penitentiary is an infamous crime, whether the accused is or is not sentenced or put to hard labor, and that, in determining whether the crime is infamous, the question is whether it is one for which the statute authorizes the court to award an infamous punishment, and not whether the punishment ultimately awarded is an infamous one.⁶

Effect of Statute Permitting Defendant to Testify in His Own Behalf. — Under Gen. Stat. S. Car., § 2643, providing that in the trial of all criminal cases the defendant shall be allowed to testify (if he chooses to do so, and not otherwise) as to the facts and circumstances of the case, it has been held that a defendant who is infamous in character cannot make himself a general witness against his codefendants by simply exercising the right to be sworn in his own behalf. State v. Peterson, 35 S. Car. 279.

It has been held that if a defendant has lost the privilege of testifying in courts of justice, by the commission of an infamous crime, this will attach to him and prevent him from testifying in his own behalf, notwithstanding the Act of March 16, 1878 (20 Stat. at Large 30) providing that a defendant charged with crime shall at his own request, but not otherwise, be a competent witness. U. S. v. Hollis, 43 Fed. Rep. 248. But compare Ransom v. State, 49 Ark. 176; Morgan v. State, 86 Tenn. 472.

Whether Other than Infamous Crimes Affect Credibility. — In Illinois it has been held under statute that the convictions which may be proved to discredit a witness are those only which, at common law, were infamous and might have been shown to disable and exclude him. Bartholomew v. People, 104 Ill. 601, 44 Am. Rep. 97; Burke v. Stewart, 81 Ill. App. 506; Lamkin v. Burnett, 7 Ill. App. 143. So also in Missouri, and the case is the same when the defendant in a criminal case is testifying for himself. State v. Smith, 125 Mo. 2; State v. Donnelly, 130 Mo. 642; State v. Dyer, 139 Mo. 212.

But in Minnesota a different rule has been laid down under statute. State v. Sauer, 42 Minn. 261.

Stealing from the Mails. — Under this rule, it has been held that the offense of stealing from the mails was not an infamous crime. U. S. v. Wynn, 9 Fed. Rep. 886; U. S. v. Baugh, 1 Fed. Rep. 784.

Omitting Assets from Inventory of Bankrupt. — It has been held that the offense under the United States statute, of wilfully and fraudulently omitting assets of a bankrupt from the inventory of his effects, is not an infamous crime, although the punishment prescribed was "imprisonment with or without hard labor for not more than three years." U. S. v. Block, 4 Sawy. (U. S.) 211.

Under this rule, the uttering or passing a counterfeit interest-bearing coupon bond of the United States,¹ or counterfeit coin,² or embezzlement and making false entries as president of a national bank,³ or conspiracy to commit an offense against the United States, or to defraud the United States,⁴ or an attempt to defraud the United States by means of false pension vouchers,⁵ or an unlawful and fraudulent voting at an election,⁶ has been held to be an infamous crime not to be prosecuted except upon accusation by a grand jury.

In Massachusetts a similar decision has been made under the declaration of rights in that state. Jones v. Robbins, 8 Gray (Mass.) 329.

In Texas the same rule prevails. See Pitner v. State, 23 Tex. App. 366.

Under the constitution of Rhode Island it has been held that it is not necessary that every offense punishable by imprisonment should be prosecuted by indictment. State v. Nolan, 15 R. I. 529. See also State v. Bixler, 62 Md. 359.

I. DEFINITION. — The term "infant" in its legal signification embraces any person who has not yet arrived at the age prescribed by law as full age.¹

In English Probate Practice the term is used to denote a person under the age of seven years, as opposed to a minor who is a person between the ages of seven and twenty-one years.²

II. COMMENCEMENT AND DURATION OF INFANCY — 1. Infants en Ventre Sa Mere — a. CAPACITY TO TAKE PROPERTY — Considered in Being for Purposes of Property. — In some early English cases it was held that a child en ventre sa mere was not to be regarded as in esse for the purpose of taking by descent; ¹ but it is now the well-settled doctrine both in England and in the United States that an unborn infant is to be regarded as in being from the time of conception, for the purpose of taking any estate which is for its benefit. ² Thus a child en ventre sa mere is held to be included in a bequest or devise to "children," ³ or to "grandchildren," ⁴ or to persons "living at the death." ⁵ Such child can take an estate in remainder in the same manner as if born in the lifetime of the testator, ⁶ and is entitled to share under the statute of distributions. ⁷

Deemed in Being from Time of Conception. — The distinction between a woman's being pregnant and being quick with child is applicable mainly, if not exclusively, to criminal cases, and does not apply to cases of descents, devises, and

In Thellusson v. Woodford, 4 Ves. Jr. 322, Mr. Justice Buller said: "He [an unborn child] may be vouched in a recovery, though it is for the purpose of making him answer over in value. He may be an executor. He may take under the statute of distributions. He may take by devise. He may be entitled under a charge for raising portions. He may have an injunction; and he may have a guardian."

In Pearce v. Carrington, L. R. 8 Ch. 969, a testator gave property to his married daughter for life, and if she had no children at the expiration of five years from the death of his wife, then over to certain persons named, as if the daughter had died without heirs. Her first child was born five years and six months after the testator's widow's death. It was held that as the daughter had a child en ventre sa mere within the five years, the gift over had not taken effect.

Child Having No Legitimate Existence. — Under a devise whereunder the children and remoter issue, living at the father's death, of a son of the testator took as joint tenants, it was held that where one of the son's daughters, who was unmarried at his death, married ten days afterwards and had a child born six months after her marriage, such child, though born within the period of gestation after the son's death, could have had no legitimate existence then, and consequently was not entitled to share under the will. In re Corlass, 1 Ch. other gifts.¹ In the latter cases the child is considered in esse from the time of its conception.²

Fiction for Benefit of Child Only. — The fiction is for the interest of the unborn child, and applies only where it will enable the child to take a benefit which, if born, he would be entitled to.³

Existence Inchoate and Conditional. — The existence of a child en ventre sa mère is inchoate and conditional, and confers no right of property unless the infant be born alive after such a period of foetal existence that its continuance in life may reasonably be expected;⁴ and if it is born dead, or in such an early stage of pregnancy as to be incapable of living, it is to be considered as if it had never been born or conceived.⁵ Consequently a person claiming property through such a child is bound to establish the fact that it was born alive.⁶

Interest Not Divested by Judicial Sale Before Birth. — The interest of an unborn child in real estate will not be divested by a decree and judicial sale made before its birth;⁷ and he may recover such interest from the other heirs or devisees, or from purchasers at the judicial sale.⁸ But the profits of the estate

Presumption as to Capability of Living. — Children born within the first six months after conception are presumed to be incapable of living, and therefore cannot take and transmit property by descent, unless they actually survive long enough to rebut the presumption. Marsellis v. Thalhimer, 2 Paige (N. Y.) 35, 21 Am. Dec. 66.

Beck, Medical Jurisprudence, vol. 1, p. 407 (12th ed.) says: "As a general rule it seems now to be generally conceded that no infant can be born viable, or capable of living, until one hundred and fifty days, five months, after conception. There are, however, cases mentioned to the contrary. * * * We may * * * conclude that between five and seven months there have been instances of infants living, though most rare; and even at seven, the chance of surviving six hours after birth is much against the child." And see Chitty Med. Jur. 406.

Child Delivered by Cæsarean Operation. — Where the mother dies before the birth of the child, and the latter is delivered by the Cæsarean operation, it is considered in existence before its birth, for its own benefit to take the estate of the mother by descent, but not for the benefit of the father to enable him to hold as tenant by the curtesy. Marsellis v. Thalhimer, 2 Paige (N. Y.) 35, 21 Am. Dec. 66. See also Matter of Winne, 1 Lans. (N. Y.) 508.

Title Not Divested by Bill of Revivor. — Where land in which a child en ventre sa mère is interested is judicially sold before its birth, a bill of revivor cannot subsequently be filed against such child so as to divest its title. McConnell v. Smith, 23 Ill. 611.

8. May Recover Interest in Lands Sold. — Haskins v. Spiller, 1 Dana (Ky.) 170; Massie v. Hiatt, 82 Ky. 314.

As to contribution for pretermitted children see the title WILLS.

Estate Devolves in Its Then Condition. — Where the interest of children then born, or the enjoyment of the dower right of the widow, requires the conversion of real estate into a personal fund, a child en ventre sa mère does not, until born, possess any estate therein which can affect the power of the court to pass a decree directing such conversion. Whatever estate devolves on such a child at its birth is an estate in the property in its then condition. Knotts v. Stearns, 91 U. S. 638.

In Michigan the rights of posthumous children in their father's estate vest immediately, subject to the contingencies of administration. Supreme Council, etc. v. Finnane, 50 Mich. 82.

Statutory Provisions for Posthumous Children. — In some states it is provided by statute that a child en ventre sa mere not mentioned in its parent's will shall take the share in the estate to which it would have been entitled if the parent had died intestate.² And statutes providing in some way for pretermitted posthumous children exist in a majority of the states.³

b. RIGHTS OF ACTION—(1) For Death of Parent by Wrongful Act. — It has been held that, under a statute giving a right of action for death by wrongful act to the children of the deceased, a child en ventre sa mere at the time of the death may, after its birth, maintain such action.⁴

(2) Under Civil Damage Act. — And so a civil damage act, giving a right of action to children injured in their means of support in consequence of the intoxication of any person, has been held to apply to a posthumous child of a man killed by reason of intoxication.⁵

(3) For Personal Injuries Before Birth. — In the few cases in which the question has been considered the courts have invariably held that the common law gives no right of action to an infant for injuries sustained by it while en ventre sa mere.⁶ However, the reasoning in support of these decisions is not eminently convincing, and the dissenting opinions in the most recent case on

New Jersey. — A posthumous child not provided for by settlement, nor disinherited by the will of his father is entitled under N. J. Rev. Stat., p. 1246, § 19, to a contribution from the other children of the testator of such portions of their estate derived under the will as will make the share of such child equal to what it would have been had his father died intestate; but the will should not otherwise be disturbed. Wilson v. Fritts, 32 N. J. Eq. 59.

Maryland. — The Maryland Code, art. 93, § 134, allows posthumous children of an intestate to take as other children, but declares that no other posthumous relation shall be considered as entitled to distribution in his or her own right. Therefore, one born after his father's death, but before his aunt's, is not a posthumous relation to his aunt. Shriver v. State, 65 Md. 278.

ages under the statute, though its right to maintain the action was not questioned. See also the title DEATH BY WRONGFUL ACT, vol. 8, p. 897.

6. No Right of Action for Pre-natal Injuries. — Allaire v. St. Luke's Hospital, 76 Ill. App. 441, affirmed 184 Ill. 359; Dietrich v. Northampton, 138 Mass. 14, 52 Am. Rep. 242; Walker v. Great Northern R. Co., 28 L. R. Ir. 69, 26 Am. L. Rev. 50.

In Allaire v. St. Luke's Hospital, 76 Ill. App. 441, affirmed 184 Ill. 359, Adams, P. J., said: "That a child before birth is, in fact, a part of the mother, and is only severed from her at birth, cannot, we think, be successfully disputed. The doctrine of the civil law and the ecclesiastical and admiralty courts, therefore, that an unborn child may be regarded as in esse for some purposes when for its benefit, is a mere legal fiction, which, so far as we have been able to discover, has not been indulged in by the courts of common law to the extent of allowing an action by an infant for injuries occasioned before its birth. If the action can be maintained, it necessarily follows that an infant may maintain an action against its own mother for injuries occasioned by the negligence of the mother while pregnant with it. We are of opinion that the action will not lie."

Injury while Traveling on Railroad. — In Walker v. Great Northern R. Co., 28 L. R. Ir. 69, 26 Am. L. Rev. 50, it was held that an infant was not entitled to recover damages against a railroad company for injuries sustained before birth while the mother was a passenger upon the railroad. The decision was placed upon the ground that the railroad company had contracted only to carry the mother, to whom alone it was liable for any injury resulting from the negligence of its servants. Stress was laid upon the point that the defendant had no notice of the existence of any other person, nor did it receive compensation for an additional passenger. "The car-

2. When Majority Attained — a. IN GENERAL. — By the common law the age of majority is fixed at twenty-one years for both sexes, and, in the absence of any statute to the contrary, every person under that age, whether male or female, is an infant.² And the same limit seems to prevail under the civil law.³

Statutory Changes. — In some states, however, females attain their legal majority at eighteen.⁴ And in others the common-law rule has been otherwise modified by statute.⁵

b. AT WHAT MOMENT INFANT ATTAINS MAJORITY. — Under the principles of the common law a person comes of age on the first moment of the day before the anniversary of his birth, which is fixed by law as the age of majority.⁶

By Statute in Some States, however, he comes of age at the first minute of his proper birthday.⁷

Conflict of Laws. — In case of any conflict of laws arising over the time at which an infant arrives at majority, the law of the place where the contract is made or the act done furnishes the rule of decision.⁸ The fact that in the state of his residence a person is considered of full age will not render him so in a foreign jurisdiction.⁹

3. Legislative Relief from Disabilities of Nonage. — In several states the statutes allow a minor, under certain circumstances, to obtain a decree of court rendering him of age for all purposes of property and contract.¹⁰ Thus a minor who rier," said Mr. Justice O'Brien, "saw the person he was going to carry. His duty was to that person. The carrier would be surprised to hear, while he was paid for one, that he was carrying two, or even three, for it might be a case of twins."

Premature Birth Caused by Defect in Highway. — In Dietrich v. Northampton, 138 Mass. 14, 52 Am. Rep. 242, a woman, between four and five months advanced in pregnancy, sustained an injury on a defective highway, by reason of which her child was prematurely born, surviving its birth but a few minutes. It was held that such child was not "a person" for the loss of whose life an action could be maintained against the town by his administrator, under Pub. Stat. Mass., c. 52, § 17.

9. Laws of State in Which Suit Brought Govern. — State v. Bunce, 65 Mo. 349. But see Barra v. Alpuente, 6 Mart. N. S. (La.) 69.

Where a female infant of nine years moved from Ohio (where the age of majority of a female is eighteen) into Indiana (where the age of majority is twenty-one), and at the age of eighteen chose the latter state as her permanent home, it was held that, her domicile being changed from Ohio to Indiana, the time when she reached majority was governed by the laws of Indiana. *Hiestand v. has had his disabilities removed may be appointed an administrator,¹ or become a surety on an appeal bond.² But the decree can have no force outside of the state in which rendered.³

Must Be Capable of Managing Own Affairs. — Such statutes are construed as applying only to such minors as appear affirmatively to be fully capable of managing their own affairs.⁴

III. CAPACITY TO MARRY — 1. Age of Consent — a. AT COMMON LAW. — The common law, following the civil law, has established an age of consent at which infants may contract valid marriages. This age is intended to follow the age of puberty, and is fixed at fourteen for males and twelve for females.⁵

b. IN THE UNITED STATES. — In some of the states the common-law rule fixing the age of consent has been adopted by statute,⁶ but in many others those limits have been raised.⁷

In the Absence of Any Statutory Enactment on the subject the age of consent remains as at the common law.⁸

2. Effect of Marriage Below Age of Consent — a. WHERE INFANT UNDER SEVEN YEARS. — Marriages of infants under seven years of age are regarded as absolutely void.⁹

b. WHERE INFANT OVER SEVEN YEARS. — By the common law and under the statutes of most of the states a marriage contracted by an infant under the age of consent but above seven years of age is not absolutely void, but voidable only.¹⁰ This doctrine has been to some extent modified by Cooper v. Rhodes, 30 La. Ann. 533; 2 Sayles's Stat. Tex., art. 3361a; Brown v. Wheelock, 75 Tex. 385.

Under Laws S. Dak. 1891, c. 39, p. 100, minors are authorized to hold stock in building and loan associations.

Power Exercised in Summary Manner. — The power to remove the disabilities of infants is a special one, and is to be exercised in a summary manner and not according to the course of the common law. Hindman v. O'Connor, 54 Ark. 627.

Decree Open to Collateral Attack. — In affording such relief to minors the chancery court exercises a limited jurisdiction, or special statutory power, which stands on the same footing with the proceedings of courts of limited and inferior jurisdiction; and it is permissible to attack such a decree collaterally by extrinsic proof showing that the recitals of notice or appearance were in fact false. Cox v. Johnson, 80 Ala. 22.

Arkansas — Must Be Resident of County. — In Arkansas an infant seeking relief from his disabilities must be a resident of the county in which the court is held to which the application is made, and the record must show that fact. Hindman v. O'Connor, 54 Ark. 627.

Alabama — Infant Must Sign Petition in Person. — Where the infant has a guardian the petition for the removal of disabilities must be signed by the infant in person and by the guardian; and where it is signed for the infant without his knowledge or consent the decree will be set aside. Cox v. Johnson, 80 Ala. 22.

7. Age of Consent Raised by Statute. — See the codes and statutes of the several states.

Iowa — Statute Cumulative of Common Law. — In Goodwin v. Thompson, 2 Greene (Iowa) 329, it was held that a statute providing that males of the age of eighteen and females of the age of fourteen might be joined in marriage was cumulative merely, and did not abrogate the common law, fixing the age of consent at fourteen and twelve years respectively.

8. In Absence of Statute. — Fisher v. Bernard, 65 Vt. 663, wherein it was held that Acts Vt., 1886, No. 63, fixing the age under which a female was held incapable of consenting to unlawful carnal knowledge at fourteen years, did not alter the common law in regard to the age at which an infant female might contract a valid marriage. statute in the United States,¹ but it is still the general rule that such marriage is not void, and until disaffirmed or annulled is sufficient to support a prosecution for bigamy on the ground of a subsequent marriage.²

Ratification on Reaching Age of Consent. — According to the common law an infant married while under the age of consent can, on reaching that age, ratify the marriage without any further ceremony,³ and ratification will be inferred from continued cohabitation or other circumstances after that age is reached.⁴

Disaffirming on Reaching Age of Consent. — Under the common law an infant married under the age of consent can, on attaining that age, disaffirm and avoid the marriage without any divorce or judicial decree.⁵ But by statute in some of the United States such marriage is valid until avoided by a judicial decree.⁶

3. Effect of Marriage After Age of Consent. — Infants who have arrived at the age of consent can contract a valid marriage which will be binding though entered into without the consent of parents or guardians.⁷

Statutes Forbidding Marriage of Infants. — In many states there are statutes forbidding the issuance of marriage certificates to infants,⁸ or the solemnization of a marriage by a magistrate or clergyman without the consent of parents or

v. People, 37 Mich. 4; State v. Cone, 86 Wis. 498. But see Shaffer v. State, 20 Ohio 1, wherein it was held that a marriage by an infant under the age of consent was void unless confirmed by cohabitation after reaching that age.

Marriage Procured by Fraud or Undue Influence. — Where the marriage with an infant is brought about by fraud or undue influence, it will be set aside. Harford v. Morris, 2 Hag. Cons. 423; Robertson v. Cole, 12 Tex. 356.

In Lyndon v. Lyndon, 69 Ill. 43, the family coachman inveigled an infant female under the age of consent into marriage with him. He procured the license by falsely swearing as to her age, and the girl never cohabited with him, but repudiated the marriage at once. It was held that the marriage was void.

Infant Taken under Protection of Court. — Where a man was married to an infant under twelve years of age, who immediately declared her ignorance of the nature and consequences of the marriage, and her dissent to it, the court, on a bill filed by her next friend, ordered her to be placed under its protection as a ward of the court, and forbade all intercourse or correspondence with her by the defendant under pain of contempt. Aymar v. Roff, 3 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 49. And see Eyre v. Shaftsbury, 2 P. Wms. 111.

1. Statutes in United States. — In a few states marriages contracted while either party is below the age of consent are declared void by statute. In other states such marriages are declared voidable, and may be annulled on petition or suit from the date of the decree. There are other provisions in other jurisdictions. See the statutes of the several states.

Action to Annul — Alimony Not Granted. — Where an action is brought by a parent under Code Civ. Pro. N. Y., § 1744, to annul the marriage of her infant son who is under the age of consent, alimony cannot be awarded against the plaintiff. Stivers v. Wise, 18 N. Y. App. Div. 316.

4. Ratification Inferred from Continued Cohabitation. — Koonce v. Wallace, 7 Jones L. (52 N. Car.) 194.

5. Infant May Disaffirm on Reaching Age of Consent. — Beggs v. State, 55 Ala. 108; Goodwin v. Thompson, 2 Greene (Iowa) 329; People v. Bennett, 39 Mich. 208; Governor v. Rector, 10 Humph. (Tenn.) 57; Pool v. Pratt, 1 D. Chip. (Vt.) 252.

Where One Party Above Age of Consent. — Under Mich. Comp. L., § 3223, providing that, "in case of a marriage solemnized when either of the parties was under the age of legal consent, if they shall separate during such nonage and not cohabit together afterwards, * * * the marriage shall be deemed void without any decree of divorce or other legal process," it was held that where only one of the parties was under the age of consent the marriage could not be avoided by the one above that age without the consent of the other, or unless the latter repudiated the marriage on reaching the age of consent. People v. Slack, 15 Mich. 193.

6. Judicial Decree Necessary. — Walls v. State, 32 Ark. 565; State v. Cone, 86 Wis. 498.

7. Marriage Without Consent of Parent or Guardian Valid. — Hunter v. Milam, (Cal. 1895) 41 Pac. Rep. 332; Parton v. Hervey, 1 Gray (Mass.) 119; *Fitzpatrick v. guardians, where there is reason to suppose that either party is a minor;¹ but the violation of such a provision will not invalidate the marriage, although the officer or clergyman may thereby incur a penalty, such statutes being deemed directory only.²

4. Liability for Breach of Promise. — Although the law holds an executed contract of marriage binding on an infant, the same does not hold true of executory contracts of marriage, which stand upon the same footing as other executory contracts. While, if the other party to the promise be an adult, it is binding on him, yet the infant can avoid the promise without incurring any liability.³

IV. CAPACITY TO DISPOSE OF PROPERTY BY WILL — 1. At Common Law — Personal Property. — Under the common law males of fourteen and females of twelve years are capable of disposing of personalty by will.⁴

Real Property. — But real property cannot be devised by a person under twenty-one years of age.⁵

2. Under Statutes — Personal Property. — By statute in England no person under twenty-one years of age can now make a valid disposition of personalty by will;⁶ and the rule is the same in some of the United States.⁷ But in a great many states the statutes fix other age limits, their provisions varying quite widely.⁸ Under a statute allowing a minor to dispose of personalty, but not realty, by will, a legacy by such minor cannot, in case of insufficiency of the personalty, be charged on the realty.⁹

Real Property. — The rule of the common law that no valid devise of realty could be made by a person under twenty-one years of age still obtains in England,¹⁰ and in some of the United States.¹¹ But in a considerable number

1. Statutes Forbidding Marriage of Infants. — See Stim. Am. Stat., § 6134, and the local statutes.

2. Violation of Statute Will Not Invalidate Marriage. — Hunter v. Milam, (Cal. 1895) 41 Pac. Rep. 332; Parton v. Hervey, 1 Gray (Mass.) 119. See also Milford v. Worcester, 7 Mass. 48; Londonderry v. Chester, 2 N. H. 268, 9 Am. Dec. 61.

3. Not Liable for Breach of Promise. — Morris v. Graves, 2 Ind. 354; Feibel v. Obersky, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 13 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 403, note. And see the title BREACH OF PROMISE OF MARRIAGE, vol. 4, p. 883.

Ratification After Coming of Age. — Such promise may be ratified by the infant after he is of age, and the jury may determine whether language used by him amounts to ratification or a fresh promise. Northcote v. Doughty, 4 C. P. D. 385; Coxhead v. Mullis, 3 C. P. D. 439.

Cannot Be Avoided by Act of Guardian. — A promise of marriage made by an infant under the age of consent can be avoided by the act of the infant only, and not by the act of the infant's guardian. Parks v. Maybee, 2 U. C. C. P. 257.

4. Capacity to Bequeath Personalty at Common Law. — Co. Litt. 89b; Hyde v. Hyde, Prec. Ch. 316; Bishop v. Sharp, 2 Vern. 469; Arnold v. Earle, 2 Lee Ecc. 529; Whitmore v. Weld, 2 Ch. Rep. 383; Davis v. Baugh, 1 Sneed (Tenn.) 477. See also Hinckley v. Simmons, 4 Ves. Jr. 160.

Origin of Rule. — The rule as to the capacity of infants to dispose of personal property by will is derived originally from the civil law, and was adopted by the English ecclesiastical courts having jurisdiction of the subject of wills and intestates' estates. Davis v. Baugh, 1 Sneed (Tenn.) 477.

5. Cannot Devise Realty at Common Law. — 4 Kent's Com. 505; 1 Jarman on Wills 34.

6. England. — By the statute 1 Vict., c. 26, § 7, it is provided that no will made by any person under the age of twenty-one shall be valid, thus abolishing the distinction between personalty and realty in that respect.

7. In What States Minors Cannot Make Will. — Twenty-one is the age prescribed without any exception in a number of states.

8. Statutes in United States. — Thus in Georgia every person over fourteen may bequeath personalty. O'Byrne v. Feeley, 61 Ga. 77.

Exceptions in Favor of Married Infants. — In Texas every married person of whatsoever age, and in no other case. Moore v. Moore, 23 Tex. 637. Similar exceptions exist in other states. See the various statutes.

9. Legacy Not Chargeable on Realty. — Banks v. Sherrod, 52 Ala. 207.

Where Minor's Interest in Land Regarded as Personalty. — Under Code Ala. 1886, § 1951, providing that "all persons over the age of eighteen years by their last will may dispose of their personal property," it was held that where a testator devised real estate to his wife for life, directing the same to be sold at her death and the proceeds to be divided among his children, the interests of the children would be treated as personalty, and could be disposed of by will during the lifetime of the mother by a minor over eighteen years of age. Allen v. Watts, 98 Ala. 384.

10. England. — 1 Vict., c. 26, § 7.

11. United States. — Banks v. Sherrod, 52 Ala. 207; Wells v. Seeley, 47 Hun (N. Y.) 109; Stim. Am. Stat., § 2606.

of the states the common-law rule has been altered or modified to some extent by statute.¹

V. CAPACITY TO HOLD OFFICE — 1. In General. — Offices where judgment, discretion, and experience are essentially necessary to the proper discharge of the duties they impose, or offices of pecuniary and public responsibility, cannot be held by infants.² Thus it has been held that a minor cannot hold a judicial office, such as that of justice of the peace;³ nor can he hold the office of constable;⁴ nor serve as a juror.⁵

Offices Purely Ministerial. — In the absence of any statute to the contrary, a minor is eligible to hold an office which is purely ministerial in its nature, calling for the exercise of skill and diligence only, and not concerning the administration of justice.⁶ Thus a minor may properly hold the office of notary public.⁷

2. Capacity to Serve Process. — Since an infant cannot hold such offices as those of sheriff or constable, it follows that he is not capable of making a valid service of process on his own responsibility.⁸ Consequently the magistrate signing a mesne process cannot depute a minor to serve it.⁹ In some states, however, minors above a specified age are authorized by statute to serve process.¹⁰

May Serve as Deputy Sheriff or Constable. — In the absence of any statutory provision in that regard, a deputy sheriff is not an "officer," but is rather an agent of the sheriff under whose direction he is presumed to act and who is responsible for his conduct in that relation; and therefore a sheriff may appoint a minor as his deputy to execute process.¹¹ And for the same reason

1. Statutes in United States. — See the several statutes.

In Georgia every person over fourteen may devise realty. O'Byrne v. Feeley, 61 Ga. 77.

In Iowa and Texas, every married person of whatever age; and in the latter state, only in that case. Moore v. Moore, 23 Tex. 637.

2. Cannot Hold Office Requiring Judgment and Discretion. — Golding's Petition, 57 N. H. 146, 24 Am. Rep. 66.

In New York, by statute, no person can hold a civil office who at the time of his election or appointment is less than twenty-one years old. Green v. Burke, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 490; People v. Dean, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 438. But it is not the province of the officer to whom he makes application to have the oath of office administered, to refuse to administer the oath on account of the applicant's infancy. It is the duty of such officer, on the production of the commission, to administer the oath. People v. Dean, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 438.

Clerk of Court of Requests. — An infant cannot be appointed to the office of clerk of a Court of Requests, where it is a part of the duties of that office to receive the money of the suitors. Claridge v. Evelyn, 5 B. & Ald. 81, 7 E. C. L. 32.

3. Cannot Be Justice of the Peace. — Golding's Petition, 57 N. H. 146, 24 Am. Rep. 66.

4. Cannot Be Constable. — McConnell v. Kennedy, 29 S. Car. 180; Green v. Burke, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 490, wherein it was held that a minor executing process as a constable was a trespasser.

5. Minor Not Competent to Serve as Juror. — Hines v. State, 8 Humph. (Tenn.) 598.

Not Ground for Setting Aside Verdict. — Under Mass. Gen. Stat., c. 132, § 1, and c. 6, § 1, a minor is not qualified to serve on a jury. But where a minor was impaneled and sat as a juror it was held that the verdict would not be set aside on that account, although the losing party did not learn of the infancy of the juror until after the verdict. Wassum v. Feeney, 121 Mass. 93, 23 Am. Rep. 258. To same effect see Givens v. State, (Tenn. 1899) 55 S. W. Rep. 1107.

6. May Hold Ministerial Office. — U. S. v. Bixby, 9 Fed. Rep. 78.

Deputy County Clerk. — In Texas there is no statute prohibiting a minor from serving as a deputy county clerk, and such deputy clerk, though a minor, may administer an oath to an applicant for a marriage license. Harkreader v. State, 35 Tex. Crim. 243.

Clerk of Militia Company. — In Massachusetts an infant over eighteen may act as clerk of a militia company. Dewey, Petitioner, 11 Pick. (Mass.) 265.

May Act as Agent. — An infant may be an agent, and his acts will bind his principal. See the article AGENCY, vol. 1, p. 945.

7. May Be Notary Public. — U. S. v. Bixby, 9 Fed. Rep. 78.

8. Cannot Serve Process on Own Responsibility. — Tyler v. Tyler, 2 Root (Conn.) 519; Cuckson v. Winter, 2 M. & R. 313, 17 E. C. L. 306.

9. Magistrate Cannot Deputize Infant. — Harvey v. Hall, 22 Vt. 211; Vail v. Rowell, 53 Vt. 109.

10. California — Eighteen Years of Age. — Under Code Civ. Pro. Cal., § 410, "any * * * person over the age of eighteen, not a party to the action," may serve process. Williamson v. Cummings Rock Drill Co., 95 Cal. 652; Barnes v. Vigoureaux, 75 Cal. 376; Lyons v. Cunningham, 66 Cal. 42; Doerfler v. Schmidt, 64 Cal. 265; Howard v. Galloway, 60 Cal. 10.

11. May Serve as Deputy Sheriff. — Moore v. Graves, 3 N. H. 408; Jamesville, etc., R. Co. v. Fisher, 109 N. Car. 1; State v. Toland, 36 S. Car. 515; Barrett v. Seward, 22 Vt. 176.

an infant may serve as a deputy constable in executing process.¹

3. Capacity to Act as Executor or Administrator — Executor. — At common law infancy did not disqualify a person for the office of executor. By statute, however, an infant is disqualified from acting during his minority, and administration with the will annexed is to be granted if the infant was sole executor. But if he is one of several executors, they who are of sufficient age may execute the will.²

Administrator. — An infant is incompetent to act as administrator.³

4. Capacity to Act as Trustee. — A court will never appoint an infant as trustee, and if he is named as such in any instrument, some one, generally his guardian, will be appointed to act in his stead.⁴

VI. CAPACITY TO TESTIFY AS WITNESSES — 1. Presumption as to Competency — At Common Law. — Under the principles of the common law there is a presumption that every person over the age of fourteen years has common discretion and understanding until the contrary is shown,⁵ and a witness over that age will not be examined respecting his capacity, unless some reason creating suspicion is made to appear.⁶ But under the age of fourteen there is no presumption of competency.⁷

Under Statutes. — In some states there are statutory provisions changing the age limit fixed by the common law.⁸

2. Examination as to Infant's Competency. — There being no presumption that an infant under the age of fourteen years — or in some states, by statute, under ten — is competent to testify, it is the duty of the court, when such a witness is offered, to examine him and ascertain whether he has sufficient intelligence and understanding of the nature and obligation of an oath to be a competent witness;⁹ and the court should carry such investigation far enough to make the infant's competency apparent.¹⁰

In Indiana an infant may be deputed to serve a particular writ, but cannot act as a general deputy. New Albany, etc., R. Co. v. Grooms, 9 Ind. 243.

1. May Serve as Deputy Constable. — McConnell v. Kennedy, 29 S. Car. 180, wherein it was held that an arrest made by a special deputed minor was lawful.

After Removal of Disabilities. — Where a minor has been emancipated from the disabilities of nonage, under a statute allowing such a course, he may be appointed an administrator. Lyne's Succession, 12 La. Ann. 155; Gaines's Succession, 42 La. Ann. 699.

Party May Require Examination. — The party against whom a witness of tender years is called to testify, may require that he be examined as to his understanding of the nature and obligations of an oath. People v. McNair, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 608.

10. Insufficient Examination. — An examination for the purpose of testing the competency of a child of tender years to testify as a witness, which develops nothing except that he does not know his age, but does know his Examination Should Be in Open Court. — The examination is part of the trial and should be made publicly in open court by the judge.¹

One Examination Sufficient. — The examination is only for the purpose of satisfying the judge as to the child's competency,² and after the witness has been pronounced competent by the judge he cannot again be examined before the jury in that regard.³

Examination After Witness Has Testified. — It has been held that the examination need not be made before the witness is sworn, and that, if the necessary information is elicited after he has testified in the case, it is sufficient.⁴

3. Tests of Competency — No Age Limit Fixed by Law. — The ancient rule of the common law seems to have been that no infant should be sworn who was under nine years of age.⁵ But in modern times the law fixes no precise age at which infants are deemed too young to testify.⁶

Intelligence the Proper Test. — Intelligence and not age is the proper test by which the competency of such witnesses must be determined; and where it appears that an infant has sufficient intelligence to receive just impressions of the facts respecting which he is to testify, and sufficient capacity to relate them correctly, and has received sufficient instruction to appreciate the nature and obligations of an oath, he should be admitted to testify, no matter what his age.⁷ And this is so even where there is a statute making infants not father's name and the number and names of the days of the week, and can count to thirty-two, is not sufficiently comprehensive to authorize a conclusion that such child understands the nature of an oath. Gaines v. State, 99 Ga. 703.

In Murphy v. State, 36 Tex. Crim. 24, where the preliminary examination of a child of ten years showed only that he partially understood the nature of an oath, but was ignorant regarding the punishment of perjury by the courts, it was held that such investigation was incomplete, and should have been pushed further, so that it might appear whether or not the infant had sufficient intelligence to understand the obligations of the oath.

1. Examination Should Be in Open Court. — State v. Morea, 2 Ala. 275; Simpson v. State, 31 Ind. 90; People v. McNair, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 608. But see McGuire v. People, 44 Mich. 286, 38 Am. Rep. 265.

The court should act on its own judgment, upon a public examination when the defendant is present, and it is improper to rely on the result of a private examination conducted by gentlemen appointed by the court to make such an examination. *Simpson v. punishable for perjury.¹ Mere ignorance of the punishment prescribed by law for false swearing will not disqualify a witness, if he shows that he is intelligent, comprehends the obligation to speak the truth, and believes that any deviation therefrom will be followed by appropriate punishment of some kind.² But if it appears that an infant offered as a witness is not possessed of sufficient intelligence to understand the meaning of the oath or to narrate facts accurately, the court should exclude him.³

Necessity for Sense of Moral Responsibility. — A child may be intelligent enough to relate facts correctly, and yet not be sufficiently intelligent to understand the nature of an oath;⁴ and therefore some courts lay particular stress on the point that the admissibility of such a witness depends not only upon his possessing a competent amount of understanding, but also, in part, upon his having received such a degree of religious instruction as will enable him to comprehend the moral obligations imposed upon him by the oath.⁵ But in

Examples of Infants Held to Be Competent. — In Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Johnson, (Tex. Civ. App. 1896) 37 S. W. Rep. 771, a child of ten who stated that it was wrong to tell a story, and that if he did the old buggerman would get him and burn him, was held to be competent.

In State v. Scanlan, 58 Mo. 204, a child of nine who stated that she was the daughter of the defendant, that she knew her prayers, could read some, believed in God, and thought it wrong to tell lies, was held to be competent.

In Minton v. State, 99 Ga. 254, a child of eight who stated that he did not know what an oath was, but also said he knew what it was "to go up in the court-house and swear you have to tell the truth," that the law would punish him if he told a story, and that he was bound to tell the truth when sworn, was held to be competent.

In Parker v. State, 33 Tex. Crim. 111, a boy of twelve who stated that "it was wrong to tell a lie," and that if he told a lie he would be punished, was held competent.

Infant Held Incompetent on Former Trial. — The fact that an infant was too young to be sworn on a former trial will not prevent it from being competent on a new trial of the same case. Kelly v. State, 75 Ala. 21, 51 Am. Rep. 422.

Application Involving Custody of Infant. — Upon an application involving the question of the custody of a boy of thirteen, the boy himself is a competent witness, and his wishes ought to be consulted in the matter. Spears v. Snell, 74 N. Car. 210.

In Davidson v. State, 39 Tex. 129, a child of ten years who stated that she "did not know what God or the laws of the country would do to her if she swore falsely, but that she would tell the truth," was allowed to testify.

3. Infants Incompetent from Lack of Intelligence. — Williams v. State, 12 Tex. App. 127; Smith v. State, 41 Tex. 352.

In Donnelley v. Territory, (Ariz. 1898) 52 Pac. Rep. 368, where a child six years and eleven months of age revealed on his examination practically no knowledge of the nature of an oath or the consequences of falsehood, except that he answered that people that told a lie would go to jail; and it appeared that he was under the instructions of his mother, whose evidence he strongly corroborated; it was held that the child was incompetent.

Dying Declaration of Incompetent Infant. — In Rex v. Pike, 3 C. & P. 598, 14 E. C. L. 473, the dying declaration of a child four years of age was held inadmissible because of the youth of the declarant.

4. Ignorance of Nature of Oath. — Holst v. State, 23 Tex. App. 1, 59 Am. Rep. 770.

5. Must Have Sense of Moral Responsibility. — Beason v. State, 72 Ala. 191; Carter v. State, 63 Ala. 52, 35 Am. Rep. 4; State v. Washington, 49 La. Ann. 1602; State v. Edwards, 79 N. Car. 648; State v. Belton, 24 S. Car. 185, 58 Am. Rep. 245; State v. Michael, 37 W. Va. 565.

Examples of Incompetent Infants. — In Beason v. State, 72 Ala. 191, a child eleven years old who said she had never heard of God, heaven, or hell, and did not know that she would be punished if she swore falsely, otherwise than by being put in jail, was held to be incompetent. See also Carter v. State, 63 Ala. 52, 35 Am. Rep. 4.

In State v. Belton, 24 S. Car. 185, 58 Am. Rep. 245, a boy of twelve who could repeat the Lord's prayer, but had never heard of a God, or of a heaven, or of a hell, or of a devil, and who had heard that the bad man caught those who lied and cursed, etc., was held incompetent. (McGowan, J., dissenting.)

In State v. Michael, 37 W. Va. 565, a child of five, who to the question asked her by the judge, "Is it bad to tell stories?" answered, "Yes, ma'am;" to the question, "What becomes of little girls that tell stories?" answered, "The bad man gets them;" and to the question, "What does the court do with them?" answered, "Puts them in jail;" and who, when asked on the witness stand if her some cases infants have been admitted to testify where they showed themselves able to give intelligent answers, although ignorant of God and the Bible.¹

Where Belief in Divine Punishment Not Essential. — Where, by statute, no belief in divine rewards and punishments is essential to the competency of a witness, a child who understands that he is brought into court to tell the truth, that it is wrongful to testify falsely, and that he will be punished if he does so, is competent.²

Allowance Made for Nervous Agitation. — In arriving at an opinion concerning the competency of an infant witness, the court may properly make allowance for the embarrassment and nervous agitation of a child placed among unfamiliar surroundings.³

4. Instructing Witness as to Nature of Oath. — Where it appears to the presiding judge that the witness does not sufficiently understand the nature and obligations of an oath, it is within his discretion to permit the child to be properly instructed in that respect and afterward to be sworn, provided such child be of sufficient age and intellect to receive instruction.⁴ But where the infant is too young to receive instruction intelligently, or to comprehend properly the meaning and consequences of the oath, such instruction will not render it competent to testify.⁵

5. Competency a Matter for Discretion of Court. — Whether an infant of tender years has sufficient mental capacity and sense of moral obligation to be competent as a witness, is a question for the discretion of the trial judge,⁶ and mother had ever taught her anything about God or Christ, answered "No," and said that she knew nothing about God, "except that he makes babies and throws them down to the doctors," was held not competent.

1. Infants Competent though Ignorant of God and the Bible. — In White v. Com., 96 Ky. 180, an infant under twelve who has sufficient intelligence to narrate truthfully the facts to which his attention is directed is competent although wholly ignorant of God and of the evil of giving false testimony.

In Com. v. Carey, 2 Brews. (Pa.) 404, a child of eight who said if she did not tell the truth she would "go to the big fires of hell," but did not know what an oath was or what the Bible was, was allowed to testify, after being instructed regarding the nature of an oath.

4. Witness May be Instructed as to Nature of Oath. — Rex v. White, 1 Leach C. C. 430, note a; Com. v. Lynes, 142 Mass. 577, 56 Am. Rep. 709; Com. v. Carey, 2 Brews. (Pa.) 404; Com. v. Territory, (Ariz. 1898) 52 Pac. Rep. 368.

In Com. v. Lynes, 142 Mass. 577, 56 Am. Rep. 709, a child of thirteen, between the time she was first offered as a witness and the next day, when she was sworn, was instructed by a minister as to the nature of an oath, and was told that if after taking the oath she told what was not true God would punish her. It was held that she was not incompetent on that account.

5. Infant Incapable of Receiving Instruction Intelligently. — Reg. v. Nicholas, 2 C. & K. 246, 61 E. C. L. 246; Donnelley v. Territory, (Ariz. 1898) 52 Pac. Rep. 368; State v. Michael, 37 W. Va. 565.

In Rex v. Williams, 7 C. & P. 320, 32 E. C. L. 524, it appeared that at the time of the crime, sixteen weeks before the trial, the infant had never heard of God or of a future state of rewards or punishments, and that she never prayed, and did not know the nature of an oath. She had, before the trial, been twice visited by a clergyman, who instructed her as to the nature of an oath. At the trial she said she would go to hell if she told a lie, and hell was under the kitchen grate. She showed no intelligence as to religion or the future state. Her evidence was rejected, the court saying that "the effect of the oath upon the conscience of the child should arise from religious feelings of a permanent nature, and not merely from instructions, confined to the nature of an oath, recently communicated to her for the purpose of this trial."

his ruling in that regard will not be disturbed except in case of a manifest abuse of discretion or where the witness is admitted or rejected upon an erroneous view of a legal principle.¹ But the trial judge should be cautious in admitting such witnesses,² and where it clearly appears from the record that he has abused his discretion, it will furnish ground for reversal on appeal.³

6. Credibility a Question for Jury. — The amount of credit to be given to the testimony of a witness of tender years is a question for the consideration of the jury, who should regard the age, the understanding, and the sense of accountability for moral conduct, in coming to their conclusion.⁴

7. Receiving Unsworn Testimony of Infants. — In some states it is provided by statute that infants of tender years may be permitted to testify without being sworn.⁵

In the Absence of Statutory Authority, however, an infant cannot under any circumstances be allowed to testify except on oath.⁶

VII. LIABILITY UPON CONTRACTS — 1. In General — Contracts of Infants Distinguished. — The contracts of infants, in respect to their validity, may be divided into three classes: First, those which are absolutely void; second, those which are merely voidable; and third, those which are valid and binding upon the infant.⁷

Ancient Rule. — The rule which distinguishes these classes was formerly laid down as follows: When the contract is necessarily prejudicial to the interest of the infant, it is void; when it is manifestly for his benefit, it is valid; and

New York — Necessity for Corroboration. — Code Crim. Pro. N. Y., § 392, provides that when a child under the age of twelve does not, in the opinion of the court, understand the nature of an oath, its unsworn testimony may be received, "but no person shall be held or convicted of an offense upon such testimony unsupported by other evidence." However, where an infant under twelve testifies on oath, no corroboration is required. People v. O'Brien, 74 Hun (N. Y.) 264.

7. Classification of Contracts. — Robinson v.

when of an uncertain nature as to prejudice or benefit, it is neither void nor binding, but voidable only at his election.¹

Rule Abandoned. — Although this rule has come down to us from a very early period of the common law, it will be found to rest on little real authority, and it is doubtful if the courts have ever felt themselves bound by it in determining the validity of infants' contracts.² But whether this be true or not, it is certain that they have long since abandoned it as unsatisfactory and unsafe in its application, and as often contravening the principle upon which it was founded, namely, the benefit of the infant. It is certainly more conducive to his benefit, to afford him the opportunity of affirming, when of age, a contract which he may determine to be beneficial, than for the court or jury to determine the question for him.³ No court of the present day would hold an infant's contract void simply because it was shown to be to his prejudice, or hold it binding merely because it was manifestly for his benefit. It might be for the benefit of an infant to appoint an attorney or agent to sell his lands, but such an act would be clearly void; but a conveyance by the infant himself of his lands might be to his prejudice, and yet under certain circumstances would be voidable only.⁴

Modern Rule. — The validity of an infant's contract at the present day is to be determined, therefore, by other considerations than its prejudice or benefit to him. There is no general test that can be applied, but the character of every contract which is now held either absolutely void or binding is determined by reasons peculiar to it, though in all, public policy may perhaps be recognized as the dominant factor. These contracts together form only a small part of the obligations which an infant may assume, and can therefore be more conveniently treated as exceptions to the general rule, which is that the contracts of infants are voidable by them.⁵

2. Contracts Which Are Void — a. AT COMMON LAW. — Just what contracts of infants were absolutely void at ancient common law, is a matter which is involved in doubt on account of the loose use of the terms "void" and "voidable" in the books.⁶ Of them, however, none have survived the evolu-

It is a question which depends upon many circumstances, and cannot always be ascertained at the time of the contract." And see Reed v. Batchelder, 1 Met. (Mass.) 559.

6. Confusion of Terms "Void" and "Voidable."

— In many cases the courts seem to have used the terms "void" and "voidable" as interchangeable, and the word "void" has merely denoted that the contract at the time the suit was brought was not binding, the question whether the contract might not be ratified being left undecided. Thus the case of Conroe v. Birdsall, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 127, 1 Am. Dec. 105, is cited as an authority that an infant's bond is void, and the headnote of the case so states the decision; but the language used was that "the bond is voidable only at the election of the infant." And in Curtin v. Patton, 11 S. & R. (Pa.) 305, the court, in speaking of an infant's contract of suretyship, calls it in one place "absolutely void," and yet in the very next line are found the expressions "confirming" and "distinct act of confirmation," showing that the court did not mean to hold the contract incapable of ratification. So also in Thornton v. Illingworth, 2 B. & C. 824, 9 E. C. L. 256, Bayley, J., calls an infant's trading tion of ideas as shown in the abandonment of the old and the adoption of the modern rule, save one, warrant of attorney. The reason why this was left has never been satisfactorily explained, and it stands upon authority purely the sole remaining representative of the class of void contracts.¹

b. UNDER STATUTES. — England — Infants' Relief Act 1874. — By statute in England it is now provided that "all contracts, whether by specialty or by simple contract, entered into by infants for the repayment of money lent or to be lent, or for goods supplied (other than contracts for necessities), and all accounts stated with infants, shall be absolutely void;" and that "no action shall be brought whereby to charge any person upon any promise made after full age to pay any debt contracted during infancy, or upon any ratification made after full age of any promise or contract made during infancy, whether there shall or shall not be any new consideration for such promise or ratification after full age."²

The Effect of This Act is to reduce all voidable contracts which are subsequently ratified to the position of agreements of imperfect obligation, that is, such as cannot be directly enforced, but are valid for all other purposes.³

3. Contracts Which Are Binding — a. CONTRACTS IN DISCHARGE OF LEGAL OBLIGATIONS. — Turning to the other extreme and considering the contracts contract "void," but all that the case decided was that ratification after action brought would not avail, and the case plainly shows that if the ratification had been before suit brought, the infant would have been held. For other cases showing how "void" is often interpreted to mean "voidable," see Van Shaack v. Robbins, 36 Iowa 201; Allis v. Billings, 6 Met. (Mass.) 415, 39 Am. Dec. 744; State v. Richmond, 26 N. H. 232; Pearsoll v. Chapin, 44 Pa. St. 9; Terrill v. Auchauer, 14 Ohio St. 80.

1. See the title AGENCY, vol. 1, p. 940.

Release of Guardian. — A release executed by a minor to his guardian is regarded as void; for the law, considering the character of the relation subsisting between the parties, the state of ignorance in which an infant usually is in relation to the condition of his affairs, and the inducement to a guardian who has abused his trust, to seek shelter behind a release improperly obtained, will not allow him to take advantage of his position to secure an advantage over the ward. Fridge v. State, 3 Gill & J. (Md.) 103 20 Am. Dec. 463.

But a female eighteen years of age may execute a valid release to her former guardian, who has been removed, and his place supplied by another. McClellan v. Kennedy, 8 Md. 230. And see the title GUARDIAN AND WARD, vol. 15, p. 85.

2. 37 & 38 Vict., c. 62.

3. Effect of Infants' Relief Act 1874. — Pollock on Contr. 62.

Application. — The Act has been held to apply to ratifications made, after the passage of the Act, of contracts made before that time. Ex p. Kibble, 44 L. J. Bankr. 63, L. R. 10 Ch. 373, 32 L. T. N. S. 138.

A Promise to Marry is within the act. Coxhead v. Mullis, 3 C. P. D. 439. But see, as to whether a ratification after majority may not be regarded as a new promise, Northcote v. Doughty, 4 C. P. D. 385; Ditcham v. Worrall, 5 C. P. D. 410; Holmes v. Brierley, 36 W. R. 795.

Compromise of Debt. — The defendant, who had during infancy become jointly with the others indebted to a firm, compromised the matter after attaining his majority by giving her two acceptances for fifty pounds each. One of these bills was indorsed to the plaintiff, who took it with notice of the circumstances under which it was given. It was held that the defendant was not liable. Smith v. King, (1892) 2 Q. B. 543.

Acceptance of Bill of Exchange. — But in Belfast Banking Co. v. Doherty, 4 L. R. Ir. 124, it was held that an action may be maintained by an indorsee against the acceptor of a bill of exchange accepted by the latter after attaining his majority for a debt contracted during infancy, and after the passage of the Infants' Relief Act 1874.

For Cases Where the Ratification Was Held Equivalent to a New Contract see Brown v. Harper, 3 Reports 585, 68 L. T. N. S. 488; In re Foulkes, 69 L. T. N. S. 183; Whittingham v. Murdy, 60 L. T. N. S. 956.

By Statute in Connecticut it is provided that "no person under the government of a parent, guardian or master shall be able to make any contract or bargain, which in the law shall be accounted valid." In Alsop v. Todd, 2 Root (Conn.) 105, the court considered the above statute as reviving the common law and rendering absolutely void all contracts made within its prohibitions; but in Rogers v. Hurd, 4 Day (Conn.) 57, 4 Am. Dec. 182, where the construction of the statute came a second time under review, the court limited the doctrine before announced by holding void only such contracts by infants as were against their interests, contracts with the semblance of advantage, being merely voidable.

If the infant could derive, in any event, no possible benefit from the contract, it is void. Thus a promissory note executed by an infant as the surety of another is a contract against interest, and has been held void. Maples v. Wightman, 4 Conn. 376, 10 Am. Dec. 149.

Admissions. — As a general rule, infants are not bound by their admissions. Lunday v. Thomas, 26 Ga. 537.

which are binding upon an infant, it may in the first place be laid down as an elementary rule that, if an infant is under a legal obligation to do an act, he may by a fair and reasonable contract bind himself to perform it.¹

Execution of Trust. — Thus, if he takes the legal title to property in trust for another, and in the execution of that trust makes a deed, he cannot afterwards disaffirm or avoid it on the plea of infancy, since the act is merely one that a court of equity would have compelled him to perform.²

Bond for Support of Bastard Child. — So, also, if an infant who is under a legal obligation to indemnify the city, town, or county against the expense of maintaining his bastard child, executes a bond in a bastardy proceeding,³ or contracts with the mother for its support,⁴ such a contract is binding upon him.

Bond for Fine in Criminal Prosecution. — An infant's property is liable to be taken in execution to satisfy a fine and costs imposed upon him in a criminal prosecution, and if in such case the infant gives security for the fine and costs, and the surety pays the same and on motion takes judgment over against the minor, this judgment, though arising out of a civil contract, is valid and binding upon the infant.⁵

b. CONTRACTS FOR MILITARY SERVICE. — The second exception to the general rule is that of contracts for enlistment in the military and naval service. This exception is based upon the terms of an express statute granting authority to enlist in the public service minors of sufficient age and capacity to bear arms. These contracts of enlistment are consequently held binding, from the very necessity of the case, for of what avail would the services of a soldier or sailor be if he might on the plea of infancy desert at will?⁶

1. Contracts in Discharge of Legal Obligations. — People v. Moores, 4 Den. (N. Y.) 519, 47 Am. Dec. 272; Bavington v. Clarke, 2 P. & W. (Pa.) 115, 21 Am. Dec. 432. See also Bradford v. Robinson, 7 Houst. (Del.) 29; Coke Litt. 172a. And see the title BONDS, vol. 4, p. 626. But the doctrine does not apply in the case of a voluntary distribution, for the law, though it would have coerced a distribution, might not have made just such a one as was made by the parties. Kilcrease v. Shelby, 23 Miss. 161.

2. Execution of Trusts. — Zouch v. Parsons, 3 Burr. 1801; Elliott v. Horn, 10 Ala. 348, 44 Am. Dec. 488; Nordholt v. Nordholt, 87 Cal. 552, 22 Am. St. Rep. 268; Prouty v. Edgar, 6 Iowa 353; Bridges v. Bidwell, 20 Neb. 185; Starr v. Wright, 20 Ohio St. 97. See also Sheldon v. Newton, 3 Ohio St. 494; Diffin v. Simpson, 5 N. Bruns. 194.

A father who entered land in the name of his son, for the purpose of defrauding his creditors, afterwards sold the land, and by his direction the son conveyed during infancy to the purchaser. On his coming of age, he conveyed the same land to another, who brought suit. It was held that as his conveyance during infancy was such as the law would have compelled him to make, he could not disaffirm it on attaining his majority. Elliott v. Horn, 10 Ala. 348, 44 Am. Dec. 488.

Conveyance by Minor Who Is Merely Equitable Mortgagee. — When a title bond for land purchased is assigned by a father to a minor son as security for a liability assumed by the latter as surety for his father on a bond, the assignment is merely in the nature of an equitable mortgage (see the title EQUITABLE MORTGAGES, vol. 11, p. 130), and becomes inoperative when the debt for which the son is surety is paid, so that the father having sold the property to a third person conveying title by a deed in which the son joins, the title passes to such purchaser upon the satisfaction of the debt, and the son, on coming of age, is not entitled to have the sale set aside and the property decreed to him. Trader v. Jarvis, 23 W. Va. 100.

An Infant Imprisoned in Execution in a Civil Suit is entitled to a discharge from imprisonment on assigning his property, in compliance with the provisions of the statutes, and such assignment is valid notwithstanding his non-age. People v. Mullin, 25 Wend. (N. Y.) 698.

c. CONTRACTS OF APPRENTICESHIP. — The third exception to be mentioned is that of contracts of apprenticeship. Whether an infant could bind himself by a contract of apprenticeship at common law, is a question upon which the authorities are not clear. The power of an infant to bind himself by such a contract is denied in some cases,¹ but it appears by other adjudications that a contract of apprenticeship was regarded as binding the infant, on the ground that it was manifestly for his benefit,² at least to the extent that another contract of apprenticeship made by him before the termination of the period of indenture is void³ and that he cannot avoid it on coming of age,⁴ but not to the extent of giving the master an action against the apprentice in the covenants in the indenture.⁵ The statute 5 Eliz., c. 4, declaring an infant's power to bind himself by indenture of apprenticeship, has been held not to be in force in the United States.⁶

d. EXECUTED CONTRACTS OF MARRIAGE. — The fourth exception is that of executed contracts of marriage. This exception is a necessary consequence of the fact that the marriageable age is below the age of legal maturity.⁷

e. CONTRACTS FOR NECESSARIES — (1) Implied Contracts. — The fifth and last exception is that of implied contracts for necessities.⁸ This exception is introduced for the benefit of the infant himself, for since he "must live as well as a man" the law enables him to provide himself with necessities by allowing a reasonable price to those who furnish him with them.⁹

J., said: "It is a general rule of law that an infant cannot do any act to bind himself unless it be manifestly for his benefit. Binding himself an apprentice has been considered such an act, and therefore it has been held that an infant is competent to make such a contract." See also Gybert v. Fletcher, Cro. Car. 179; Rex v. Hindringham, 6 T. R. 557; Rex v. Arundel, 5 M. & S. 257; Overseers of Poor v. Overseers of Poor, 13 N. J. L. 227; Pardey v. American Ship-Windlass Co., 20 R. I. 147. Exemption from Arrest on Civil Process. — An infant is not liable to arrest for debt either

Obligation Imposed by Law. — The obligation of the infant to pay for necessities furnished him is, however, one imposed by law rather than one which arises from his contract.¹

(2) Express Contracts — Doctrine Denying Liability. — Hence an infant is only bound for the actual value of necessities furnished him, and not for what he may have foolishly agreed to pay for them.² In some of the states no action can be maintained on the express promise of the infant, but the seller must recover upon the implied assumpsit.³ Consequently an infant will not be bound by an account stated, though the items are for necessities,⁴ or by his acceptance of a bill of exchange⁵ or his negotiable promissory note,⁶ although given for the price of necessities.

Doctrine Permitting Action. — In other jurisdictions, however, it is held that the action can be maintained, provided the contract is embodied in such a form as will leave the consideration open to inquiry.⁷ Hence a promissory note, while it remains in the hands of the original payee, will be enforced, at least to the extent of the value of the necessities for which it was given,⁸ but it cannot be sued upon by an indorsee.⁹

(3) What Are Necessaries — (a) Considerations Determining the Question. — Whether an article supplied to an infant is a necessary or not, depends upon its general character, its suitability to the particular infant's means and station in life, and his actual need of it.

(b) General Considerations — aa. MUST SUPPLY PERSONAL WANTS — (aa) In General. — Concerning the general character of the things furnished, it may be laid down as a primary requisite that they must supply the personal needs of the infant, either those of his body, as food, clothing, lodging, and the like, or those of his mind, as instruction suitable and requisite for the proper development of his intellectual powers.¹⁰

(bb) Things for Infant's Estate — Improvement of Infant's Lands. — Hence labor and material expended in erecting a building upon the land of an infant,¹¹ or in repairing one already erected,¹² is not a necessary for which the infant will be upon execution or mesne process under Pub. Stat. Mass., c. 162. Cassier's Case, 139 Mass. 458.

But this exemption does not entitle him to maintain an action for an illegal arrest and false imprisonment against a person aiding an officer in making the arrest, and this although the infant notified the defendant of his infancy at the time of the arrest. Cassier v. Fales, 139 Mass. 461.

1. Gregory v. Lee, 64 Conn. 407.

Executory Contracts for Necessaries. — An infant is not bound by his executory contract for necessities, but only to pay a reasonable price for those which have been actually furnished him. Hence an infant may disaffirm a contract for the lease of a room suitable to his needs and situation in life, and is not liable for the rent of the room after such disaffirmance and after he has ceased to occupy it, although such period was within the term covered by his contract. Gregory v. Lee, 64 Conn. 407.

bound by his contract to pay, although the repairs were required to prevent immediate and serious injury to the building;¹ nor will the property be subject to a mechanic's lien on account thereof.² The fact that the infant has real estate which requires attention furnishes the proper occasion for the appointment of a guardian, through whose agency necessary repairs can presumably be more judiciously made than through the agency of the minor.³

So a Contract for the Insurance of His Property against loss or damage by fire is not a contract for necessities which will bind the infant absolutely.⁴

Services of Attorney. — Nor will he be bound by his contract with an attorney to pay for services rendered in respect to the property.⁵

(cc) Things Required in Conducting Business. — The principle finds further exemplification in things which an infant purchases for use in business. Under no circumstances, at common law, can these be considered necessities.⁶ The law does not contemplate that an infant shall open a shop and become a trader, or engage in any other business which involves the making of contracts on his own responsibility; and his presumed incapacity will protect him from their enforcement against him, notwithstanding it may appear that the infant derives his livelihood solely from his business and the particular contract was necessary to enable him successfully to carry it on.⁷ If, however, of articles sold to him for trade, any be actually consumed by him or his family as necessities, he will be liable to the vendor pro tanto for their value.⁸

Services rendered by an attorney as guardian ad litem in defending a suit to foreclose a mortgage made by the infant's ancestor are not necessities which would render a deed of land by the infant in consideration thereof valid, as Comp. Stat. 1893, c. 7, § 14, provides compensation for such guardians. Englebert v. Troxell, 40 Neb. 195, 42 Am. St. Rep. 665.

6. Requisites for Conducting Business. — Tupper v. Cadwell, 12 Met. (Mass.) 560, 46 Am. Dec. 704.

Illustrations. — A horse purchased by an infant to be used in cultivating a farm is not a necessary. Rainwater v. Durham, 2 Nott & M. (S. Car.) 524, 10 Am. Dec. 637. See also Grace v. Hale, 2 Humph. (Tenn.) 27, 36 Am. Dec. 296. Neither is a wagon bought by him for use on the farm. Paul v. Smith, 41

Mo. App. 275. Nor are supplies consumed thereon. Decell v. Lewenthal, 57 Miss. 331, 34 Am. Rep. 449. The board of horses owned by an infant who is engaged in business as a hackman is not a necessary. Merriam v. Cunningham, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 40. Nor will an infant be held liable on his promise to pay for feed furnished for horses owned by him and another as partners engaged in business as teamsters and common carriers. Mason v. Wright, 13 Met. (Mass.) 306.

In Ryan v. Smith, 165 Mass. 303, it was held that a barber's chair and divers other articles of furniture designed to be used in furnishing a barber's shop were not necessities.

Goods bought to replenish a stock of merchandise owned by an infant engaged in trade are not necessities. Whittingham v. Hill, Cro. Jac. 494; Whywall v. Champion, 2 Stra. 1083. Nor will the infant be liable for work done for him in the course of business. Dilk v. Keighley, 2 Esp. 480.

In Pennsylvania it seems to be held that if a guardian, instead of leasing the infant's land, puts him in possession of it to cultivate it, the infant will be bound for things purchased to enable him to carry on the employment. Rundel v. Keeler, 7 Watts (Pa.) 237; Mohney v. Evans, 51 Pa. St. 80.

7. Ryan v. Smith, 165 Mass. 303.

Under the Georgia Code, § 3050 (Code 1882, § 2733), "if an infant, by permission of his parent or guardian or by permission of law, practices any profession or trade, or engages in any business as an adult, he shall be bound for all contracts connected with such profession, trade, or business." McKamy v. Cooper, 81 Ga. 679.

A minor employed as a clerk will not be rendered liable by this section on a contract for the purchase of a buggy. Howard v. Simpkins, 70 Ga. 322.

8. Turberville v. Whitehouse, 1 C. & P. 94, 11 E. C. L. 326, 12 Price 692.

(dd) Necessaries for Family. — But when it is said that things furnished, in order to be deemed necessaries, must supply personal wants, the expression is not to be understood as applying merely to the personal wants of the infant himself. If he be married he is as liable for necessaries furnished his family as for those supplied for his own use and consumption.¹

bb. MUST BE USEFUL — (aa) Articles of Luxury or Convenience. — Another requisite is that the things furnished shall be of practical use. Articles of mere luxury or convenience are always excluded, though luxurious articles of utility are in some cases allowed.² Thus while a common-school education is a necessary for which an infant may bind himself, a collegiate³ or professional⁴ education has been held to be a luxury or convenience for which he will not be bound.

(bb) Ornaments. — So articles that are purely ornamental in their character are to be rejected.⁵ Whether an article is useful or is a mere ornament, is a question of fact for the jury.⁶

(e) Particular Considerations — aa. IN GENERAL. — When the general character of the thing as an article of personal utility has been established, the only remaining consideration is the particular infant's need of it. This is a mixed question of law and fact.

Things Supplying Physical and Intellectual Needs. — Obviously such things as are indispensable for the decent maintenance of the infant's person,⁷ the proper care of his health,⁸ and the suitable development of his intellectual faculties,⁹ are necessaries.

1. Necessaries for Family. — The necessaries for a single infant are those which pertain to him individually; those of a married infant are such as pertain to himself and his family. Turner v. Trisby, 1 Stra. 168; Turberville v. Whitehouse, 12 Price 692; Cantine v. Phillips, 5 Harr. (Del.) 428; Beeler v. Young, 1 Bibb (Ky.) 520; Chapman v. Hughes, 61 Miss. 339; Abell v. Warren, 4 Vt. 152.

An Infant Husband Is Liable for the Antenuptial Debts of His Wife. — Butler v. Breck, 7 Met. (Mass.) 164; Roach v. Quick, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 238. See also the title HUSBAND AND WIFE, vol. 15, p. 871.

An Infant Widow Is Bound by Her Contract for the furnishing of the funeral of her husband who has left no property to be administered. Chapple v. Cooper, 13 M. & W. 252.

2. Articles of Luxury or Convenience. — Chapple v. Cooper, 13 M. & W. 252; Beeler v. Young, 1 Bibb (Ky.) 519.

In Ryder v. Wombwell, L. R. 4 Exch. 32, it was held that a silver-gilt goblet purchased by an infant as a present for a friend was prima facie not a necessary, and that the burden was upon the seller to show some peculiar circumstances making it a necessary in the particular case.

So in Brooker v. Scott, 11 M. & W. 67, confectionery and fruit furnished to an infant undergraduate at a college were held not to be prima facie necessaries, and, no special circumstances being shown, the court directed a nonsuit to be entered in an action for their value.

A Journey by a Child without the permission of the parent is not a necessary. McKanna v. Merry, 61 Ill. 177.

In Peters v. Fleming, 6 M. & W. 42, the jury found that fine rings and a watch and chain were necessaries for an infant. It was held, on a motion for a new trial, that the watch and chain might be necessaries, and therefore it was proper to submit the whole claim to the jury.

3. Collegiate Education. — Middlebury College v. Chandler, 16 Vt. 683, 42 Am. Dec. 537. See also Gayle v. Hayes, 79 Va. 542.

In Stanton v. Willson, 3 Day (Conn.) 37, 3 Am. Dec. 255, there was a recovery for schooling at college and also for "classic books," but the question was not specifically raised. See also Oliver v. McDuffie, 28 Ga. 522. But teaching an infant a trade is regarded as a necessary. Cooper v. Simmons, 7 H. & N. 707.

4. Professional Education. — Turner v. Gaither, 83 N. Car. 357, 35 Am. Rep. 574.

Religious Instruction. — St. John's Parish v. Bronson, 40 Conn. 75, 16 Am. Rep. 17.

5. Peters v. Fleming, 6 M. & W. 42.

6. Ornaments. — In Peters v. Fleming, 6 M. & W. 42, it was held to be a question for the jury whether a breastpin and a watch-chain were to be considered articles for use or merely for ornament.

7. Board for Infant. — Kilgore v. Rich, 83 Me. 305, 23 Am. St. Rep. 780; Bradley v. Pratt, 23 Vt. 378.

8. Services of Nurse in Time of Illness. — Werner's Appeal, 91 Pa. St. 222.

The Professional Services of a Dentist, in the repair and preservation of an infant's teeth, are a necessary for which the infant will be bound. Strong v. Foote, 42 Conn. 203.

9. A Common-school Education is a necessary for which an infant may bind himself by contract. Middlebury College v. Chandler, 16 Vt. 683, 42 Am. Dec. 537. See also Raymond v. Loyl, 10 Barb. (N. Y.) 483.

"It has been ruled that an infant may be liable for schooling, and if it becomes a question how much schooling is necessary, then you must inquire what situation in life he is required to fill. A knowledge of the learned languages may be necessary for one, a mere knowledge of reading and writing may be sufficient for another." Peters v. Fleming, 6 M. & W. 42; Manby v. Scott, Sid. 112.

Maintenance of Personal Liberty and Legal Rights. — So too is the maintenance of his personal liberty and legal rights. Hence a recognizance executed by an infant to secure his release from arrest,¹ or his promise to pay for the services of an attorney retained to defend him in a criminal prosecution² or a bastardy proceeding³ or to bring an action for him for personal injury⁴ or breach of promise of marriage,⁵ is a contract by which he will be bound.

bb. SUITABILITY FOR INFANT'S CONDITION. — But the law does not confine the signification of the term "necessaries" to such things as these. It extends its application to everything necessary to maintain the infant in the estate, station, and degree of life in which he is.⁶ What are necessaries is therefore a relative fact to be determined by the fortune and circumstances of the particular infant. Articles that are mere conveniences or matters of taste may be considered necessaries where the usages of society render them proper for a person in the rank of life in which the infant moves.⁷

Illustrations. — For example, a bicycle bought by a female domestic,⁸ and a buggy⁹ contracted for by a clerk, have been held not to be necessaries for them, while on the other hand a riding horse for one youth of wealth and position,¹⁰ and a servant's livery¹¹ for another who was an officer in the English army, have been held to be suitable for their station in society, and therefore necessary.

Peculiar Circumstances. — The infant's need of things may sometimes depend upon the peculiar circumstances under which they are purchased, and the use to which they are put. Thus articles purchased by an infant for his wedding may be deemed necessary while under ordinary circumstances the same articles might not be so considered.¹²

Real Circumstances the Test. — In every case, however, things are to be deemed necessaries which correspond with the real circumstances of the infant and not merely with his appearance in life.¹³

cc. INFANT'S NEED OF IT—(aa) Over-Supply of Infant's Needs. — The last consideration is, was the infant in actual need of the thing purchased? Though an article may belong to a class of things that are unquestionably necessary, and though the particular article furnished may correspond in quality and price with the

In cases where, under peculiar circumstances, a civil suit is the only means by which an infant can procure the absolute necessaries which he requires, he may, it appears, bind himself by retaining an attorney and making other contracts necessary for the commencement and prosecution of the suit. Munson v. Washband, 32 Conn. 303, 83 Am. Dec. 151, where this principle was applied in the case of a female infant who had been seduced and got with child under promise of marriage, and she retained an attorney to bring suit for breach of promise.

13. May Wedding Garments within reason. Sams v. Stockton, 14 B. Mon. (Ky.) 187; Jordan v. Coffield, 70 N. Car. 110.

A Solicitor's Bill for Drawing a Marriage Settlement may be a necessary. Helps v. Clayton, 17 C. B. N. S. 553, 112 E. C. L. 553.

13. Ford v. Fothergill, 1 Esp. 212.

infant's means, yet if it should turn out that the infant was already bountifully supplied with the thing purchased, it is not a necessary in the particular case.¹ It therefore behooves one who sells goods to an infant to inquire into his circumstances, so as to determine not only whether the thing sold is such an article as an infant in the purchaser's station of life would require, but whether in the particular case the purchaser had need of it, for if the infant did not require it the seller cannot recover.²

Reason of the Rule. — The reason for this is a plain one. The rule of law is, that no one may deal with a minor; the exception to it is, that a stranger may supply him with necessities proper for him, in default of supply by any one else; but the stranger's interference with what is properly a guardian's business must rest upon an actual necessity of which he must judge in a measure at his peril. When he assumes the business of guardian for purposes of present relief, he is bound to execute it as a prudent guardian would, and consequently to make himself acquainted with the ward's necessities and circumstances. The credit which the infant's necessities gives to him ceases when these necessities cease; and as nothing further is requisite when these are relieved, the exception to the rule is at an end.³

(bb) When Infant Is Supported by Parent or Guardian. — So an Infant Who Resides at Home under the care of a parent, and is supported by him, cannot be held liable for things furnished, on the ground that they are necessities.⁴

1. Over-Supply of Infant's Needs. — Ford v. Fothergill, 1 Esp. 212; Burghart v. Angerstein, 6 C. & P. 699, 25 E. C. L. 605.

"The true question is not a mere abstract one whether the articles supplied were in their nature necessities, but a practical question whether they were necessities for the defendant, that is, necessary to him, and they could not be if he already had plenty of them." Lindley, L. J., in Johnstone v. Marks, 35 W. R. 806, 19 Q. B. D. 509. So the infant may show that he was already fully supplied with similar goods, and it is immaterial whether the plaintiff knew it or not. Barnes v. Toye, 13 Q. B. D. 410; Mortara v. Hall, 6 Sim. 465; McKanna v. Merry, 61 Ill. 180; Trainer v. Trumbull, 141 Mass. 530; Hoyt v. Casey, 114 Mass. 397, 19 Am. Rep. 371; Rivers v. Gregg, 5 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 274. Inquiry Not Condition Precedent to Recovery. — In Brayshaw v. Eaton, 5 Bing. N. Cas. 231, 35 E. C. L. 99, which was a suit against an infant by a tailor, it was held that an inquiry by the plaintiff as to the defendant's circumstances is not a condition precedent to recovery. See also Dalton v. Gib, 5 Bing. N. Cas. 198, 35 E. C. L. 83. And compare Eames v. Sweetser, 101 Mass. 80.

Tennessee. — Nichol v. Steger, 2 Tenn. Ch. 323, 6 Lea (Tenn.) 393.

The fact that the parent is poor and unable to pay will not make the infant liable. Hoyt v. Casey, 114 Mass. 397, 19 Am. Rep. 371. But see Werner's Appeal, 91 Pa. St. 222, where two minors died intestate leaving their father as their heir at law. The latter was imbecile and possessed of no estate. A sister of the deceased nursed them through their last illness and prepared the bodies for interment. For these services she presented a claim to the administrator, who refused payment on the ground that the charges were exorbitant, and paid the balance to the father as distributee. It was held that the claim being for necessities, and the parent unable to pay it, the estate of the minors was liable.

Presumption. — If the minor resides with his parents there is a presumption, rebuttable by proof, that he is fully supplied with necessities. Perrin v. Wilson, 10 Mo. 451; Freeman v. Bridger, 4 Jones L. (49 N. Car.) 1, 67 Am. Dec. 258; Connolly v. Hull, 3 McCord L. (S. Car.) 6, 15 Am. Dec. 612; Jones v. Colvin, 1 McMull. L. (S. Car.) 14.

When it is shown that a minor has been furnished with money sufficient to supply her with necessities, the presumption of law is, that she has been fully supplied from that fund, and the burden rests upon the plaintiff to negative that presumption. Nicholson v. Wilborn, 13 Ga. 467.

In Texas it is held that where the defense is

If the Infant Is under the Care of a Guardian the latter is not personally liable for necessities furnished the infant without his order.¹ In case the guardian neglects his duty of supporting his ward, it appears that a third person may furnish the ward with necessities and hold the infant liable² or by proper proceedings subject the latter's estate in the hands of the guardian, to the payment of the debt.³

(d) Questions of Law and Fact. — Whether articles are of those classes for which an infant shall be bound to pay, is a matter of law for the court; if they fall under those general descriptions, then whether they were actually necessary and suitable to the condition and estate of the particular infant, is a question of fact for the jury.⁴

(4) Liability for Money Paid by Third Person. — An infant is liable for money paid at his request to satisfy a debt which he had contracted for necessities.⁵

The Reason Why This Is Allowed is that the infant's liability is in no way increased by owing the debt to one person rather than to another, but on the contrary the right to transfer the debt may under certain circumstances be a great inconvenience to him. The original creditor may be unwilling or unable to wait for payment, while a friend, as a substitute, may be more indulgent.⁶

(5) Liability for Money Borrowed to Purchase Necessaries — At Law. — But an infant is not liable at law for money borrowed by him although the sum be actually expended in the purchase of necessities.⁷ For it is upon the lending that the contract must arise, and this is complete when the money is paid over, and being voidable it cannot be rendered binding by matter ex post facto, but only by the borrower's affirmance of it after attaining his majority.⁸

In Equity. — The rule is, however, different in equity. If for any reason the that the infant was already supplied with necessities, the burden of proof is upon the defendant to establish that fact. Parsons v. Keys, 43 Tex. 557.

1. Guardian Not Personally Liable. — See the title GUARDIAN AND WARD, vol. 15, p. 78.

3. See the title GUARDIAN AND WARD, vol. 15, p. 78.

But where the guardian personally contracts for the infant ward's board, the guardian is personally liable (see title last cited, vol. 15, pp. 70, 77), and the infant's really cannot be charged, although the guardian has squandered the infant's personal estate and is insolvent. St. Joseph's Academy v. Augustini, 55 Ala. 493.

In Clarke v. Leslie, 5 Esp. 28, where the plaintiff paid a sum of money to secure the release of the defendant, an infant, who was arrested for debt, it was held that if the debt for which the money was paid was for necessities the plaintiff was entitled to recover the amount from the defendant, but that the burden was upon the plaintiff to show this, and this not being done, judgment for the defendant was entered.

Payment of Note by Surety. — If an infant purchases necessities and gives a promissory note signed by himself and a surety, and the surety afterwards pays the note, he is entitled to recover the amount so paid from the infant. Conn v. Coburn, 7 N. H. 368, 26 Am. Dec. 746; Haine v. Tarrant, 2 Hill L. (S. Car.) 400. Contra, Ayers v. Burns, 87 Ind. 245, 44 Am. Rep. 759.

The reason given by the authorities is that the lender by intrusting money to the infant enabled him to spend it in dissipation if he had been so minded; and his subsequent judicious use of it could not confer a right of action, where none existed at the time of the loan. Smith v. Oliphant, 2 Sandf. (N. Y.) 306.

matter comes before a court of chancery the lender will obtain relief by being subrogated to the rights of the seller of the goods.¹

When Lender Applies Money to Purchase of Necessaries. — This principle is sometimes applied in law, where the contract of lending and the laying out of the money constitute one transaction. If the lender does not pay the money to the infant, but applies it directly to the purchase of necessities, thus using his more mature judgment in respect to price and quality, the transaction is beneficial to the infant, and it has been held that he will be bound by it.²

4. Contracts Which Are Voidable — a. IN GENERAL. — The general rule that the contracts of infants are voidable by them applies to all persons below the age of legal maturity. The fact that a minor is emancipated³ or married,⁴ or is engaged in business upon his own responsibility,⁵ gives no additional binding force to his contracts. A minor who has nearly attained majority may be as able in fact to protect his interests in a contract, as a person who has passed that period; but the law cannot measure the individual capacity of minors, and therefore makes no distinctions in respect to ages or conditions, but conclusively presumes all persons under age to be lacking in judgment and understanding sufficient to enable them to guard their own interests,⁶ and allows them to avoid all acts, contracts, and conveyances not within the exceptions heretofore considered, to which they are parties, and to place themselves in statu quo.

In Iowa by statute (Rev. In Bouch v. Parsons, 3 Burr. 1794, the rule was laid down by Lord Mansfield that all deeds that take effect by delivery by the infant are voidable, while those delivered by another hand are void; and this technical rule has been repeated in later cases, although it has no significance at the present day. *Boal v. Land was conveyed to A to hold in trust for B, then an infant, for life. The deed provided that the land should be sold if B should at any time so request in writing. B made such a request by the persuasion of her father when ten years old. It was held that she could avoid the sale on reaching majority. Hill v. Clark, 4 Lea (Tenn.) 405.

Joining in Conveyance of Wife's Lands. — If an infant husband joins with his wife who is of full age, in the conveyance of her real estate, the deed is voidable at the election of the husband. Barker v. Wilson, 4 Heisk. (Tenn.) 268.

Correction of Voluntary Deed. — A minor who executes as a gift a conveyance to a sister, in which by mistake the land is incorrectly described, cannot be compelled after attaining his majority to execute a deed for the land intended to be conveyed, though after arriving of age he promised to do so. The promise in such a case is without consideration to support it. Oxley v. Tryon, 25 Iowa 95.

Potter*, 23 Mich. 377.

(d) Marriage Settlements. — A marriage settlement executed by an infant is voidable by him, but is valid until avoided, and passes an estate.²

(e) Assignments for Benefit of Creditors. — An assignment of property made by an infant, or by a firm of which he is a member, for the benefit of creditors, is not void, but voidable only at the election of the infant, and the property assigned cannot be attached by a creditor in the hands of the assignee,³ nor will the assignment be set aside at the suit of a creditor.⁴

(2) Bills and Notes — Liability of Infant as Maker or Acceptor. — Despite some early cases to the contrary,⁵ it is now the universal rule that promissory notes and bills of exchange issued and accepted by infants are voidable and not void, and this whether they are negotiable or not.⁶

Where an Infant Is a Co-Maker with an Adult the latter is held although the infant disaffirms. Taylor v. Dansby, 42 Mich. 82. See further the title BILLS OF EXCHANGE AND PROMISSORY NOTES, vol. 4, p. 167.

But if an infant gives his note for land purchased, and at his majority disaffirms the contract, the sureties on the note will not be liable. Baker v. Kennett, 54 Mo. 82.

An Injunction to Restrain Proceedings at Law upon a Note of an Infant indorsed by his father, given for the purchase of lands by the infant, issued on a bill filed by the infant to disaffirm the sale, will be dissolved as to the father, but be allowed to stand as to the infant. Parker v. Baker, Clarke (N. Y.) 136.

A Bill of Exchange Drawn on an Infant, but Accepted by Him After Arriving at Full Age, cannot be avoided by him. Stevens v. Jackson, 4 Campb. 164.

Right of Infant Payee to Indorse. — Nor is a bill or note drawn to the order of an infant payee a nullity. If the infant indorses it, he transfers a valid title so far as the maker¹ or acceptor² is concerned, and the infancy of the indorser cannot avail as defense in a suit upon it. And this for two reasons: In the first place, the plea of infancy is a personal privilege intended for the benefit of the infant only;³ and in the second place, the defendant, by uttering the note or accepting the bill, has asserted to the world the competency of the payee to negotiate it, and is therefore henceforward estopped to deny his capacity.⁴

(3) Contracts of Suretyship. — Although it has been held in some early decisions that an infant's contract of suretyship is absolutely void,⁵ and that a mortgage executed by an infant wife to secure a debt of her husband's⁶ or of a firm of which he was a member⁷ is incapable of confirmation, it is now very generally held that contracts of suretyship are not void, but voidable merely at the option of the infant.⁸ Hence an infant surety upon a guardian's bond⁹ or upon an undertaking as bail¹⁰ or on a forthcoming bond to secure a stay of execution¹¹ will be bound unless he chooses to plead his infancy.

Surety upon Promissory Note. — So if he executes a promissory note as surety for another, he incurs a liability thereby, although he may by proper plea relieve himself of it.¹²

(4) Contracts for Service. — An infant's contract for service is voidable by him,¹³ but until avoided by the infant, or until the parent asserts his para-

In an action by an indorsee against the maker of a promissory note payable to the order of a firm, the defendant cannot set up as a defense, that the name of the firm was indorsed by an infant partner. Duly v. Brownfield, 1 Pa. St. 497.

If the indorsement of the infant and the note to him has been rescinded and a new note given by the maker of the original note to the father of the infant payee in consideration of discharge from liability on the old note, it will bar a recovery on the first note. *Willis v. "The mere fact that the infant assumed to become a surety for another is not in itself ground sufficient to say that such dealing was a wrong to the infant. The most that can be said is that the court cannot see how the infant could derive benefit from such an act; but that is not sufficient if he himself, after arriving at maturity, deliberately has determined the matter for himself." Williams v. Harrison, 11 S. Car. 412.

mount right to put an end to the contract by reclaiming the services of his minor child, it remains in force and subjects his employer to liability as master.¹

(5) Awards and Compromises — (a) Arbitration and Award. — If an infant submits to arbitration a cause of action which he has, or upon which he may be liable, the award is not absolutely void, but he may, because of his presumed incompetency to choose suitable arbitrators, execute or avoid it at his election.²

(b) Compromise of Causes of Action — aa. CLAIMS DUE INFANTS. — Upon like principle, if an infant who has a cause of action for a tort³ or breach of contract⁴ attempts himself to ascertain the damages due him, and enters into a compromise of them, he may afterwards, if he chooses, avoid the agreement and recover at law such sum as the jury may award him. The law, however, will not permit these principles to be made an engine of fraud and injustice; and if the jury on trial are convinced that the satisfaction received was a compensation for the injury, they will assess for the plaintiff but nominal damages. But if the compensation should be found inadequate, the jury will give such further sum as, with the money received, will amount to a reasonable satisfaction.⁵

bb. TORTS COMMITTED BY INFANTS. — Although an infant is liable for a tort committed by him, he is not bound by a compromise entered into in respect to it, consequently he may avoid the same, and recover what money he had paid of Dower. — An agreement by an infant widow to accept a pecuniary consideration in lieu of dower is not a bar for a claim for dower; but she cannot claim dower and at the same time enforce the payment of a promissory note given to secure such consideration. Drew v. Drew, 40 N. J. Eq. 458.

Settlement with Guardian. — An infant ward fraudulently representing himself to be of age made a settlement with his guardian and executed a discharge. By reason of the settlement and discharge, the guardian was induced to surrender a certain security he had taken for his own protection in managing the estate. It was not charged that any advantage was taken of the infant in the settlement. It was held that the ward could not afterwards disregard the discharge, and in a court of equity call upon the estate of the deceased guardian to account. Hayes v. Parker, 41 N. J. Eq. 630.

Indiana Statute. — But under the Indiana statute (2 Rev. Stat. 1876, p. 591) which provides that "the marriage of any female ward to a person of full age shall operate as a legal discharge of the guardianship, and the guardian shall be authorized to account to the wife with the assent of the husband," if the husband of such ward with her consent and direction makes a final settlement with her guardian she is bound thereby. Haines v. State, 60 Ind. 41.

A Court of Equity Will Not Disturb a Settlement Made by an Attorney with a Client after his majority, in respect to a compromise of litigation affecting the interest of the latter when a minor, unless it is impeached for fraud, unfairness, or mistake. Bennett v. Walker, 100 Ill. 525.

5. Baker v. Lovett, 6 Mass. 78, 4 Am. Dec. 88. Restoration of Sum Received in Satisfaction. — In Texas it is held that before the infant can repudiate the compromise and sue at law for damages he must return or tender the sum he had accepted in satisfaction. Lane v. Dayton Coal, etc., Co., 101 Tenn. 581.

in satisfaction of it, leaving the other party to proceed at law for his damages.¹

A Promissory Note to Compromise a Tort is no more binding than any other contract of an infant.²

(6) Partnership Contracts. — An infant's partnership agreement is voidable and not void. He may enter into partnership and bind the firm by his acts, but he cannot be held individually liable for its debts.³ The property which he contributed to the assets of the firm is, however, subject to the demands of the firm's creditors, and he cannot compel his partners to bear the burden of these debts until the entire assets of the firm have been exhausted. But this is a matter which is determined by the equitable principles governing the law of partnership accounting, and may be more properly discussed in that connection.⁴

(7) Contracts in Respect to Corporation Stock. — An infant may subscribe to and purchase the stock of a corporation and become a stockholder therein, but his contracts in respect thereto are voidable. The rights and liabilities of infant stockholders are not very clearly defined, and can be more satisfactorily considered in connection with the main subject.⁵

c. DISAFFIRMANCE AND AVOIDANCE — (1) Right of Infants to Repudiate their Contracts — (a) General Principles. — The right of an infant to avoid his contracts is one conferred by law for his protection against his own improvidence and the designs of others; and though its exercise is not infrequently the occasion of injury to those who have in good faith dealt with him, this is a consequence which they might have avoided by declining to enter into the contract. It is the policy of the law to discourage adults from contracting with infants, and the former cannot complain if, as a consequence of their violation of this rule of conduct, they are injured by the exercise of the right with which the law has purposely invested the latter,⁶ nor charge that the infant, in exercising the right, is guilty of fraud.⁷

(b) Executory Contracts. — The right in respect to executory contracts is exercised by interposing the plea of infancy to an action upon the contract, or for its breach.⁸

And see the title PARTNERSHIP.

An Infant Who Was a Secret Partner in a Firm represented falsely that the ostensible partner was worthy of credit for their mutual profit. It was held that infancy was a defense to a suit for the price of the goods, although the vendor would have been entitled to rescind the sale on ground of fraud. Vinsen v. Lockard, 7 Bush (Ky.) 458. But it has been held in Maryland that the infant by the mere act of forming a partnership holds himself out as an adult, and practices a fraud which estops him from setting up his infancy in defense. Kemp v. Cook, 18 Md. 130, 70 Am. Dec. 681. This is not, however, generally regarded as law. Bates on Partnership, § 142.

Under the Iowa Statute (Code, § 2239) which provides that no contract of a minor can be disaffirmed in cases where, on account of his having engaged in business as an adult, the other party had good reason to believe the minor capable of contracting, it is held that the fact that a minor, engaged in business as a member of a copartnership, had no property in the stock and only an interest in the profits of the business, does not operate to discharge his liability upon his contracts. Jaques v. Sax, 39 Iowa 367.

General Partner in Limited Partnership. — An infant may become interested in business as a general partner in a limited partnership; he is responsible for all the partnership engagements until he elects to set up a personal plea of infancy, and the presumption is that he will not do this. The fact, therefore, that one of the general partners is an infant, does not affect the liability of a special partner. Continental Nat. Bank v. Strauss, 137 N. Y. 148.

(c) Executed Contracts — aa. IN GENERAL. — The fact that a contract has been executed gives it no additional binding force. Such a contract may be disaffirmed by the infant as well as an executory contract; there is no distinction between them in law.¹

bb. SALES OF REAL AND PERSONAL PROPERTY — (aa) Recovery of Thing Sold. — Thus if an infant sells his real or personal property, he may, after coming of age, repudiate the sale and recover the thing sold.²

Equity of Bona-fide Purchaser. — This right is absolute and paramount to all equities in favor of third persons, even bona-fide purchasers without notice.³

Recovery for Use. — The effect of the disaffirmance of a conveyance of land by an infant is to render the transaction void ab initio by relation,⁴ and entitle him to charge the purchaser for rents during the whole time that he occupied the property.⁵ The latter may recoup for valuable improvements erected on the land.⁶

tions, such as Bills and Notes, Contracts of Suretyship, Awards and Compromises, Partnership Contracts, etc.

Disaffirmance of Executory Agreement. — The heirs at law to a tract of land affected by a will employed an attorney to prosecute a suit to set the will aside, agreeing to compensate him for his services in case of success by conveying to him one-half of the land. Through the exertions of the attorney, the will was set aside. It was held that a minor heir, although benefited by the result equally with the others, was not bound by the agreement. Dillon v. Bowles, 77 Mo. 603, 8 Mo. App. 419.

1. Disaffirmance — Executed Contracts. — Robinson v. Weeks, 56 Me. 102; Hill v. Anderson, 5 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 216; Abell v. Warren, 4 Vt. 149; Price v. Furman, 27 Vt. 268, 65 Am. Dec. 104; Person v. Chase, 37 Vt. 647, 88 Am. Dec. 630.

If a minor pays his bounty money to his master in consideration of his consent to the minor's enlistment, the minor's administrator may rescind the contract and recover back the money. Dinsmore v. Webber, 50 Me. 103.

An Infant Purchased a Share in the Defendant's Trade, and advanced a certain sum thereupon, to be retained by the defendant as a forfeiture in case the infant should fail to fulfil an agreement to enter into partnership with the defendant. He did fail to do so, but it was held that the infant could recover the sum advanced. Corpe v. Overton, 10 Bing. 252, 25 E. C. L. 121.

The Fact that an Infant Was Empowered by an Act of the General Assembly to sell her real estate provided she invested the proceeds in a note secured by a mortgage, did not take away her right, or that of her administrator, to avoid her act in parting with the note before it fell due, in consideration of its payment by the maker. Tillinghast v. Holbrook, 7 R. I. 230.

An Infant May Avoid a Usurious Contract entered into by him, and recover the money lent upon such contract under the count for money had and received. Millard v. Hewlett, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 301.

berger, (N. Y. City Ct. Gen. T.) 19 Misc. (N. Y.) 429; Gillespie v. Bailey, 12 W. Va. 70, 29 Am. Rep. 445.

An Infant, at the Request of her Guardian, Wrote Her Name upon the Back of a Stock Certificate belonging to her, without being told for what purpose he desired her signature, and without any arrangement that the shares could be transferred to him, and he pledged the stock as collateral for his own debt. It was held that the infant was not bound by her signature, or estopped from disputing the validity of the title acquired by the person to whom the certificate was assigned. Smith v. Baker, 42 Hun (N. Y.) 504.

A Decree for the Sale of Mortgaged Premises and a Sale Made Thereunder Will Be Set Aside where it appears that some of the mortgagors were infants, and there is no evidence that they received any part of the money loaned or that there was any fraud in the transaction. Monumental Bldg. Assoc. v. Herman, 33 Md. 128.

Equity Will Not Enjoin Disaffirmance. — An infant sold her interest in a tract of land, and executed a bond conditioned to make a conveyance at a time after she should come of age. All the purchase money was paid, and the purchaser went into possession. When the vendor came of age, she refused to ratify the sale, execute the deed, or repay the purchase money, but brought ejectment to recover possession of the land. It was held that she was not liable to be restrained by injunction. Brawner v. Franklin, 4 Gill (Md.) 463.

But if an Infant Assigns an Article of Personal Property to a Creditor with license to take it away when he chooses, the infant cannot, without rescinding the contract, maintain trespass against the creditor for taking the property away. Hoyt v. Chapin, 6 Vt. 42.

3. Right Paramount to Equity of Bona Fide Purchasers. — Jenkins v. Jenkins, 12 Iowa 195; Brantley v. Wolf, 60 Miss. 420; Miles v. Lingerian, 24 Ind. 385; Searcy v. Hunter, 81 Tex. 644, 26 Am. St. Rep. 837. See also Hill v. Anderson, 5 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 216.

during infancy, some act must be performed, either by the infant himself after attaining his majority, or by his legal representative in case of his death, evidencing an intention to disaffirm, and such act must be inconsistent with the continued validity of the deed.¹ In some early decisions it was asserted that the infant must manifest his dissent by an act of equal dignity with the contract which he elected to avoid,² but this principle has never been fully recognized.

bbb. Actions at Law. — Action of Ejectment. — A deed executed by an infant may be avoided by an action of ejectment instituted by him after attaining his majority, but it seems that the grantee or tenant in possession ought to be notified of the intention to disaffirm before the commencement of the action.³

Writ of Entry. — In some of the New England states the land may be recovered by a writ of entry.⁴

ccc. Conveyances After Majority. — An infant's conveyance of land by bargain and sale may be disaffirmed after his majority by the conveyance of the same land to another person,⁵ and this whether the last be a quitclaim deed or a deed with covenants of warranty.⁶ The second grantee may recover possession of the land in ejectment.⁷

Actual or Constructive Possession. — In some of the states, however, it has been deemed necessary that the grantor should be in actual or constructive possession of the land in order to give validity to the second deed.⁸

Necessity of Entry. — In some other jurisdictions it has been held that to enable the grantor to pass title by the second conveyance, his actual entry upon the land is an indispensable requisite in all cases⁹ except where the infant had never been out of possession of the land,¹⁰ or where at the time of the second deed the land was wholly vacant;¹ but in some states it is held that re-entry on the land is not necessary.²

If an Infant Creates by Writing a Private Easement in His Land, and afterwards conveys the land by absolute deed to another, and ratifies the deed after his majority, this is in effect a disaffirmance of the easement, and a subsequent ratification of the contract creating the easement is inoperative as against the grantee in the deed. 8. Actual or Constructive Possession Necessary. — A conveyance made by a grantor of land and held by one claiming the title thereto under a conveyance made by the same grantor during his infancy is void as against the adverse holder, but it operates as a disaffirmance to the first deed, and authorizes the grantee to sue the adverse holder in the name of the grantor for the recovery of such land. Riggs v. Fisk, 64 Ind. 100. See also Harrison v. Adcock, 8 Ga. 68; Harris v. Cannon, 6 Ga. 382.

Second Deed Must Be Inconsistent with First. — Where a disaffirmance is sought to be accomplished by a conveyance, the subsequent deed must be inconsistent with the deed executed during infancy, so that the two cannot properly stand together.³

cc. PURCHASES OF REAL OR PERSONAL PROPERTY. — An infant who has purchased property, real or personal, may repudiate the purchase after coming of age, tender back the property to the vendor, and recover what he may have paid upon the price, or whatever he has given in exchange.⁴

Lien for Reimbursement. — And it has been held that the same equitable principle which gives the vendor a lien for the unpaid purchase money, gives the infant a lien upon the property for the amount he has paid.⁵

Infant Not Liable for Use. — The infant is not liable to the vendor for the use of the property during the time it has been in the infant's possession.⁶

Not Liable for Depreciation. — Nor can the vendor recoup for its depreciation.⁷ If the thing purchased, as, for example, a horse, is injured by the infant, not by any tortious act wilfully committed, but merely through ignorance and want of skill in the management, it constitutes no defense to the infant's claim for money paid.⁸

dd. LEASE OF REAL PROPERTY TO INFANT. — An infant may disaffirm a lease of real property, and is not liable for rent after such disaffirmance and after he has ceased to occupy the property, although such period is within the term covered by the contract.⁹ But the infant cannot recover rent which he has already paid.¹⁰

ee. CONTRACTS OF SERVICE. — An infant's contract to serve for a given time at a definite rate of wages may be repudiated by him at any time during minority, whether before or after the completion of the term.¹¹

Recovering Value of Services after Avoidance. — After the contract has been avoided the parties stand in the same relation to each other as they would had the transaction taken place without any contract, and the infant may recover for his services on an implied promise to pay a reasonable price therefor, taking into consideration any benefit already received by him.¹²

But a married infant cannot demand the return of payments which her husband may have made upon the purchase price. Jennings v. Hare, 47 S. Car. 279.

It is no defense to such an action that the infant stole the money from another person, if the owner of the money makes no claim upon the defendant therefor. Riley v. Mallory, 33 Conn. 201.

Effect of Disaffirmance. — An infant who receives property under a contract of sale to him, and then surrenders it to the seller, intending to give up all his interest in it, cannot afterwards avoid such surrender and retake the property from the possession of the seller. Edgerton v. Wolf, 6 Gray (Mass.) 453.

Part Payment. — If an infant has received a portion of his wages prior to his election to avoid the contract, the amount paid him must be deducted from the sum due him.¹

Damages from Breach of Contract. — Whether the employer can claim as a set-off the damage caused by the breach of contract, is a question upon which authorities are divided. In some of the states it is held that no such deduction can be allowed, since to permit it would be in effect to hold the infant liable for the breach of the contract.² But in other jurisdictions it has been allowed, though the courts seem to recognize that in so holding, they have departed from the strict rules of law, being influenced in their decisions by the desire to make an equitable adjustment of the rights of the parties.³

Necessaries as a Consideration. — Where the consideration for an infant's contract to serve is the agreement of the employer to furnish him with necessaries during the term of service, and the agreement is faithfully performed by the employer, the value of the necessaries furnished him may be pleaded as a set-off to the infant's claim for compensation, even to the extinction of his demand.⁴

(d) Ignorance of One Contracting Party of Infancy of Other. — The fact that one party to a contract was ignorant of the infancy of the other party at the time the contract was made, does not estop the latter from asserting his infancy as a ground for repudiating it.⁵

the other party was induced to enter into the contract by the infant's misrepresentation that he was of age, will not, at common law, estop the infant from afterwards repudiating it,¹ though he may be liable in tort for his fraud.²

Statutes. — In a few of the states it is provided by statute that the contract of a minor cannot be disaffirmed where, on account of his own misrepresentations, the other party has been led to believe the infant capable of contracting.³

bb. IN EQUITY. — There has always been a tendency in equity, however, to hold an infant responsible for any contract that he may have induced by his misrepresentations as to his age, especially when his appearance bears out his assertion.⁴ But the mere failure of the infant to inform the other party of his nonage will not bind him,⁵ unless the circumstances of the case make it a fraud for the infant to remain silent.⁶ It is essential that the other party

4. Fraudulent Misrepresentations as to Age — In Equity. — Where an infant has, by fraudulently misrepresenting that he was of age, induced another person to enter into contract with him, under which materials were supplied and work done, such person may maintain an action against such infant to obtain a return of the materials in the possession of the infant, and an account and payment of the value of so much of such materials as are no longer in his control and disposition; and where the infant has accepted a bill of exchange for the whole sum claimed to be due, he will be held to pay it. Campbell v. Ridgely, 13 Vict. L. R. (Australia) 701.

In Lemprière v. Lange, 12 Ch. D. 675, where an infant had obtained a lease of a furnished house on the false representation that he was of age, it was held that the lease must be declared void and possession given up, and the infant enjoined from parting with the furniture, although he could not be made liable for use and occupation.

Recovery of Land Sold. — If an infant, by his representations as to his age, induces one to purchase land from him, he will be estopped by his fraud from calling on a court of equity to cancel the deed. Schmitheimer v. Eiseleman, 7 Bush (Ky.) 298; Ryan v. Growney, 125 Mo. 474. See also Dafidson v. Young, 38 Ill. 145.

Where an Infant Cestui Que Trust induces the trustee to make payment to him by misrepresenting his age, the payment is a discharge of the sum due. Overton v. Banister, 3 Hare 503.

So a Settlement with a Guardian Induced by Fraud, on the part of an infant ward, falsely representing himself to be of age, will not be avoided by a court of equity. Hayes v. Parker, 41 N. J. Eq. 630.

Estate Liable in Bankruptcy. — An infant, to all appearances over twenty-one years of age, engaged in business and borrowed money, representing himself to be twenty-two years old. His estate in bankruptcy was held liable in equity to pay the debt. Ex p. Unity Joint-Stock Mut. Banking Assoc., 3 De G. & J. 63.

6. When Circumstances Render It a Fraud to Remain Silent. — In Watts v. Creswell, 9 Vin. Abr. 415, 3 Eq. Cas. Abr. 515, par. 3, a tenant for life borrowed money, and his son, who was next in remainder and an infant, was witness to the mortgage deed, and the court relieved on the ground of the fraud in the infant by not giving notice to the mortgagee of his title. See also Savage v. Foster, 9 Mod. 35; Clare v. Bedford, 13 Vin. Abr. 536.

In Ferguson v. Bobo, 54 Miss. 121, a female infant of nineteen, knowing her rights, conveyed land to her father for the purpose of enabling him to borrow money by giving a mortgage thereon to one who was ignorant of

should be deceived by the infant's assertion.¹

(f) Avoidance of Whole Transaction Necessary. — The right of disaffirmance which an infant possesses must, in respect to a particular contract, be exercised as a whole. He must avoid or affirm the entire transaction; he cannot be permitted to affirm a part which may be to his advantage, and at the same time avoid another part which imposes a liability.²

Conveyance and Purchase-money Mortgage. — Thus where land is conveyed to an infant and a mortgage taken back for the purchase money, the deed and mortgage together constitute but one transaction, and the title only passes by the deed subject to the mortgage. The infant may disaffirm the mortgage, but by so doing he annuls the sale to himself.³ The same principle obtains in the purchase and mortgaging of chattels.⁴

(g) Restoration of the Consideration — aa. AT COMMON LAW — (aa.) Statement of the Rule. — To give effect to an infant's disaffirmance of his contract, it is not necessary that the other party should be placed in statu quo;⁵ for if the law in every case required restitution of the consideration as a condition precedent to the disaffirmance of the contract, it would often result in accomplishing indirectly what it expressly says shall not be done directly, and the very purpose of the law in permitting infants to avoid their contracts would be defeated.⁶ For example, if an infant borrows money, and improvidently disposes of it, as the law, from his want of discretion, presumes he may do, this very indiscretion which the law endeavors to shield and protect becomes the means of fastening the imperfect obligation upon him, and his inability to refund what he has borrowed affirms his contract to repay it.⁷

(bb.) When the Consideration Has Passed Out of the Infant's Hands. — Consequently, if the consideration has passed from the infant's hands, either wasted or expended during his minority, so that he cannot restore it to the party from whom he received it, he is not deprived of his right or capacity to avoid the contract,⁸

the infant's minority. The money was loaned, and subsequently, the lender being still ignorant of her minority, the father conveyed the land to pay the debt. The infant, on reaching full age, brought ejectment, and it was held that a court of equity would enjoin her from asserting her legal title and thus perpetrating a fraud.

2. Avoidance of Whole Transaction Necessary. — Overbach v. Heermance, Hopk. (N. Y.) 337.

An infant owner of a piece of land upon which there were valid liens for unpaid purchase money and taxes, borrowed money and executed a deed of trust upon the land, and applied the money so borrowed to the discharge of the liens. Upon arriving at majority the infant disaffirmed the contract and deed of trust, and refused to pay the money borrowed. It was held that, the deed having been disaffirmed, the infant was entitled, as between herself and the lender, to be protected only in the enjoyment of such rights in the property as she had at the time the deed of trust was executed, and that the lender was entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the lienholders whose liens the lender's money was used to discharge. MacGreal v. Taylor, 167 U. S. 688.

or required to return an equivalent therefor.¹

(cc) When the Infant Never Received the Consideration. — So if the infant never received the consideration, as where it was misapplied by an agent appointed to receive it,² or was appropriated by his parent,³ or, in the case of an infant feme covert, was applied to the payment of her husband's debts,⁴ the infant cannot be made to account for it.

(dd) When the Infant Has All or Any Part of the Consideration. — But when at the time of disaffirmance the infant still has in his possession all or any part of the consideration received by him under the contract, common honesty and fair dealing require that he should restore it to the other party.⁵

Contracts of Purchase. — Thus while an infant may escape personal liability on his contract of purchase, he cannot, after avoiding it, retain as his own, property in his possession which he has obtained by means of it.⁶ In New Hampshire it is held that if an infant does not restore the goods purchased, when it is in his power to do so, he is liable in a suit by the vendor for so much of the price as is equal to the benefit derived by the infant from the purchase;⁷ but the usual rule is that a disaffirmance of the contract merely reverts the title to the property sold in the vendor or his legal representative,⁸ and the infant, on demand, must account for it.⁹ If he refuses to deliver the property it may be

When Property Has Been Taken in Execution. — If an infant purchases personalty, he may recover back the consideration paid without restoring the property sold and delivered to him, where it has been taken from him, whether rightfully or not upon an execution against a third person. In such case he is not required, as a condition of his right to recover, to take any steps to recover the property taken from him. It is sufficient in such case that the property ceases to be in his possession or subject to his control. Lemmon v. Beeman, 45 Ohio St. 505.

Money Expended upon Property. — A mortgage executed by an infant on his land is voidable at his election, and he cannot be compelled to make restitution of the money obtained upon the mortgage if it has been expended in filling in a portion of the mortgaged premises. *New York Bldg. recovered from him by replevin.¹

Infant Not Liable for Depreciation in Property. — The vendor must take the property in the condition in which he finds it, except perhaps where the property was tortiously injured by the infant, and the latter cannot be made to make good the loss from depreciation.²

Contracts of Sale. — The same principle applies where after maturity the infant disaffirms a contract of sale, and seeks to recover the lands or personalty conveyed under it; he must restore to the vendee so much of the consideration as remains in the infant's hands in specie. In a few jurisdictions the infant is not bound to tender the consideration as a precedent to disaffirmance, the act merely giving to the vendee a right to its recovery,³ but in most states it is held that where it is shown that he has the power to restore the consideration, he cannot be allowed to rescind the contract of sale and recover the property without first making restitution.⁴

Restoration to Subsequent Purchaser. — But though the infant must restore to his vendee the whole consideration, or such part of it as remains in his possession, he is not required to restore to a subsequent purchaser the consideration which the latter may have paid to the infant's vendee.⁵

(ce) When the Nature of the Consideration Prevents Its Restoration. — A limitation upon the right of an infant to repudiate his contract and to recover whatever sum he may have paid upon it, has been held to occur when the contract is shown to be fair and reasonable, and to have been wholly or partially executed on both sides, so that the infant has enjoyed the benefits of it, or where the benefits are of such a nature that he cannot restore them. In such a case it has been held that he cannot recover.⁶

— Where the consideration of an infant's contract consisted partly of money paid for him and partly of an undertaking by the defendant involving uncertain risks, if the infant seeks to recover back money paid in execution of the contract, it must be left to the jury to determine what, under all the circumstances, it was reasonable the infant should engage to buy, and that sum should be allowed to the

Payments upon Life Insurance. — Thus if an infant obtains a policy of life insurance, and pays the premiums during his minority, he cannot, upon his disaffirmance of the contract on coming of age, recover the whole premiums, but only the excess above the value of the insurance which he has received.¹

Payments for Rent. — So it has been held that rent which an infant has paid upon a lease of land cannot be recovered by him upon his disaffirmance of the contract.²

bb. UNDER STATUTES. — Under the Code of California, an infant over eighteen years of age can disaffirm his contracts only upon condition that he restore the consideration to the party from whom it was received, or pay its equivalent.³ So in Indiana, restoration of the purchase money must be made to avoid the conveyance of an infant feme covert, in which her husband, being of full age, has joined,⁴ or to avoid the conveyance of an infant who falsely represents himself to be of age.⁵

(2) Who May Avail Himself of the Right — (a) Plea of Infancy a Personal Privilege. — The right of an infant to avoid contracts is personal to himself, and cannot be taken advantage of by an adult with whom he deals⁶ or by third defendant against the money paid in execution of the contract, and the balance if any recovered by the plaintiff. Heath v. Stevens, 48 N. H. 251.

The plaintiff, while an infant, in consideration of an outfit to enable him to go to California agreed to give the defendant, who furnished the outfit, one-third of all the avails of his labor during his absence, which agreement he performed. After coming of age he repudiated the contract, and sought to recover of the defendant the sum paid him, less the value of the outfit furnished. The jury having found that the agreement was fairly made, and for a reasonable consideration, and beneficial to the infant, it was held that he could not recover. Breed v. Judd, 1 Gray (Mass.) 455. See also Craighead v. Wells, 21 Mo. 404.

Executed Agency. — If an infant directs that money in the hands of his brother should be used by him for the support of their parents, and the brother applies the money as instructed the infant cannot, on coming of age, recover the sum from the brother. Welch v. Welch, 103 Mass. 562.

persons in any collateral proceedings.¹ When an adult enters into a contract with an infant, he does so at his peril; for while the infant may decline to perform his part of the agreement, or may disaffirm it even after it has been fully performed, the adult is bound by the contract as fully and completely as if the other party had been of full age, and he will be held liable for its breach.²

Specific Performance Not Enforceable. — It is because of this want of mutuality in the enforcement of contracts between infants and adults, that a court of equity will not ordinarily decree specific performance in favor of the former.³

(b) Heirs and Personal Representatives. — Although the privilege of avoiding his contracts is said to be personal to the infant, it does not die with him, but, upon his death, descends to those who succeed to his estate⁴ or represent him.⁵

(c) Committee in Lunacy. — If the infant becomes insane, the right of avoidance may be exercised by his committee.¹

Executory Contracts and Contracts Respecting Personality. — But in other transactions, especially where personal property or executory contracts are involved, the infant may avoid at any time.⁸

This Distinction Is for the Infant's Benefit, to enable him to recover personal property before it is lost, or to avoid immediate consequences of his contracts, while land may be recovered at any time.¹

(b) How Soon After Majority — aa. TIME LIMITED BY STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS. — How soon after attaining majority the quondam infant, or those claiming under him, must disaffirm his contract or conveyance in order to make the plea of infancy effective, is a question upon which the decisions are at variance; but the preponderance of authority is that in contracts executed by infants, mere inertness or silence continued for a period less than that prescribed by the statute of limitations, unless accompanied by affirmative acts manifesting an intent to assent to the contract, will not bar the right to avoid it.²

When the Disabilities of Infancy and Coverture Concur at the time of the execution of the contract, or the latter begins before the former is released, the right to disaffirm continues until both disabilities are removed, and until the statutory period thereafter, without regard to the length of time which may elapse between the date of the contract and the time of the avoidance.³

Where the Infant Dies Before Attaining His Majority, leaving as his sole heir a minor, the latter is entitled to the statutory period after attaining his majority within which to disaffirm a conveyance by his ancestor,⁴ but if the infant dies after attaining majority, the statute of limitations begins to run from the moment he becomes of age, and will continue against his heirs, and no disability in the latter will arrest it.⁵

bb. DISAFFIRMANCE WITHIN REASONABLE TIME. — The other doctrine in regard to the time when disaffirmance must be made is that the privilege of avoiding his acts must be exercised by the infant or those in privity with him, with some regard to the rights of the other contracting party, and therefore it is held in many jurisdictions that the infant must exercise his election within a reasonable time after coming of age.⁶ In some jurisdictions the statutes pro-

d. RATIFICATION AND CONFIRMATION — (1) In General. — The conception of a voidable contract not only includes the idea that it may be avoided, but also that it may be ratified and confirmed.³

Under the Revised Statutes of Illinois, c. 24, § 10, a person must commence an action to recover land alienated by him within three years after attaining his majority. Blankenship v. Stout, 25 Ill. 132; Cole v. Pennoyer, 14 Ill. 158.

Thus it would be material to inquire whether the minor was a nonresident of the state on attaining his majority, to ascertain his capacity for transacting business; what influences, if any, were brought to bear upon him by those interested in preventing a disaffirmance; whether any suits were pending, the determination of which was material in electing to disaffirm. These and many other inquiries would naturally and properly arise in considering what would be "reasonable time." Jenkins v. Jenkins, 12 Iowa 199.

If an infant disaffirms a contract of purchase of land within four months after reaching his majority, it is within a reasonable time. Rapid Transit Land Co. v. Sanford, (Tex. Civ. App. 1893) 24 S. W. Rep. 587.

A note and mortgage having been executed by an infant, her disaffirmance thereof within three and one-half months after she attained majority is held to have been within a reasonable time, it not appearing that there was during said time any material change in the relation of the parties to the securities or in the value of the mortgaged land. Thormaehlen v. Kaepffel, 86 Wis. 378.

In Green v. Wilding, 59 Iowa 679, 44 Am. Rep. 696, where the plaintiff did not bring action until three years and eight months after attaining her majority, and three months after being legally advised that she could disaffirm, it was held that the action was not brought within a reasonable time. The fact that she was informed by persons not qualified to give legal advice, that she could not bring action until her infant brother became of age, was not, in the eye of the law, a sufficient reason for delay.

afterwards disavow it, and to make it obligatory as against the defense of infancy. The confirmation reaches back and renders the original contract binding from the time it was made, and the agreement, having in its entirety received the assent of the promisor after the ceasing of his disability, is made in all its parts the binding contract of the parties.¹ So if an infant grantor, after arriving at full age, ratifies a conveyance made by him during infancy, he will have no power to revoke the ratification and disaffirm such conveyance thereafter.²

(2) Who May Ratify and Confirm. — Ratification may be made by the quondam infant, or after his death by his personal representative.³

The Disability of Coverture does not preclude a married woman from affirming her deed executed while an infant feme sole.⁴

Ratification by an Agent is good if the agent is duly authorized to act.⁵

(3) When Ratification May Be Made. — No binding ratification of a contract can be made by an infant until he comes of age,⁶ for, all his acts being voidable, the ratification would be no more effective than the contract which he essays to confirm. A ratification made after majority will not avail in the case of an executory contract, unless made before suit is brought upon it.⁷

(4) Mode of Ratification — (a) Executory Contracts — aa. EXPRESS RATIFICATION — (aa.) In General. — An express ratification of an executory contract made during infancy will be effected by the use of any words by the debtor which clearly indicate an intention to pay the debt.⁸

The Terms of the Ratification need not be such as import a direct promise to pay. All that is necessary is that the debtor should expressly recognize his contract by words which import its confirmation.⁹

2. Confirmation of Conveyance. — Hastings v. Dollarhide, 24 Cal. 195; Curry v. St. John Plow Co., 55 Ill. App. 82.

The ratification relates back to delivery so as to cut out intermediate voluntary conveyances. Palmer v. Miller, 25 Barb. (N. Y.) 399.

Arresting Statute of Limitations. — If a minor makes a payment on a joint note given by him and an adult, and after he comes of age makes an oral promise to pay the balance, he thereby so ratifies his former payment that it will take the note out of the operation of the statute of limitations as to himself, but not as to the adult. Peirce v. Tobey, 5 Met. (Mass.) 168.

3. An Executor or Administrator May Ratify the contract of his intestate made during his infancy, although the intestate died before he attained his majority; and such ratification will be obligatory, though it was verbally made, without any new consideration. Jefford v. Ringgold, 6 Ala. 544.

Illustrations of Ratification. — The recognition after majority of the existence of a debt contracted during infancy, coupled with a promise to pay it, is a ratification. Hartley v. Wharton, 11 Ad. & El. 934, 39 E. C. L. 276; Barnaby v. Barnaby, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 221; Bobo v. Hansell, 2 Bailey L. (S. Car.) 114.

After Majority, Authorizing a Banker or Agent to Pay an obligation made during infancy, is a ratification. Hunt v. Massey, 5 B. & Ad. 902, 27 E. C. L. 230; Orvis v. Kimball, 3 N. H. 314.

A person, while a minor, executed a note for part of the purchase price of land. After he attained his majority, he and the vendor made an arrangement by which the latter agreed to remit the accrued interest, and the former promised to keep the land and pay the principal of the note. It was held that this amounted to an affirmation of the contract, at least to the extent of the amount promised to be paid. Houlton v. Manteuffel, 51 Minn. 185.

What Is Not a Ratification. — Where an infant, who was sued on a note given for two old slaves, after he came of age proposed in writing to give them back and pay half the note, and added: "If they will not accept of the above offer I will have to pay them, I suppose, but I shall do so at my convenience, as it will be nothing less than a free gift on my part," it was held that this was no such new promise as would avoid the plea of infancy. Dunlap v. Hales, 2 Jones L. (47 N. Car.) 381.

(bb) Acknowledgment of Liability Insufficient. — A mere acknowledgment of liability, however, such as will suffice to arrest the statute of limitations, will not have that effect.¹

(cc) Necessity of Writing. — At common law a merely verbal promise is sufficient to constitute a ratification,² but by statute in England it is now provided that no action shall be maintained to charge any person upon any promise made after full age to pay any debt contracted during infancy, or upon any ratification after full age of any promise or simple contract made during infancy, unless such promise or ratification shall be made by some writing signed by the party to be charged therewith.³ This statute has been substantially re-enacted in several of the United States.⁴

(dd) Ratification Must Be Voluntary. — A ratification, in order to be effective, must be deliberately and voluntarily made; for if it be extorted from the promisor by threats, it will not avail.⁵

(ee) Knowledge of Nonliability. — It has also been held by some courts that the ratification must be made by the promisor with knowledge of his nonliability;⁶

A Promise to Pay a Part of the Debt is binding only as to that part. Edgerly v. Shaw, 25 N. H. 514, 57 Am. Dec. 349.

The Promise Must Be that the Promisor Will Pay, and not that some one else will. Mawson v. Blane, 26 Eng. L. & Eq. 560.

In Ford v. Phillips, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 202, the defendant, after he became of age, acknowledged that he owed the plaintiff, but said he was unable to pay him, and would endeavor to get his brother bound with him. This was held to be no ratification of the contract. See also Hale v. Gerrish, 8 N. H. 374.

In Hale v. Gerrish, 8 N. H. 374, the defendant in reply to the plaintiff's question said, "Yes, I owe the debt, and you will get your pay; and I suppose that is all you want," but at the same time refused to give a note for the debt. It was held that this was a mere acknowledgment of indebtedness and not a ratification.

An Acknowledgment to Keep the Statute from Running, and a Ratification to Repel the Plea of Infancy, were early distinguished. While it was held that the slightest acknowledgment was sufficient for the former purpose, nothing but an express ratification made after reaching maturity would deprive an infant of the protection thrown around him by the law. Dunlap v. Hales, 2 Jones L. (47 N. Car.) 381. See also Wilcox v. Roath, 12 Conn. 550; Edmunds v. Mister, 58 Miss. 765; Tibbets v. Gerrish, 25 N. H. 41, 57 Am. Dec. 307.

6. Knowledge of Nonliability Necessary. — but these decisions are founded upon a dictum,¹ and are contrary to the general principle that ignorance of law will not excuse. It is the better rule that the promisor need not be aware of his right to avoid the contract.² If, however, deliberate advantage is taken of the promisor's ignorance, it seems that a court of equity will avoid the ratification.³

(ff) To Whom Made. — The affirmance must be made to the party in interest; a promise to a stranger is but a declaration of intention, and will not avail.⁴

A Promise to an Agent of the Creditor is sufficient, although there is no evidence that the party disclosed his agency at the time, or that the promisor had knowledge of it.⁵

(gg) Conditional Ratification. — As a person may wholly avoid a contract made during infancy, a fortiori he may avoid it in part or may undertake a conditional performance of it.⁶ If a ratification be conditional, the condition must be shown to have happened or have been complied with, before an action can be maintained.⁷

An Engagement to Pay When Able is a conditional promise, and the promisor, to avail himself of it, must prove the ability of the promisor.⁸ It would not be necessary to show an ability to pay without inconvenience, but evidence that there is property from which the debt might be paid, or an income from some source which would enable the promisor to pay, would be sufficient.⁹

bb. IMPLIED RATIFICATION — (aa) Retention or Disposition of Consideration — Retention of Land Purchased. — If an infant enters upon real estate purchased by him, and after attaining full age continues in possession, exercising acts of ownership

3. Equitable Relief from Confirmation. — In Brooke v. Gally, 2 Atk. 34, a young man at college contracted a debt of fifty-nine pounds for wines sent to his lodgings during a period of five months. A few days after he came of age his creditor prevailed on him to give a note for the amount, without producing any account or delivering him a bill. Lord Chancellor Hardwicke, upon the circumstances of the case, decreed the note to be delivered up and canceled.

4. Promise to Party. — Chandler v. Glover, 32 Pa. St. 509; Bigelow v. Grannis, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 120; Goodsell v. Myers, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 479. See also Mayer v. McLure, 36 Miss. 389, 72 Am. Dec. 190.

5. Hoyt v. Underhill, 10 N. H. 220, 34 Am. Dec. 148.

6. Conditional Ratification. — Thompson v. Lay, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 48, 16 Am. Dec. 325; Peacock v. Binder, 57 N. J. L. 374.

But in Minock v. Shortridge, 21 Mich. 304, it was held that the agreement of a party to terms which created a conditional or restrictive liability for, or on account of, the contract made during the minority of the promisor, is not a ratification of the contract, but becomes, upon the condition being performed, a new contract, and as such becomes binding from its date.

A conditional promise by one, after reaching his majority, to pay a note given during his infancy, the promise being hedged about with the statement that he will pay when he can do so without inconvenience to himself, and with a refusal to fix a time for payment, does not amount to a ratification. Bresee v. Stanly, 119 N. Car. 278.

7. Proctor v. Sears, 4 Allen (Mass.) 95; Thompson v. Lay, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 48, 16 Am. Dec. 325.

8. Engagement to Pay When Able. — Kendrick v. Neisz, 17 Colo. 506; Thompson v. Lay, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 48, 16 Am. Dec. 325; Proctor v. Sears, 4 Allen (Mass.) 95; Everson v. Carpenter, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 419; Chandler v. Glover, 32 Pa. St. 509; Bobo v. Hansell, 2 Bailey L. (S. Car.) 114.

Burden of Proof. — A conditional promise by an infant, after reaching maturity, to pay the debt when able, is not binding upon him unless the proof thereof be supplemented by proof of his ability to pay. The burden of showing such ability, by some evidence relating to his property or income, devolves upon the plaintiff. Kendrick v. Neisz, 17 Colo. 506.

9. Thompson v. Lay, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 48, 16 Am. Dec. 325.

over the property, it has been held that this amounts to a ratification of the contract of purchase, and renders him liable upon a note given for the purchase money.¹ But if he sells the land before attaining his majority, a mere retention of the proceeds after he becomes of age will not constitute a ratification.²

Retention of Goods Purchased. — So, upon like principle, if an infant buys goods on credit, and retains them in his own hands and uses them for his own purposes for an unreasonable time after he becomes of age, without restoring them to the seller or giving him notice of the intention to avoid the contract, this operates as a ratification of it, and renders the buyer liable in an action for the price of the goods.³ But the retention of property by the infant after he has tendered it back to the vendor and done all in his power to secure a rescission of the contract will not constitute a ratification.⁴

Sale of Property Purchased. — If an infant, after becoming of age, sells the property purchased, and receives the money for it, he must be considered as having elected to affirm the contract, and he cannot afterwards avoid the payment of the consideration.⁵

(bb) PART PAYMENT OF DEBT. — If an infant incurs a debt, a mere payment on account after coming of age is not a ratification of the balance of the debt.⁶

(b) Executed Contracts — aa. EXPRESS RATIFICATION. — Confirmation by Deed. — If, after attaining majority, a grantor takes up a deed executed during infancy, and recon-

1. Implied Ratification — Executory Contracts. — Henry v. Root, 33 N. Y. 526; Armfield v. Tate, 7 Ired. L. (29 N. Car.) 258; Dawey v. Burbank, 77 N. Car. 259. See also American Freehold Land Mortg. Co. v. Dykes, 111 Ala. 178, 56 Am. St. Rep. 38.

3. Retention of Goods Purchased. — Hilton v. Shepherd, 92 Me. 160; Benham v. Bishop, 9 Conn. 330, 23 Am. Dec. 358; McKamy v. Cooper, 81 Ga. 679; Boyden v. Boyden, 9 Met. (Mass.) 519; Philpot v. Sandwich Mfg. Co., 18 Neb. 54.

An infant, ten days before his majority, in the purchase of a note, drew an order on a third person, of the nonpayment of which he had notice. Being sued several years after, upon the order, it was held that his omission to return the note or disaffirm the contract, after he attained his majority, warranted the implication that he intended to abide by his contract, and countervailed the defense of infancy. Thomasson v. Boyd, 13 Ala. 419.

But if the infant assigns the goods purchased, to secure the payment of another debt, the retaining of these goods for sale by the minor as the servant of the assignee until after he becomes of full age, will not constitute a ratification. Thing v. Libbey, 16 Me. 55.

4. House v. Alexander, 105 Ind. 109, 55 Am. Rep. 189.

Retention of Goods by Attaching Officer. — An infant bought goods that were not necessities, and the sellers, three days before he came of age, brought an action against him for the price, and attached the goods on their writ. The goods remained in the hands of the attaching officer at the time of the trial of the action, and the defendant gave no notice to the plaintiffs, after he came of age, of his intention not to be bound by the contract of sale. It was held that there was not a ratification of the contract of sale, by the defendant, and that the action could not be maintained. Smith v. Kelley, 13 Met. (Mass.) 309.

5. Robinson v. Hoskins, 14 Bush (Ky.) 393; Boody v. McKenney, 23 Me. 517; Cheshire v. Barrett, 4 McCord L. (S. Car.) 241, 17 Am. Dec. 735.

Sale of Goods After Commencement of Suit. — If an infant disposes of personal property for which he has given his note in payment after suit has been commenced upon the note, the fact may be admitted in evidence to show a ratification of the contract of purchase. Curry v. St. John Plow Co., 55 Ill. App. 82.

6. Part Payment of Debt. — Thrupp v. Fielder, 2 Esp. 628; Ford v. Phillips, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 202.

The mere indorsement of a receipt of money, of date after the maker has attained majority, is not a ratification of a note given during infancy. Catlin v. Haddox, 49 Conn. 492, 44 Am. Rep. 249.

The fact that an infant who has purchased land and given his notes in payment of the purchase price, pays two of the notes within four months after coming of age, does not of itself constitute a ratification of the contract. Rapid Transit Land Co. v. Sanford, (Tex. Civ. App. 1893) 24 S. W. Rep. 587. Compare Hook v. Donaldson, 9 Lea (Tenn.) 56.

No Ratification of Partnership. — Upon the dissolution of a firm composed of A, a minor, and B, an adult, A sold and conveyed to B all his interest in the partnership property, for which he received B's note secured by a mortgage on personal property, and his obligation to pay the debts of the firm. After coming of age, A proved his note against the estate of B, who had taken the benefit of the insolvent law, and also instituted proceedings with a view to enforce his claim under the mortgage. It was held that by these proceedings A did not ratify the partnership or make himself liable for the partnership debts. Dana v. Stearns, 3 Cush. (Mass.) 372.

Redelivery of Deed. — So if a grantor redelivers a deed which he has made during infancy, this is a confirmation of it.²

Verbal Confirmation. — It has been held that a verbal declaration made by a grantor, evidencing an intention to be bound by his conveyance, is a ratification;³ but a mere promise upon some contingency to make a deed of affirmance is not.⁴

Registry Laws. — It has been held, however, that the ratification of a deed made by an infant is within the policy of the registry laws, and must be registered in order to defeat the title of a subsequent purchaser from the grantor after his majority.⁵

Married Women. — It has also been held that a married woman cannot, after attaining her majority, affirm her deed made while she was an infant feme covert, by an instrument which is not executed in conformity with the statute regulating the conveyance of lands by married women.⁶

bb. IMPLIED RATIFICATION — (aa) In General. — If a contract be executed, any slight acknowledgment of liability, or admission of the contract, is a sufficient ratification of it.⁷ So, if an infant, after attaining his majority, continues to occupy a position explicable only on the supposition that he intends to stand by his contract, he will be considered as having ratified it.⁸

Ratification a Question of Fact. — The question as to what acts will or will not amount to a confirmation is one of intention, to be submitted to the jury

1. By Deed. — Phillips v. Green, 5 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 344; Cox v. McGowan, 116 N. Car. 131. See also as to mortgage deed In re Foulkes, 3 Reports 682, 69 L. T. N. S. 183.

2. Davidson v. Young, 38 Ill. 145; Murray v. Shanklin, 4 Dev. & B. L. (20 N. Car.) 289.

3. Verbal Confirmation of Deed. — In Houser v. Reynolds, 1 Hayw. (2 N. Car.) 143, the declaration of a grantor, "I will never take advantage of my having been an infant at the time of executing the deed, and it is my wish that you should keep the land," was held to be a confirmation of the deed.

In Ferguson v. Bell, 17 Mo. 347, an infant executed a deed, and after coming of age expressed satisfaction with her bargain, received part of the consideration money, and spoke of her intention to make an affirmatory deed, but died suddenly without doing so. It was held that her acts and declarations were sufficient ratification.

4. Clamorgan v. Lane, 9 Mo. 446.

An Offer to Make a Deed of Ratification upon the condition that the unpaid purchase price is paid or secured, is not evidence of confirmation. It rather shows a disposition to disaffirm should the proposed condition not be performed. Craig v. Van Bebber, 100 Mo. 584, 18 Am. St. Rep. 569.

5. Effect of Registry Laws. — An infant conveyed land, and on attaining his majority ratified the conveyance. He afterwards conveyed to a third person, who had notice of the deed made during infancy but no notice of the ratification. It was held that the last named purchaser held the land; the court saying that if the ratification of a deed made in infancy is by a written instrument, such instrument is within the policy of the registry laws, but if it is by acts in pais, notice of such acts must be brought home to the subsequent purchaser. Black v. Hills, 36 Ill. 376, 87 Am. Dec. 224; Holbrook v. Dickinson, 56 Ill. 500. And see Weaver v. Carpenter, 42 Iowa 343; Mustard v.

Wohlford, 15 Gratt. (Va.) 329, 76 Am. Dec. 209.

7. Implied Ratification of Executed Contracts. — Middleton v. Hoge, 5 Bush (Ky.) 478; Ihley v. Padgett, 27 S. Car. 300.

Where the contract is executed, ratification may be inferred from circumstances, and any acknowledgment of liability by the infant after coming of age, or holding the property and treating it as his own, will amount to such ratification. Petty v. Rousseau, 94 N. Car. 315.

The cases generally show a repugnance to setting aside a solemn deed at the caprice of an infant. So it is said that a deed will be confirmed by any deliberate act after twenty-one, "by which the infant takes benefit under the deed, or expressly recognizes its validity." McCormic v. Leggett, 8 Jones L. (53 N. Car.) 425; Irvine v. Irvine, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 617; Phillips v. Green, 5 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 344; Scott v. Buchanan, 11 Humph. (Tenn.) 468.

8. Askey v. Williams, 74 Tex. 294.

If an Infant Submits a Claim to Arbitration, and, after attaining full age, receives from his guardian the sum awarded and omits to disaffirm the submission for two years, he will be held to have ratified it, and cannot enforce his original claim. Jones v. Phoenix Bank, 8 N. Y. 228.

Payment of Annuity in Lien of Dower. — Accepting an estate free of dower, and entering into and enjoying it for several years after coming of age, is a ratification of the contract by the heir to pay an annuity to the widow in lieu of dower. Barnaby v. Barnaby, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 221.

An Infant Legatee Accepted the Note of the Executor in Payment of a Legacy then due and payable, and held the note after attaining her majority. It was held in a suit brought on the residuary legatee's bond, that the retention of the note was not of itself a ratification. Durfee v. Abbott, 61 Mich. 471.

under proper instructions from the court.¹

(bb) Sales and Conveyances of Property — Failure to Disaffirm. — In those states where the doctrine obtains that an infant must disaffirm his contracts within a reasonable time after attaining majority, it follows that a failure so to disaffirm operates as a ratification of the contract.²

Equitable Circumstances. — Even in those states where this doctrine does not obtain, mere acquiescence, when accompanied by other circumstances, may sometimes constitute a confirmation.³ Thus, if an infant grantor, after coming of age, sees the purchaser making large expenditures in valuable improvements upon the land, and says nothing in disaffirmance for a long time, it has been held that he will be estopped from afterwards disaffirming his conveyance.⁴

(cc) Mortgage Given by Infant. — A mortgage executed by an infant on his lands will be ratified by any conduct on his part, after attaining majority, which manifests an intention to abide by his contract.⁵

Conveying Lands Subject to Mortgage. — If, after coming of age, he conveys the same land subject to the mortgage, the second deed is a confirmation of the first.⁶

Purchase-money Mortgage. — If an infant purchases land, and at the same time reconveys it in mortgage as security for the purchase money, the transaction must stand or fall as a whole; and the ratification of the purchase by the infant after he becomes of age ratifies the mortgage.⁷ Hence, if he sells the land after reaching majority, this will be considered a confirmation of the mortgage,⁸ constituting it a valid charge upon the land in the hands of the purchaser.⁹

1. Question for Jury. — Durfee v. Abbott, 61 Mich. 471.

If there is any evidence of ratification it is for the jury to determine whether there is an affirmation or not. Irvine v. Irvine, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 617.

Failure of Infant to Assert Title. — The fact that an infant whose property is sold by another person, knowing of the sale, neglects to state his title to the purchaser, does not estop him from afterwards recovering the property, for the law presumes the infant to be incapable of understanding or protecting his rights. Norris v. Wait, 2 Rich. L. (S. Car.) 148, 44 Am. Dec. 283.

(Tenn.) 41, 26 Am. Dec. 251. See also ante, the title IMPROVEMENTS, p. 62.

5. The Payment of Interest Coupon Notes, after attaining majority, is a ratification of a mortgage given by an infant. American Mortg. Co. v. Wright, 101 Ala. 658.

Recital in Second Mortgage. — A recital in a mortgage that it is made subject to a prior mortgage by the mortgagor while an infant, is a confirmation of the first mortgage. Ward v. Anderson, 111 N. Car. 115.

Procuring Releases of Portions of Mortgaged Premises. — If, after attaining majority, the mortgagor procures releases of portions of the mortgaged premises, and does not raise the question as to the validity of the mortgage until foreclosure proceedings are begun, more than two years after the mortgagor becomes of age, such acts will be considered as a confirmation. Wilson v. Darragh, (Supm. Ct. Gen. T.) 7 N. Y. Supp. 810.

Confirmation by Will. — A provision in a will, directing that all the just debts of the testator be satisfied, has been held to be an affirmation of a mortgage executed to secure the repayment of a loan while the testator was an infant, although the instrument was not mentioned in the will. Merchants' F. Ins. Co. v. Grant, 2 Edw. (N. Y.) 544.

6. Conveyance Subject to Mortgage. — Losey v. Bond, 94 Ind. 67; Boston Bank v. Chamberlin, 15 Mass. 220; Allen v. Poole, 54 Miss. 323; Eagle F. Co. v. Lent, 1 Edw. (N. Y.) 301, 6 Paige (N. Y.) 635.

9. Lynde v. Budd, 2 Paige (N. Y.) 191, 21 Am. Dec. 84.

Permitting Judgment by Default. — An infant gave a mortgage which was foreclosed some time after she became of age, and though personally served she allowed the bill to be taken as confessed, apparently without any disposition to contest it. It was held that she had no equity entitling her to set up a defense of infancy to defeat a subsequent bill brought by an assignee of the foreclosure decree to enforce it against her. Terry v. McClintock, 41 Mich. 492.

(dd) Lease of Land by Infant. — If an infant makes a lease of land for a term extending beyond the time of his infancy, and after coming of age accepts rent upon the lease, this is a ratification of it, and he cannot afterwards avoid the lease.¹

(ee) Lease of Land to Infant. — If, after coming of age, a person continues in possession of premises leased to him during his infancy, this is a ratification of the lease, and renders all its provisions obligatory upon him.²

(ff) Contracts of Service. — If an infant continues in the service of a master after coming of age, on the same terms, he will be held to have ratified the contract of service.³

VIII. LIABILITY FOR TORTS — 1. Pure Torts — a. IN GENERAL. — The principle is well settled that an infant is liable in an action ex delicto for all injuries to person or property committed by him. The privilege of infancy, being founded upon the infant's presumed want of prudence and discretion, cannot protect him from the consequences of his wrongful acts; for when civil injuries are committed by force, the intent of the perpetrator is not regarded.⁴

Joining in Suit as Colibellant. — A sailor, four months after coming of age, having heard that his associates had libeled a vessel for their wages, obtained the services of the same lawyer who was acting for the rest, and joined in the suit. He was not an intelligent or a provident person, and joined in the suit simply because the others had done so. It was held that this was not a sufficient ratification of his contract for service. Burdett v. Williams, 30 Fed. Rep. 697.

Enjoining Breach of Ratified Contract of Service. — The defendant while an infant entered the plaintiff's service, and executed a penal bond conditioned that he would not solicit their customers after the expiration of his term of service. He remained in the plaintiff's employ for five years after reaching majority, and then left their service, and committed a breach of the agreement not to solicit their customers. It was held that the continuance in service was a ratification of the contract, and that an injunction should be granted to restrain the breach on its terms. Brown v. Harper, 3 Reports 585, 63 L. T. N. S. 488.

Assault and Battery. — Infancy is no defense to a suit to recover compensatory damages for an assault and battery. Conway v. Reed, 66 Mo. 346, 27 Am. Rep. 354.

In Bullock v. Babcock, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 391, the defendant, when about twelve years of age, shot an arrow and hit the plaintiff, putting out one of his eyes. Although the injury was unintentional the defendant was held

The Extent of the Infant's Liability, however, seems to be limited to compensatory damages,¹ even in the case of slander,² although there seems to be no good reason why an infant who is of sufficient age and discretion to be criminally responsible for his acts should not, in a case where malice was distinctly shown, have judgment for exemplary damage rendered against him.

b. COERCION OF PARENT OR GUARDIAN. — The fact that a minor commits a trespass by the command of his parent or guardian does not affect his liability to respond in damages.³

c. LIABILITY FOR ACTS OF AGENT. — An infant's liability also extends to torts which he procures another to commit.⁴

Authority to Commit Act Must Be Express. — These acts, however, must be committed under the infant's immediate direction or by his express authority, for as he cannot legally create an agent, he cannot be held responsible for the torts of one assuming to act under his implied authority.⁵ Hence he cannot be held liable for the malicious prosecution of a suit brought in his name by his next friend, without his knowledge, although he afterwards assents to it, before he comes of age;⁶ but he would be, it seems, if he carried on such a suit after arriving at full age.⁷

2. Torts Connected with or Growing out of Contracts — a. IN GENERAL — When Infant Is Not Liable. — But while an infant is liable for his torts, he is not liable for the tortious consequences of his breaches of contract, and though the action may be in form as for a tort, yet if the subject of it be based on contract, the suit will be attended with all the incidents of an action ex contractu. The principle is as well established as any rule of the common law, that a plaintiff cannot convert an action, founded on a contract, into a tort in order to deprive the defendant of the benefit of his plea of infancy.⁸

Form of Action Not Material. — It is the substance of the action, therefore, and not the form, which determines the infant's liability, for though the infant cannot be held liable in tort for a cause the substantial ground of which is contract,⁹ yet he may, on the other hand, be sued in assumpsit where the liable. See also Peterson v. Haffner, 59 Ind. 130, 26 Am. Rep. 81, stated under the title ASSAULT AND BATTERY, vol. 2, p. 989, note 4.

Seduction. — The plea of infancy is no bar to an action for damages for seduction. Lee v. Helley, 21 Ind. 98; Becker v. Mason, 93 Mich. 336; Fry v. Leslie, 87 Va. 269. See also Hamilton v. Lomax, 26 Barb. (N. Y.) 615.

Frightening Horses. — An infant is liable in an action ex delicto for throwing a lighted firecracker under a horse, where it exploded and caused his death from fright. Conklin v. Thompson, 29 Barb. (N. Y.) 218. Or for causing the plaintiff's horse to run away and throw the plaintiff out of his wagon, by hitting the horse with a baseball while negligently engaged in a game near a highway. Neal v. Gillett, 23 Conn. 437.

Nuisance. — An infant occupying land is liable for a nuisance and injury to neighbors for the negligent use of his land. McCoon v. Smith, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 147, 38 Am. Dec. 623; McCabe v. O'Connor, 4 N. Y. App. Div. 354.

Trespass upon Land. — An infant six years old is liable in damages for breaking and entering the plaintiff's premises, and breaking down and destroying his shrubbery and flowers. Huchting v. Engel, 17 Wis. 230, 84 Am. Dec. 741.

Disseizin. — An infant is liable in ejectment, as disseizin is a tort. Marshall v. Wing, 50 Me. 62; Beckley v. Newcomb, 24 N. H. 363.

1. Compensatory Damages Only. — Peterson v. Haffner, 59 Ind. 130, 26 Am. Rep. 81; Conway v. Reed, 66 Mo. 354, 27 Am. Rep. 354; O'Brien v. Loomis, 43 Mo. App. 29; Huchting v. Engel, 17 Wis. 230, 84 Am. Dec. 741. See also the title EXEMPLARY DAMAGES, vol. 12, p. 23.

9. Jennings v. Rundall, 8 T. R. 335; Green v. Greenbank, 2 Marsh. 485, 4 E. C. L. 375; Prescott v. Norris, 32 N. H. 101; Wilt v. Welsh, substance of the demand is a tort.¹

When Infant Is Liable. — The mere fact, however, that the cause of action grows out of or is connected with a contract will not in every case shield the infant from liability. If the tort is subsequent to or independent of the contract, and not a mere breach of it, but is a distinct, wilful, and positive wrong in itself, then, notwithstanding the contract, the infant is liable.²

b. CONVERSION OF THINGS BAILED. — This distinction may be frequently observed in actions arising from injury to things bailed. While it is sometimes difficult to discriminate between acts that are to be regarded as mere breaches of contracts of bailment and positive and wilful torts, there are many cases where the distinction is clear.

Want of Skill and Care. — When the infant stipulates for ordinary skill and care in the use or preservation of the thing bailed, but fails for want of skill and experience, and not from any wrongful intent, it is in accordance with the policy of the law that his privilege, based upon his presumed want of capacity, should shield him. A failure in such a case from mere want of ordinary care or skill might well be regarded as in substance a breach of contract for which the infant is not liable, even though in ordinary cases an action ex delicto might be sustained.³

Wilful Injury to or Destruction of Thing Bailed. — But when, on the other hand, the infant wholly departs from his character as bailee, and by some positive act wilfully destroys or injures the thing bailed, or converts it to his own use, the act is in its nature essentially a tort, the same as if there had been no bailment, even if assumpsit might be maintained in the case of an adult, on an implied promise to return the thing safely.⁴

Hiring of Horses. — A common application of these principles arises in the use of hired horses. If an infant hires a horse to be moderately ridden or driven, and the infant from lack of experience rides or drives the horse immoderately, or injures him by unskilful management, it is a mere breach of contract, and

An infant is liable in assumpsit for money stolen and for the proceeds of property stolen by him and converted into money. Shaw v. Coffin, 58 Me. 254, 4 Am. Rep. 290; Elwell v. Martin, 32 Vt. 217.

3. Infant Bailee Not Liable for Want of Care. — Eaton v. Hill, 50 N. H. 235, 9 Am. Rep. 139.

4. Infancy Is No Defense to an Action of Trover, although the goods converted be in his possession in virtue of a previous contract. The conversion is still in its nature a tort; it is not an act of omission, but of commission, and is within that class of offenses for which infancy cannot afford protection. Vasse v. Smith, 6 Cranch (U. S.) 226.

In Lewis v. Littlefield, 15 Me. 233, an infant in whose hands money had been put by the plaintiff to abide the result of an illegal wager, and who paid it to the winner after a notice from the plaintiff not to do so, was held liable in trover.

In Green v. Sperry, 16 Vt. 390, 42 Am. Dec. 519, the defendant, who was an infant, borrowed the plaintiff's watch for a week, and afterwards refused or neglected to return it. It was held he was liable for its conversion.

If an infant receives goods for the purpose of bestowing labor on them, and subsequently refuses to return them on demand, he is liable for the conversion. Mills v. Graham, 1 B. & P. N. R. 140; Peigne v. Sutcliffe, 4 McCord L. (S. Car.) 387, 17 Am. Dec. 756.

Conversion of Crop by Infant Lessee. — The infancy of a lessee constitutes no defense to an action of trover for the conversion of the crop raised upon the leased premises, since his liability does not arise from any breach of contract, but from an unlawful appropriation of the lessor's property. Baxter v. Bush, 29 Vt. 465, 70 Am. Dec. 429.

Conversion, However, Is Always to Be Distinguished from the Breach of a Contract to sell and account for the proceeds. Munger v. Hess, 28 Barb. (N. Y.) 75; Burns v. Hill, 19 Ga. 22.

If money is left with an infant to be paid over to a third party, and it is contemplated that merely the sum deposited and not the specific money is to be paid, the transaction creates the relation of debtor and creditor between the parties and not that of bailor and bailee, and the infant's misappropriation of the money is not a conversion of it, rendering him liable in trover. Root v. Stevenson, 24 Ind. 115.

Replevin. — Where goods are detained by an infant in violation of a contract of conditional sale, replevin, being an action of tort, is maintainable against him. Wheeler, etc., Mfg. Co. v. Jacobs, (C. Pl. Gen. T.) 2 Misc. (N. Y.) 236.

the plea of infancy is a complete defense to an action therefor.¹ But if the infant wilfully and intentionally injures the animal,² or uses him for a different purpose from that for which he was hired,³ or drives him elsewhere or beyond the place contemplated in the contract,⁴ it is a conversion of the animal which terminates the bailment, and renders the infant liable in trover for its value.

c. FRAUD IN MAKING CONTRACTS — (1) Fraud in Sale of Property. — It is the general rule that infancy is a good defense to an action on the case for deceit and false warranty in the sale of property.⁵

(2) Fraud in Purchase of Property — (a) In General. — If an infant vendee obtains possession of goods through the pretense of a purchase, but intending at the time not to pay for them, the vendor may, on discovering the fraud, reclaim the goods by replevin, as never having parted with his property in them,⁶ or, if the vendee has disposed of the goods, recover judgment in case or in trover against him for their value.⁷ An action to enforce damages for

In Jennings v. Rundall, 8 T. R. 335, the defendant, a lad, hired the plaintiff's mare to ride a short distance, and in the course of the journey an accident happened, the mare being strained. In an action for damages Lord Kenyon, C. J., said: "The question is whether this action can be maintained. I am clearly of opinion that it cannot. It is founded on a contract. If it were in the power of a plaintiff to convert that which arises out of a contract into a tort, there would be an end of that protection which the law affords to infants."

2. Campbell v. Stakes, 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 139, 19 Am. Dec. 561.

3. Use of Horse for Different Purpose. — In Burnard v. Haggis, 14 C. B. N. S. 45, 108 E. C. L. 45, the defendant, an infant, hired a horse for riding, on the express condition that it was not to be used for jumping. He went out with a friend, who rode this horse, by his desire, and making a cut across country, they jumped divers hedges and ditches, and the horse staked himself on a fence and was fatally injured. It was held that the defendant was liable.

Departure from Route. — Fish v. Ferris, 5 Duer (N. Y.) 49.

In Walley v. Holt, 35 L. T. N. S. 631, an infant hired a horse and cart to go to C. and back, and with the express agreement that he should go nowhere else and carry but two persons. He drove to B., four miles beyond C., and on the return trip carried four persons. He also beat and abused the horse, which, in consequence of this treatment, had to be killed. The infant was held liable.

In Towne v. Wiley, 23 Vt. 355, 56 Am. Dec. 85, in an action of trover for a horse, it appeared that the defendant, an infant, hired of the plaintiff the horse in question to go to a certain place and back the same day. The defendant went to the place specified, but returned by a circuitous route, nearly doubling the distance, and while on his return stopped at a house from about eight o'clock in the evening until four o'clock the next morning.

The night was cold and windy, and the horse was exposed during the whole night without sheltering or covering of any kind, in consequence of which overdriving and exposure he died. It was held that the use of the horse in this way was a departure from the object of the bailment, and constituted a conversion for which the defendant was liable.

A Plaintiff Loaned a Horse to One H., Who Exchanged It for Another Horse with the defendant, who was a minor, without the consent of the plaintiff, but on a stipulation that the exchange was not to be final until it was ratified by him. In a few days after the exchange took place, the plaintiff refused to ratify it, and insisted upon having his own horse restored to him, but the defendant refused to restore it. In an action of detinue to recover the horse, the defendant interposed a plea of infancy, which he fully sustained by proof, but it was held that the action of detinue, when founded on a conversion and detention, is in fact an action ex delicto, and that infancy was no defense. Oliver v. McClellan, 21 Ala. 675.

Contra. — For cases denying the validity of the principle stated in the text, see Schenk v. Strong, 4 N. J. L. 97; Penrose v. Curren, 3 Rawle (Pa.) 351, 24 Am. Dec. 356; Wilt v. Welsh, 6 Watts (Pa.) 9.

5. Fraud in Sale of Property. — An action upon the case in nature of deceit, on sale by the defendant of goods as his own, whereas in truth they were another's, does not lie against an infant. Grove v. Nevill, 1 Keb. 778; Doran v. Smith, 49 Vt. 353.

So an infant is not liable for false representation as to the soundness of a horse. Green v. Greenbank, 2 Marsh. 485, 4 E. C. L. 375; Howlett v. Haswell, 4 Campb. 118; Prescott v. Norris, 32 N. H. 101; Morrill v. Aden, 19 Vt. 505; West v. Moore, 14 Vt. 447, 39 Am. Dec. 235; Gilson v. Spear, 38 Vt. 311, 88 Am. Dec. 659.

In Walker v. Davis, 1 Gray (Mass.) 506, it such a tort is not an attempt to enforce the contract indirectly by counting on the infant's refusal to perform it, for no contract existed, but recovery is allowed for the damages occasioned by the wrongful and fraudulent act of the infant.

(b) False Representations as to Age. — How far this principle applies when the infant's fraud consists merely in his assertion, when he made the contract, that he was of age, is a disputed question. In some jurisdictions it is held that such an assertion, though fraudulently made, is not enough to rob the infant of his plea,¹ but the weight of authority is that if the plaintiff was induced to believe that the defendant was of age when the contract was entered into, by the positive affirmation of the defendant to that effect, and the defendant sought to entrap the plaintiff into the contract which he then secretly intended to repudiate to his own profit and the plaintiff's loss, the case falls within that class of cases which hold infants liable for their frauds though they originate in contracts.²

This Result Is No Violation of the Principle that an infant is not liable in any form of action where the consequence of a recovery would be an indirect enforcement of a contract, for the recovery is not upon the contract, as that is treated as of no effect; nor is he made to pay the contract price of the article purchased by him, as he is only held to answer for the actual loss caused by his fraud.³

IX. CRIMINAL RESPONSIBILITY AND PUNISHMENT OF INFANTS — 1. Criminal Responsibility — a. MENTAL CAPACITY — (1) In General. — One of the essential elements of crime is that the act upon which the charge is predicated should have been committed with a criminal intent.⁴ No matter how serious the consequences of an unlawful deed may be, unless the perpetrator was doli capax, that is, mentally capable of entertaining a criminal intent, he cannot receive the punishment of the law. An infant's criminal responsibility, consequently, does not begin until he has developed sufficient intelligence and moral perception to distinguish between right and wrong, and to comprehend the legal consequences of his acts.⁵

appeared that the defendant, an infant, intending to defraud the plaintiff, made the latter drunk, and took advantage of his condition to trade for a cow, giving him a promissory note in payment therefor. The note not being paid when due, the plaintiff brought an action upon it, in which action the defendant prevailed on a plea of infancy. The plaintiff then demanded a return of the cow, and the defendant not returning her, brought an action for her conversion. It was held that the action lay.

Giving Worthless Check. — If an infant obtains goods by giving a check upon a bank in which he has no funds, and which he has no reason to suppose will honor the check, he is guilty of fraud and liable to the vendor in case of trover. Mathews v. Cowan, 59 Ill. 341.

1. False Representations as to Age — Infant Not Liable. — Curtin v. Patton, 11 S. & R. (Pa.) 305; Nash v. Jewett, 61 Vt. 501, 15 Am. St. Rep. 931. See also Whitcomb v. Joslyn, 51 Vt. 79, 31 Am. Rep. 678.

In Johnson v. Pie, 1 Keb. 905, 913, 1 Lev. 169, where the defendant had falsely and fraudulently asserted himself to be of full age, and had as such executed a mortgage to the plaintiff, which he afterwards repudiated, it was held that the defendant was not answerable, because the action was founded on the very contract in which the defendant had cheated the plaintiff.

But mere silence by the infant does not constitute fraud. Stikeman v. Dawson, 1 De G. & Sm. 90.

2. Infant Liable. — Rice v. Boyer, 108 Ind. 472, 58 Am. Rep. 55; Fitts v. Hall, 9 N. H. 441; Eckstein v. Frank, 1 Daly (N. Y.) 334; Schunemann v. Paradise, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 46 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 426; Wallace v. Morss, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 391; Hughes v. Gallans, 10 Phila. (Pa.) 618, 31 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 349; Kilgore v. Jordan, 17 Tex. 341. See also Yeager v. Knight, 60 Miss. 730.

In Schmitheimer v. Eiseman, 7 Bush (Ky.) 298, it was held that a deed made by an infant feme covert cannot be avoided by her on the ground of her infancy, when, to induce an innocent purchaser to make the purchase, she and her husband made oath before a notary that to the best of their knowledge and information she was more than twenty-one years of age.

It is not necessary to show actual knowledge by the defendant of the unlawfulness of the act, if sufficient legal capacity to commit crime was otherwise proved. If capacity is

(2) Age at Which Criminal Responsibility Begins. — The precise age at which this state of mental development in children is attained varies necessarily according to the natural acuteness, education, and condition in life of each individual. In one child it is reached much earlier than in another, but in all the line between capacity and incapacity is so shadowy and uncertain that the law has wisely cut off all speculation upon the matter by arbitrarily fixing an age under which children are conclusively presumed to be incapable of crime, no matter what circumstances of mischievous discretion may appear in the particular case.¹ At common law this age was fixed at seven years,² but the tendency of modern legislation has been to increase the limit, being fixed in Texas at nine,³ in Illinois at ten,⁴ and in Arkansas even as high as twelve years of age.⁵

After a Child Has Reached the Age of Criminal Accountability he may, in a proper case, be convicted despite his tender years, for though the legal punishment of one so young is a lamentable occurrence, and one which the mind cannot sanction without a conflict of the emotions, yet, as it has been justly said, there are many crimes of a most heinous nature which children are very capable of committing, and it might be of dangerous consequences to the public to propagate the notion that children might commit such atrocious crime with impunity.⁶ Hence, instances are not lacking, though it must be admitted none of the cases are very recent, where children have been subjected to the severest punishments.⁷

Confessions. — The capacity to commit a crime necessarily supposes the established, knowledge may be presumed. Com. v. Mead, 10 Allen (Mass.) 398.

A Sense of Moral Guilt Only on the part of the infant, in the absence of a knowledge of his legal responsibility for his wrongful act, will not authorize a conviction. Willet v. Com. 13 Bush (Ky.) 230.

In State v. Yeargan, 117 N. Car. 706, where a boy under fourteen years of age was indicted for gambling with dice, it was held that he could not be convicted unless it was shown that he knew the act to be unlawful.

7. Infants Convicted of Murder. — In Godfrey v. State, 31 Ala. 323, 70 Am. Dec. 494, a slave boy between ten and eleven years of age was indicted for the murder of his master's child. The killing was done with a hatchet, from which the prisoner carefully washed the blood after committing the deed, and when questioned about the murder, said an Indian had done it. It appeared that he had been made very angry with the child the day before the murder, and had knocked the child down and threatened to kill him. He afterwards confessed to the murder, and was convicted and executed. See also Yorke's Case, Foster 70, 1 Hale P. C. 26 note, and instances mentioned in 4 Black. Com. 23.

In State v. Aaron, 4 N. J. L. 263, a slave boy under twelve years of age was convicted on his own confession of the murder of a child of two years by throwing him into a well.

In State v. Guild, 10 N. J. L. 163, 18 Am. Dec. 404, a negro boy between twelve and thirteen years of age was convicted of the murder of an old woman, and was executed. He confessed to have killed her in a fit of anger, engendered by her refusal to loan him a gun.

In Rex v. Wild, 1 Moody 452, a boy was indicted for the murder of a small child by pushing him off a bank into a pond, and was on his own confession convicted, and was transported for life.

Convictions of Manslaughter. — In State v. Milholland, 89 Iowa 5, a boy between thirteen and fourteen years of age was convicted of manslaughter, by drowning another, while in capacity to confess it. But the confessions of children, especially where the offense is highly penal, ought to be received with the strictest caution, and investigated with a desire to obviate their force. If from any circumstances the jury believe that the confession was incorrectly made, it ought to be disregarded; and unless corroborated by circumstances, should never in capital offenses warrant a conviction.¹

Cannot Plead Constraint of Parent. — An infant who is criminally responsible for his acts cannot plead in justification of them that he was under the constraint of a parent or master.²

(3) Burden of Proof as to Capacity — When upon Prosecution. — Although when an infant reaches the age of criminal accountability he forfeits that absolute exemption from legal punishment which has hitherto been accorded him, his want of discretion and self-control still entitles him to a compassionate consideration, and though the law no longer holds him absolutely incapable of crime, it considers him for many years prima facie so, and unless the prosecu-

Arson. — In Dean's Case, 1 Hale P. C. 25, 4 Black. Com. 23, a boy of eight years of age was tried for firing two barns, and it appearing that he had malicious revenge and cunning, he was found guilty, condemned, and hanged accordingly. Indictments for Larceny. — In the following cases children have been indicted for larceny, but have either been acquitted on trial or the verdict of guilty has been set aside for want of proof of mischievous discretion. Rex v. Owen, 4 C. & P. 236, 19 E. C. L. 362; Dove v. State, 37 Ark. 261; Com. v. French, Thach. Crim. Cas. (Mass.) 163; Walker's Case, 5 City Hall Rec. (N. Y.) 137; Stag's Case, 5 City Hall Rec. Assault with Intent to Kill. — In McCormack v. State, 102 Ala. 156, a boy was convicted of assault upon his schoolmaster with intent to kill.

Assaults and Batteries Between Children. — In the case of common assaults and batteries between children, where no serious damage is done, it is usually considered better to leave such matters to the correction which the parent or schoolmaster may in his discretion inflict, than give importance to it by bringing the offender into court. State v. Pugh, 7 Jones L. (52 N. Car.) 61. But if the battery be of an aggravated kind, or a deadly weapon be used, the offender may be indicted and punished. Hill v. State, 63 Ga. 578, 36 Am. Rep. 120. State v. Fowler, 52 Iowa 103; State v. Pugh, 7

Malicious Trespass. — In State v. Toney, 15 S. Car. 409, a boy under fourteen years of age was convicted of malicious trespass for injuring a cow.

Bastardy. — The fact that the father of a bastard child is an infant does not relieve him from a prosecution, under the statute, for its support. Chandler v. Com., 4 Met. (Ky.) 66.

Refusing to Support Wife. — A minor cannot be convicted under a statute, How. Stat. Mich., c. 51, for refusing to support his wife, if the testimony fails to show his emancipation, or that he is the owner of any property. People v. Todd, 61 Mich. 234.

Disposing of Mortgaged Goods. — An infant cannot be guilty of the statutory offense of disposing of personal property which he has mortgaged, for the reason that his subsequent disposition of the property disaffirms and renders void the previous mortgage. State v. Howard, 88 N. Car. 650; Jones v. State, 31 Tex. Crim. 252.

Larceny by Bailee. — But it has been held that an infant who receives the possession of personal property under a lease is indictable for larceny in disposing of it by sale. Reg. v. McDonald, 15 Q. B. D. 323.

False Pretenses. — And an infant may be convicted of obtaining goods under false pretenses when he represents himself to be the owner of property which does not belong to him and thus fraudulently induces the owner to sell the goods to him on credit. People v. Kendall, 25 Wend. (N. Y.) 399, 37 Am. Dec. 240.

But where a boy ten years old was indicted, together with his father and mother, for having coining implements in their possession, it was held that he could not be convicted, the court remarking that "it would be going too far to say that one so young was a joint possessor with them of the property." *Reg. v. tion establishes his capacity beyond a reasonable doubt, will not permit him to suffer for his deeds. This is the period of life which jurists have called the "dubious stage of discretion," and according to the common law extended from the seventh to the fourteenth year,¹ but by statute in some of the states it is made to terminate somewhat earlier.²

When upon the Accused. — After this period has terminated, the infant becomes presumptively capable of crime, and if he pleads his incapacity as a defense, the burden is upon him to establish it.³

Between the age of seven and the age of fourteen years, an infant shall be presumed to be incapable of committing crime, the presumption being very strong at seven and decreasing with the progress of his years. But this presumption may be encountered by proof; and if it shall appear by strong and irresistible evidence that he had sufficient discernment to distinguish good from evil, to comprehend the nature and consequences of his acts, he may be convicted and punished. State v. Aaron, 4 N. J. L. 263.

A charge of felony can be established against an infant of eleven years of age only by the strongest and clearest proof of his capacity to entertain a criminal intent. Angelo v. People, 96 Ill. 209, 36 Am. Rep. 132.

An instruction that the age of presumptive legal accountability for crime begins at eleven instead of fourteen is prejudicial error although the accused was concededly two months over fourteen years when he committed the act. Allen v. U. S., 150 U. S. 551.

2. Statutes. — In Minnesota and New York the age of presumptive legal incapacity ends at twelve. Penal Code Minn., § 17; State v. Kluseman, 53 Minn. 541; Penal Code N. Y., § 19.

Under the Texas Statutes (Pasch. Dig., art. 1638), which provides that no person shall be convicted of any offense committed between the years of nine and thirteen, "unless it shall appear by proof that he had discretion sufficient to understand the nature and illegality of the act constituting the offense," it is not sufficient for the state to prove that the defendant knew the difference between good and evil; nor is it enough to prove that the child had the intelligence of ordinary boys of his age. To warrant a conviction the state must prove that the defendant knew that the act charged was a great crime, prohibited by law under severe penalties. Wusnig v. State, 33 Tex. 651; Parker v. State, 20 Tex. App. 451; Carr v. State, 24 Tex. App. 562, 5 Am. St. Rep. 905; Keith v. State, 33 Tex. Crim. 341; Allen v. State, (Tex. Crim. 1896) 37 S. W. Rep. 757; Rocha v. State, 38 Tex. Crim. 69.

Where one charged with crime is above the age at which capacity to commit crime is presumed, his own testimony that he did not know it was wrong to do the act constituting the crime will not, in the absence of any evidence as to his mental capacity, tend to remove the presumption. State v. Kluseman, 53 Minn. 541.

defendant is upon him, since the reputed age of every one is a fact peculiarly within his own knowledge, as are also the persons by whom it can be directly proved. When no proof of the defendant's age is produced, the court and jury may determine it by inspection.¹

(5) Evidence. — To prove that a child is doli capax, witnesses who are acquainted with him may testify as to his mental capacity.²

Expert Testimony is also admissible for this purpose.³

Circumstantial Evidence. — But it is not necessary that such proof should be made by direct and positive testimony. In most instances circumstances of education, habits of life, general character, moral and religious instruction, and oftentimes the circumstances connected with the offense charged, may be so proved as to satisfy the jury whether the accused had the discretion required by the law.⁴

b. PHYSICAL CAPACITY — To Commit Rape or Attempt to Commit It. — In addition to the necessity of mental capacity to entertain a criminal intent, the crime of rape, from its peculiar characteristic, introduces another element, viz., the physical ability of the infant to commit it. This ability depends upon the fact of puberty.

The Common Law as it exists in England and as adopted in some of our states fixes the age of a boy's presumed puberty at fourteen years, and from considerations of decency refuses to admit evidence of its earlier existence. A boy under fourteen cannot, therefore, under this ruling be convicted of rape or of an attempt to commit it,⁵ though it seems he may be punished for an indecent assault.⁶

Rule in Some of the States. — In some of the states, however, this presumption has been held to be rebuttable, and if a boy though under fourteen be shown to be physically capable of committing the act, he may be convicted.⁷

2. Punishment — Exemption from Capital Punishment. — In Texas it is provided by statute that a person, for an offense committed before he arrived at the age of seventeen years, shall in no case be punished with death, but may, according to the nature and degree of the offense, be punished by imprisonment for life, or receive any of the other punishments affixed by the code to the offense of which he is guilty.⁸ The burden is, however, upon the defendant to prove his nonage.⁹

In Carr v. State, 24 Tex. App. 562, 5 Am. St. Rep. 905, it was decided that the opinions of nonexpert witnesses might be received upon the question of the defendant's capacity. Place of Imprisonment. — In some of the states statutes have been passed providing for the imprisonment of criminals under a prescribed age in the county jails instead of in the penitentiary.¹ In other states houses of correction have been provided by law for the reformation of infant offenders.²

X. STATUTES FOR THE PROTECTION OF INFANTS — 1. In General. — The statutes which have been enacted in the different states of the Union for the protection of the life,³ person, health, and morals of infants embrace so great a variety of subjects, and vary so widely in their provisions, that a concise compilation of them is impracticable. The most that will be attempted is a brief notice of some of the more important. These may be roughly classified under four general heads.

2. Regulations Concerning Custody and Care. — The first group of statutes concerns the custody and care of infants. These prescribe a punishment for the abandonment of infants,⁴ for trafficking in them, for enticing them from their parents, and kidnapping with intention to extort money,⁵ for the wilful and negligent abuse of them,⁶ and also make provision for the regulation, licensing, and inspection of infant boarding-houses.⁷

3. Employment of Infants. — The second group embraces prohibitions against the employment of infants under a prescribed age in certain occupations. These are intended to forbid, first, such occupations as are hazardous to the personal safety of the infant, as his employment in manufacturing establishments,⁸ about elevators, or as an acrobat; second, such as are injurious to his health, as his employment in mines or in other underground works; and, third, such as are subversive of his morals, as his use as a mendicant, his performance in theatrical exhibitions,⁹ or his employment in dance halls or in other

2. Commitment to Reformatory. — Under the statutes of Texas (Acts 21st Leg., p. 97), where the accused is not more than sixteen years of age, and when the punishment for the offense committed is imprisonment for not over five years, the jury are required to say in their verdict whether the convict shall be sent to the reformatory or the penitentiary. Duncan v. State, 29 Tex. App. 141. See also the statutes of Maryland (Laws 1892, c. 311, p. 435) and Virginia (Pub. Acts 1889-90, c. 173, p. 131).

Under the Washington statutes (Laws of 1891, p. 195) it is provided that when a child between eight and sixteen years of age shall be found guilty of any crime except murder or manslaughter, or to be, for want of proper parental care, growing up in mendicancy or vagrancy, or incorrigible, and complaint thereof is made and properly sustained, the court may, if in its opinion the accused is a proper subject therefor, instead of entering judgment, cause an order to be entered that such boy or girl be sent to the state reform school. Matter of Barbee, 19 Wash. 306.

And see the title HOUSES OF REFUGE AND CORRECTION, vol. 15, p. 777.

Truancy. — The statutes of Maine (Laws 1887, c. 22, as amended by Acts 1893, c. 206) provide that boys between the ages of ten and fifteen years who refuse to attend school, and wander around the streets while the school is in session, are truants, and upon conviction as such may be sentenced to the reform school, at the cost for subsistence and clothing of the towns where the boys resided when committed. Cushing v. Friendship, 89 Me. 525.

4. See ABANDON, vol. 1, p. 2.

7. Baby Farming. — The Massachusetts statute of 1892, c. 318, § 7, which requires any person receiving under his care or control, or placing under the care or control of another, for compensation, an infant under two years of age, to give notice within two days to the state board of lunacy and charity, applies to a case where an infant was placed by a mother in the care of another person for the agreed term of ten days, although the infant, in fact, remained in such person's care but one hour. Com. v. Johnson, 162 Mass. 506.

8. Employment of Minors in Manufacturing Establishment. — The New York Laws of 1886, c. 409, § 2, as amended by Laws of 1889, c. 560, Laws of 1892, c. 673, provide that: "No child under fourteen years of age shall be employed in any manufacturing establishment within this state."

In Murphy v. Bennett, 11 N. Y. App. Div. 298, it was held that the employment of a boy in a lumber yard one-quarter of a mile from the mill was not prohibited by the statute.

9. Employment of Children in Theatrical Exhibitions. — Under the Penal Code of New York, § 292, as amended by Laws of 1886, c. 31, "A person who employs or causes to be employed, or who exhibits, uses, or has in custody, or trains for the purpose of the exhibition, use, or employment of, any child apparently or actually under the age of sixteen years, * * * in peddling, singing, or playing upon a musical instrument, or in a theatrical exhibition, or in any wandering occupation," is guilty of a misdemeanor. People v. Meade, (N. Y. Gen. Sess.) 24 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 357. See as to licensing infant musicians places where liquors are sold.¹

4. Admitting to Places of Amusement. — The third group prohibits the admission of minors to certain places of amusement. The restrictions apply usually to dance halls, concert halls, billiard and pool rooms,² and similar places where wines and liquors are sold.

5. Sale of Prohibited Articles to Infants. — The fourth and last group prohibits the sale of certain prescribed articles, among which may be mentioned intoxicating liquors,³ substances containing alcohol,⁴ tobacco and cigarettes,⁵ immoral literature,⁶ and deadly weapons.⁷

INEFFMENT. — See FEOFFMENT, vol. 12, p. 1085.

INFERENCE. — An inference is a deduction which the reason of the jury makes from the facts proved, without an express direction of law to that effect; in other words, a conclusion inferred of the existence of one fact from others proved.⁸

2. Permitting Infants to Play at Pool or Billiards. — In Missouri it has been made a misdemeanor for a licensed keeper of a billiard or pool table to permit a minor to play thereon without his father's or guardian's permission. State v. Mackin, 51 Mo. App. 129.

There is a similar statute in Indiana. Taylor v. State, 107 Ind. 483; Kiley v. State, 120 Ind. 65.

Permitting Infant to Play Cards. — In Washington if a householder allows a minor to play at cards in his house without the written consent of the parent or guardian, the householder is liable to the same penalties as for furnishing to such minor intoxicating liquors. Ball Annot. Codes and Stat. Wash. (1897), § 7314 (Laws 1891, c. 69, par. 19).

3. See the title INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

4. Sale of Articles Containing Alcohol. — In Massachusetts it is a misdemeanor to sell to children under sixteen years of age any candy or other article enclosing liquid or syrup containing more than one per centum of alcohol. Mass. Acts of 1891, c. 333, p. 179.

5. Sale of Tobacco to Minors. — In several of the states it has been made a misdemeanor to sell or give away to a minor under a prescribed age tobacco in any form or in the form of cigarettes.

6. Sale of Immoral Literature to Minors. — In Illinois it is a misdemeanor punishable with severe penalties, for any person to sell, lend, give away, or show, or have in his possession with intent to sell or give away or to show, or advertise, or otherwise offer for loan, gift, or distribution, to any minor, any book, pamphlet, magazine, newspaper, story paper, or other printed paper devoted to the publication or principally made up of criminal news, police reports, or accounts of criminal deeds, or pictures and stories of deeds of bloodshed, lust, or crime, or to hire, use, or employ any minor to sell or give away, or in any manner to distribute, any such publication. Starr & Curt. Annot. Stat. Ill. (1896), c. 38, §§ 289, 291 (Laws Ill. 1889, p. 114).

In Strohm v. People, 160 Ill. 582, affirming 60 Ill. App. 128, it was held that this statute embraced pictures of such deeds with or without stories, and stories of such deeds with or without pictures.

7. Sale of Weapons to Minors. — In Louisiana it is a misdemeanor to sell, give, or lease to any minor any pistol, bowie-knife, dirk, or other weapon. Louisiana Acts of 1890, No. 40, p. 39.

8. Infection and Contagion. — Upon an appeal from a conviction of the offense of keeping an animal infected by a contagious disease in a place where other animals could become infected by it, the court said: "The words infection and 'contagion' are nearly synonymous, the only difference being, not in the infectious or contagious matter, but in the manner of its communication. Infection is communicated from the sick to the well by a morbid miasm or exhalation diffused in the air. Contagion is communicated by actual contact." Wirth v. State, 63 Wis. 55.

9. Smith v. Western Union Tel. Co., 57 Mo. App. 259; Tanner v. Hughes, 53 Pa. St. 289.

Precedent Matter. — In Chambers v. Hunt, 18 N. J. L. 354, it was said: "An inference is something inferred from precedent matter, separated from which it is a mere absurdity in language. There may be precedent matter and no inference, but there can be no inference without precedent matter; they must stand together, and cannot be separated; and as a special traverse is an inference from the inducement, they must stand together, because the traverse as an inference, taken alone, is a mere absurdity."

Instruction. — There being conflicting testimony upon whether notes were given as collateral or in payment of a debt, it was held that the jury might determine the question from circumstantial as well as from direct evidence, and that it was error to instruct that such an agreement could not be found in the affirmative by inference, but must be established by affirmative proof. The court said: "As we understand the first branch of the instruction, it is equivalent to saying that this question cannot be found in the affirmative except upon direct and positive proof in favor of the affirmative. Inference is a deduction or conclusion from facts or propositions known to be true. When the facts themselves are directly attested, the jury may deduce or infer or presume from them the truth or falsity of the main proposition; and the principal question may be thereby determined in the affirmative or in the negative, as the conclusion may necessarily follow the attested premises." Gates v. Hughes, 44 Wis. 336.

INFERIOR COURTS. (See also the titles COURTS, vol. 8, p. 37; JURISDICTION; JUSTICES OF THE PEACE.)—The technical meaning of the term "inferior courts" is courts of special and limited jurisdiction, which are erected on such principles that their judgments taken alone are entirely disregarded, and their proceedings must show their jurisdiction. The expression is also used as synonymous with courts not of record. In American constitutional law the term also applies to courts from which an appeal or writ of error lies to a higher court.¹

The trial court instructed that fraud is never inferred. The appellate court said: "We think the judge made the maxim more misleading by substituting inferred for 'presumed.' The former is a stronger word than the latter (in connection with the words 'can not'), for the purpose of excluding indirect evidence. To infer is derived from the Latin inferre, compounded of in, from, and ferre, to carry or bring, and its strict meaning is to bring a result or conclusion from something back of it, that is, from some evidence or data from which it may be logically deduced. But to presume is from the Latin presumere, consisting of præ, before, and sumere, to take, and signifies to take or assume a matter beforehand, without proof—to take for granted." Morford v. Peck, 46 Conn. 385.

Inferred and Implied.—In a murder case the court charged that intent to kill might be inferred. It was held that the word inferred was synonymous with the statutory word "implied." State v. Millain, 3 Nev. 409.

1. Inferior Courts.—In Bailey v. Winn, 113 Mo. 155, it was said: "The distinction between superior and inferior courts is not clearly defined. When different courts are compared, it is generally said those courts are inferior which are subordinate to other courts; also, those of a very limited jurisdiction." Bouvier's Law Dictionary, title Courts; 4 AMERICAN AND ENGLISH ENCYCLOPEDIA OF LAW 453. The test of inferiority may be solved by showing that the court is either placed under the supervisory or appellate control of other courts, or that the jurisdiction as to the subject-matter is limited and confined. State v. Daniels, 66 Mo. 201. Applying these tests, there can be no doubt but this Common Pleas Court is a tribunal inferior to the Circuit Court."

All courts from which an appeal lies are inferior courts, in relation to the appellate court before which their judgment may be carried;

but they are not therefore inferior courts in the technical sense of those words. They apply to courts of special and limited jurisdiction, which are erected on such principles that their judgments taken alone are entirely disregarded, and the proceedings must show their jurisdiction. Marshall, C. J., in Kempe v. Kennedy, 5 Cranch (U. S.) 185.

The American constitutional use of the word inferior, as applied to courts, refers to relative rank and authority, and not to intrinsic quality. Swift v. Judges, 64 Mich. 480, 7 West. Rep. 800. And see Davey v. Burlington, etc., R. Co., 31 Iowa 553.

"All courts from which an appeal or writ of error lies are inferior courts in relation to the court before which their judgments may be carried and by which they may be reviewed, annulled, or affirmed. * * * It is in this latter sense that the framers of our constitution used the words inferior courts. They meant thereby courts whose judgments could be reviewed and their errors corrected by another and a higher tribunal." Nugent v. State, 18 Ala. 524, cited in Ex p. Roundtree, 51 Ala. 42, and Sanders v. State, 55 Ala. 42.

The common-law definition of inferior court is one other than the four great courts of the realm; that is, the Court of Chancery and the three great common-law courts sitting at Westminster. Toml. L. Dict., quoted in Swift v. Judges, 64 Mich. 480.

An inferior court, according to the technical meaning of that term, is a court whose judgments, standing alone, are mere nullities, and in order to give validity to them its proceedings must show jurisdiction. La Croix v. Fairfield County, 49 Conn. 596. See also Kempe v. Kennedy, 5 Cranch (U. S.) 173, M'Cormick v. Sullivan, 10 Wheat. (U. S.) 192.

In Hahn v. Kelly, 34 Cal. 414, it was said: "The use of the words 'superior' and inferior, or 'limited' and 'general,' and 'proceeding according to the course of the common law,' in the statement of the rule in question, however apt they may have once been, are less so at this time and place, and their duties, in view of our system and mode of procedure, would be better performed by the terms 'courts of record' and 'courts and tribunals not of record.' If anything further is added, the phrase 'proceeding according to the course of the statute which regulates proceedings in civil cases' should be employed instead of the phrase under consideration; for the statute has superseded the common law, without, however, abrogating the rule in hand, the conditions being changed, but not the principle. Our District Courts, County Courts, and Probate Courts, the latter having been put in this respect upon the level of superior courts at common law by express statutory provision (Statutes 1858, p. 95; 1863, p. 339, § 46), are superior courts in the sense of this rule, while courts held by justices of the peace, boards of supervisors, and other boards exercising judicial functions of a limited and special character, are inferior. Superior courts at common law, in the sense of this rule, were those which sat in Westminster Hall — the King's Bench, the Common Pleas, and Exchequer; the former, as originally instituted, having jurisdiction in criminal cases, the second in civil actions, and the latter in matters of revenue. In a certain sense, their jurisdiction was limited and special, but in the sense of this rule it was general — that is to say, general within their sphere of action. So with our courts of record. Each is confined to its limits as fixed by the constitution, and in that sense is limited as to its jurisdiction, but in the sense of this rule it has general jurisdiction of the particular department of the law allotted to it."

Relative Term. — In one sense all courts from whose judgments an appeal or writ of error lies are inferior courts, in relation to the courts before which their judgments may be carried and by which they may be reversed, annulled, or affirmed. Ex p. Watkins, 3 Pet. (U. S.) 205; Nugent v. State, 18 Ala. 521; Ex p. Smith, 23 Ala. 118; La Croix v. Fairfield County, 49 Conn. 596.

Examples. — The Civil District Court for the parish of Orleans is a court of record of original jurisdiction, and is not an inferior court, in the technical sense of that term. It has the power and authority to punish for contempt of court, and though the proceedings in cases of constructive contempt differ from those in cases of actual contempt, the power of that court under proper proceedings extends to both. State v. Judge, 45 La. Ann. 1250.

In Appo v. People, 20 N. Y. 549, it was said: "The term inferior, as applied to courts, has no very definite meaning. It is used in different senses. In the sense of being courts of very narrow and restricted jurisdiction, Courts of Oyer and Terminer are not inferior; but in the sense of being subordinate to the Supreme Court, and subject in common with all other minor tribunals to its supervisory control, they certainly are."

In Ames v. Williams, 72 Miss. 770, it was said: "We are at a loss to conceive upon what principle it could be held that the chancery court, as to the jurisdiction conferred upon it by the constitution, is an inferior court in that sense in which the word inferior is used to characterize courts whose records must affirmatively show their authority to act in the particular cause. If the Court of Chancery be such inferior court, so also must be the Circuit Court and this court, for each is equally limited, in the sense that its jurisdiction is not universal."

Circuit and District Courts of the United States are not inferior courts. See Cuddy, Petitioner, 131 U. S. 280; M'Cormick v. Sullivan, 10 Wheat. (U. S.) 192, 199; Ex p. Wat- kins, 3 Pet. (U. S.) 193; Kennedy v. Georgia State Bank, 8 How. (U. S.) 611; Ruckman v. Cowell, 1 N. Y. 507. See also the title UNITED STATES COURTS.

The London Lord Mayor's Court has been held to be an inferior court. London v. Cox, 36 L. J. Exch. 225, L. R. 2 H. L. 239; Appleford v. Judkins, 3 C. P. D. 489.

Inferior Tribunal. — A statute provided that mandamus might be issued by any court in the state to any inferior tribunal, corporation, board, or person. In holding that mandamus might issue to the governor, the court said: "It is obvious that the word inferior, as here used, is a qualification confined to the word 'tribunal.' The intention was to prevent any court from issuing the writ to any other court superior in authority to itself, in any case in which the writ should be directed to another tribunal; it must, therefore, be one inferior to the court issuing the writ. As thus applied, the word inferior has a familiar signification, for 'superior' and inferior are terms applied to the courts as indicating the general character of the jurisdiction they respectively exercise." Harpending v. Haight, 39 Cal. 212.

But upon a similar statute, Fuller, J., in a concurring opinion in Woods v. Sheldon, 9 S. Dak. 411, said: "Obviously, the executive department of government is neither an 'inferior tribunal, corporation, board, or person,' and the use to which the word inferior has been put conveys to my mind a reasonable inference that the legislature intended to exempt from the coercive influence of mandamus the chief executive of this state." See also the title MANDAMUS.

Inferior Tribunal. — A statute of West Virginia gave to the Circuit Court of that state jurisdiction to review upon certiorari the proceedings of inferior tribunals. It was held that the board of supervisors was an inferior tribunal. Cunningham v. Squires, 2 W. Va. 422, 98 Am. Dec. 770.

1. Infidel. — Omichund v. Barker, Willes 541. And see Hale v. Everett, 53 N. H. 57.

"The infidel is one who does not recognize the inspiration or obligation of the Holy Scriptures, or the generally recognized features of the Christian religion. The 'atheist' is one who does not believe in the existence of a God." In an action upon an insurance policy it is not competent to show that the deceased was an infidel in order to draw the inference of suicide. Gibson v. American Mut. L. Ins. Co., 37 N. Y. 584.

2. Infinitesimal. — In Pharmaceutical Soc. v. Armson, (1894) 2 Q. B. 724, it was said: "The meaning of the word infinitesimal, when used in a court of law, is that a thing is so small that the court will treat it as not existing at all. The maxim de minimis non curat lex, when construed into English, means that a matter is so infinitesimally small that the court will not take any notice of it."

3. Infirmary. — In a contract by physicians to prescribe for and attend the inmates of the county infirmary, the infirmary may consist of several buildings. Johnson v. Santa Clara County, 28 Cal. 545.

1. Infirmity.—Bernays v. U. S. Mutual Acc. Assoc., 45 Fed. Rep. 456, in which case it was held, where an applicant for insurance warranted that he had never had any infirmity, and it appeared that he had had erysipelas, that this was not a breach of the warranty.

Disease and Infirmity.—In Meyer v. Fidelity, etc., Co., 96 Iowa 385, it was said: "As used in this policy, we think the words 'disease' and infirmity mean practically the same thing. When speaking of an infirmity, we generally mean the state or quality of being infirm physically or otherwise—debility or weakness; and by the use of the word 'disease' we desire to convey the impression of a morbid condition, resulting from some functional disturbance or failure of physical function which tends to undermine the constitution. We do not, as a general rule, apply either term to a slight and temporary disorder, or to the imperfect working of some function, which is over in a short period of time, and which, when recovered from, leaves the body in its normal condition. In using either of the words we do not, as a rule, refer to a slight and mere temporary disturbance or enfeeblement."

Temporary Infirmity.—In In re Buck, (1896) 2 Ch. 734, it was held that the term infirmity, as applied to the beneficiary of a benevolent society, meant "some permanent disease, accident, or anything of that kind rendering the member an object deserving of the assistance of the society." See also Manufacturers' Acc. Indemnity Co. v. Dorgan, 16 U. S. App. 308.

Depositions. (See also the title DEPOSITIONS, vol. 9, p. 311.)—A statute provided that a witness's deposition might be taken when by reason of bodily infirmity such witness could not attend. In construing this statute the court said: "What is bodily infirmity? Mr. Webster defines infirmity as 'a disease; a malady; feebleness.' Mr. Bouvier says infirm means 'weak; feeble;' and he remarks that 'where a witness is infirm to an extent likely to destroy his life, or to prevent his attendance at a trial, his testimony de bene esse may be taken at any age.'" Collins v. State, 24 Tex. App. 149.

Insanity. (See generally the title INSANITY.)—In Stewart v. State, (Tex. Crim. 1894) 26 S. W. Rep. 203, it was held that the term "bodily infirmity" was broad enough to cover a disease of the brain, as in any part of the body; and in that case evidence of insanity was held admissible to form a predicate for the admission of a deposition of the witness.

But in Accident Ins. Co. v. Crandal, 120 U. S. 532, it was said: "The words 'bodily infirmities or disease' do not include insanity."

See also Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Terry, 15 Wall. (U. S.) 580.

2. Inflammatory.—In Clair v. State, 40 Neb. 534, the defendant in contempt proceedings had criticised the charge of the judge to the grand jury as inflammatory. The court said: "The first question suggested by the record is whether the term inflammatory, as applied to the charge of the judge, is an unmerited criticism. The adjective inflammatory, as here used, is derived from the verb 'inflamm,' which is thus defined: 1. 'To set on fire; to kindle; to inflame.' 2. 'To excite or increase, as passion or appetite; to enkindle into violent action.' 3. 'To exaggerate, aggravate, in description.' 4. 'To heat; to excite excessive action in the blood vessels.' 5. 'To provoke; to irritate to anger.' 6. 'To increase; to exasperate.' 7. 'To increase; to augment.' (Vide Webster's Dictionary.) Fairly construed, the charge under consideration is an impassioned appeal, it not indeed an express direction, to the grand jury to present by indictment certain persons not named, but who are assumed to be guilty of the crime of bribery. In that sense, if not inflammatory, it is at least what in the science of medicine is denominated 'heroic treatment.'"

3. Inflammable.—In holding that the court would not take judicial notice that kerosene oil was inflammable, Folger, J., said: "It is only designated, if at all, by the phrase 'any other inflammable liquid.' This phrase follows the mentioning by name of camphene, spirit gas, phosgene, etc., and nosctur a sociis. To be warranted against, the liquid must be inflammable, as are those enumerated articles. But there is no finding or proof of the character of kerosene in this regard. The defendants ask us to take judicial notice of its qualities, and that it is in its nature like those. If we do this, we are to know that they are not only so slowly inflammable as to give harmless light by their gradual combustion, but that they are also suddenly explosive, and thus dangerous and harmful. It is this last characteristic inflammability which is warranted against, in the classes of hazard upon the back of the policy. But judicial notice comes in the place of proof. It is to be exercised by a tribunal which has the power to pass upon the facts. That, this court has not in this case." Wood v. North Western Ins. Co., 46 N. Y. 426.

4. InFLICT.—A statute made it a criminal offense to inflict grievous bodily harm upon another. In construing this statute Stephens, J., said: "If a man by the grasp of the hand infects another with smallpox, it is impossible to trace out in detail the connection between the act and the disease, and it would, I think, be an unnatural use of language to say that a man by such an act inflicted smallpox on another. It would be wrong in interpreting an Act of Parliament to lay much stress on etymology, but I may just observe that inflict is derived from infligo, for which, in Facciolati's Lexicon, three Italian and three Latin equivalents are given, all meaning 'to strike,' viz., dare, ferire, and percutere in Italian, and infero, impingo, and percutio in Latin." Reg. v. Clarence, 22 Q. B. D. 42. This case was upon the indictment of a man who had communicated gonorrhea to his wife. See also upon the construction of this statute Hegarty v. Shine, 4 L. R. Ir. 288; R. v. Halliday, 34 S. J. 129.

Direct Violence. — The Massachusetts statutes in regard to murder spoke of a mortal wound given, "or other violence or injury inflicted," or poison administered. In construing these enactments in Com. v. Macloon, 101 Mass. 23, the court said: "Inflict does not necessarily imply direct violence. There is no more appropriate use of the word inflict than in connection with punishment; and 'to inflict punishment' clearly includes imprisonment and involuntary restraint, as well as hanging, beheading, or whipping. We can have no doubt that any bodily harm which is caused to be suffered by the act of the accused is an 'injury inflicted,' within the meaning of the statute."

Inflict any Punishment. — In State v. Porter, 25 W. Va. 689, it was held that the words "inflict any punishment" in a penal statute contemplated an act of trespass.

1. Local Influence — Removal of Cause. (See also the title REMOVAL OF CAUSES, 18 ENCYC. OF PL. AND PR. 239.) — A federal statute provided for the removal of the cause from a state court to a federal court in certain cases where it should appear that from prejudice or local influence the petitioner would not be able to obtain justice. In construing this statute the court said: "The term 'local influence,' if not synonymous with 'prejudice,' manifestly refers to an improper influence exerted by or existing in favor of one side, or against the other, which will prevent the latter from obtaining justice in the state courts." Adelbert College v. Toledo, etc., R. Co., 47 Fed. Rep. 844.

2. Wirth v. State, 63 Wis. 55, which case was on the question whether a horse had an infectious disease. See also INFECT — INFECTION, ante, p. 317.

3. Informal Issue. — In Garrard v. Willet, 4 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 629, it was said: "An immaterial issue is where that which is materially alleged by the pleadings is not traversed, but an issue taken on such a point as will not determine the case; an informal issue is when such allegation is not traversed in a proper manner."

4. Informality. — A statute provided that informality might be amended upon the trial. In construing this statute in Franklin v. Mackey, 16 S. & R. (Pa.) 118, the court said: "They [counsel for the defendant in error] also insist upon the plain words of the Act of Assembly, and say that the word informality is the only term used in the law, describing what may be amended on the trial. It is so; informality is the word in the law; yet it appears to me that were we to hold matters of mere form only to be amendable, after the jury sworn, we should go far towards declaring this part of the act useless. Matters of mere form in the record are not often inquired into before the jury. Besides, the very next words of the act seem to show the meaning of the legislature, for it must be absolutely impossible for the adverse party to be taken by surprise by an amendment which does not touch the merits or substance of a cause."

Judicial Sales. (See also the title JUDICIAL SALES.) — A statute provided that if the sale should prove invalid on account of any informality in the proceedings of any officer having any duty to perform in relation thereto, the purchaser should have a writ against the owner and a lien upon the land. In construing this statute the court said: "All the steps in the process, from the assessment to the execution of the tax deed, are related to the sale, and any substantial omission of legal duty, misconduct, or irregularity of any officer connected with the process, for which the sale should be held invalid, may be deemed an informality within the meaning of the act. We are not disposed to take the word in a strict literal sense, and thereby limit the obvious purpose of the statute." Hunt v. Curry, 37 Ark. 108.

5. Giving Information. — Where an indictment charged that the defendant knowingly deposited in the mail a letter giving information when, how, and of whom an article or thing designed and intended to prevent conception could be procured, and the letter was in answer to a fictitious letter and addressed to a person who had no existence, the letter was held not to be within the Act of Congress of July 12, 1876, prohibiting mailing obscene books, etc. The court said: "The letter written and mailed by defendant was addressed to a person who had no existence. On its face it did not show that it was within the prohibited statute. If it had been suffered to go through the mail to the place to which it was addressed it would not have been called for, but would have been sent to the dead-letter office, and could not have given to any person the prohibited information. The defendant doubtless intended to give the inhibited information, but the statute does not apply to a letter merely intended by the writer to give such information, but to a letter 'actually giving the information.' If a letter of inquiry seeks: g the prohibited information had been written by an actual person, although under a feigned name, an answer in reply giving such information would present a case distinguishable, it would seem, from the one under consideration." Per Dillon, J., in U. S. v. Whittier, 5 Dill. (U. S.) 41.

In Statute — Physicians Prevented from Giving.— The word information, as used in the statute of New York providing that "no person authorized to practice physic or surgery shall be allowed to disclose any information which he may have acquired in attending any patient in a professional character, and which information was necessary to enable him to prescribe for such patient as a physician, or to do any act for him as a surgeon," comprehends the knowledge which physicians acquire in any way, while attending the patient, "whether by their own insight or by verbal statements from him or from members of his household, or from nurses or strangers, given in aid of the physician in the performance of his duty. * * * Knowledge, however communicated, is information." Per Gilbert, J., in Edington v. Mutual L. Ins. Co., 5 Hun (N. Y.) 8. See generally the title PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS.

Reward. (See also the title REWARD.)— Under a statute making a reward payable "to the person or persons who shall make discovery and give information against any other person or persons guilty of" a crime, one who is the means of convicting the guilty party, though an accomplice substantially made the discovery and gave the information, is entitled to the reward. Matter of Kelly, 39 Conn. 162.

Where by a public advertisement a reward was offered to any person who would give such information as should lead to the apprehension and conviction of the party guilty of the offense, and B, whom the plaintiff had taken into custody on suspicion of being concerned in the offense, offered to make disclosures if furnished with something to eat and drink, and the plaintiff communicated this offer to a sub-inspector of police, to whom B made a confession which resulted in his conviction, it was held that the plaintiff was entitled to the reward. Smith v. Moore, 1 C. B. 438, 50 E. C. L. 438.

A Hired Driver of a Cabriolet having brought home the horse apparently much ill-used by him, the owner's son (in the owner's absence) called in a policeman and told him that the driver had ill-used the horse. The policeman said that if the complainant charged the driver with cruelty to the horse he would arrest him; the complainant said "I do," and the policeman apprehended the driver under the statute 5 & 6 Wm. IV., c. 59, § 9. imposing penalties upon persons wantonly and cruelly ill-treating any horse, etc. It was held that the complainant must be considered not as a person giving information to the officer, in consequence of which the driver was arrested, but as a principal causing the arrest to be made. Hopkins v. Crowe, 4 Ad. & El. 774, 31 E. C. L. 177.

1. Information of Intrusion.— Bour. L. Dict.

In England it is filed in the exchequer by the king's attorney-general, for any trespass committed upon the lands of the crown. It is grounded on no writ under seal, but merely on intimation of the king's officer, who "gives the court to understand and be informed of" the matter in question. Nannage v. Rowland, 3 Black. Com. 261; Cro. Jac. 212.

In America, in Massachusetts and Virginia the remedy is resorted to in case of an intrusion upon escheated lands. Com. v. Andre, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 224; Com. v. Hite, 6 Leigh (Va.) 588.

Pub. Stat. Mass., c. 182, authorizes the filing of an information of intrusion by the district attorney in case of any intrusion upon lands held by the state for the benefit or use of any tribe of Indians or any individual thereof, or any descendants of them.

I. DEFINITION. — An informer is one who, with the intention of having his information acted upon, first gives information of a violation of law which induces the prosecution and contributes to the recovery of the fine, penalty, or forfeiture which is eventually recovered.¹

II. RIGHT TO COMPENSATION — 1. In General. — A person who gives material information is not entitled at common law or in chancery to a share or moiety of the fine or forfeiture recovered as a result of such information, since it is the duty of every citizen to aid in detecting violations of the law and enforcing the administration of public justice. No compensation will be allowed except in pursuance of some statutory provision.² But in certain cases statutes have been enacted with a view to encouraging information of breaches of the law by giving to informers a certain proportion of the penalties and forfeitures annexed to such breaches.³

2. Out of What Fines or Forfeitures Informer's Share Allowed. — The adjudications involving the rights of informers to compensation have occurred most frequently under the Revised Statutes of the United States in connection with such violations of the law as fraud upon the customs revenue⁴ and breaches of the internal-revenue laws,¹ of the neutrality laws,² and of the confiscation acts.³ But cases have arisen under the statutes of the various states, as in the case of information as to the illegal sales of liquor,⁴ keeping bawdy houses,⁵ keeping houses for the sale of lottery tickets,⁶ failure to ring the bell or sound the whistle of a locomotive at public crossings,⁷ and overcharges by express companies.⁸

Money Recovered on Contract with United States. — Under the federal laws granting to informers in certain cases certain shares of fines, penalties, and forfeitures incurred by violations of law, informers have no shares in money recovered in a suit on a contract with the United States.⁹

Sum Recovered from Surety on Recognizance. — It has been held that the sum recovered from sureties on a recognizance for the appearance of a person charged with a criminal offense under the federal Customs Act of 1799 did not take the place of a fine which would be imposed upon conviction in any such sense that it was subject to an informer's share, though the fine itself might have been.¹⁰

3. Constitutionality of Statutory Provision for Informers. — The constitutionality of various state statutory provisions giving to informers specified shares in fines and forfeitures recovered through information given by them has been attacked in several recent cases on the ground that such a provision authorizes a misappropriation or diversion of the fine or penalty, contrary to constitutional provisions setting apart for the literary or public school funds fines, penalties, and forfeitures recovered for violations of the laws of the state; but these contentions have not been sustained, and it has been held that the legislature, in imposing penalties for violation of its laws, may in its discretion, for the purpose of securing the enforcement of its laws and the collection of the penalties imposed, give a part thereof to an informer.¹¹

1. Violation of Internal-revenue Laws. — See U. S. v. Connor, 138 U. S. 61; One Still Boiler, 1 Ben. (U. S.) 374; One Large Water Tub, 3 Ben. (U. S.) 436; Ramsey's Case, 14 Ct. S. v. Hook*, 3 Pittsb. (Pa.) 54.

But the statute allowing a share to an informer in the case of violation of the internal-revenue laws has been repealed, and a new mode of compensation of the informer is provided. Ramsay v. U. S., 21 Ct. Cl. 443; U. S. v. Connor, 138 U. S. 61.

2. Violation of Neutrality Laws. — Under a statute of the United States providing that for a violation of the neutrality laws a ship or vessel "shall be forfeited, one-half to the use of the informer and the other half to the use of the United States," it has been held that the whole forfeiture will not go to the United States in case no person establishes his right as an informer. U. S. v. The Resolute, 40 Fed. Rep. 543. The court said that "such a case seems to have been left without any provision as to the disposal of the share set apart for the informer."

3. Under Confiscation Act. — Although under the Act of Aug. 6, 1861, to confiscate property used for insurrectionary purposes, an informer may file an information along with the attorney-general, and so make the proceedings inure under the act to his own benefit as well as to the benefit of the United States, yet after the proceedings have been instituted by the attorney-general alone, and wholly for the benefit of the United States, and after issue has been joined and proofs have been furnished by other parties, no person can come in asserting that he was the informer and share the benefits of the proceedings. Francis v. U. S., 5 Wall. (U. S.) 338.

In Titus v. U. S., 20 Wall. (U. S.) 475, it was held that an informer did not acquire a right to a moiety under the Confiscation Act of Aug. 6, 1861, in regard to public lands captured from the Confederate government and informed against after a complete title had been acquired by the federal government by conquest.

III. WHO MAY CLAIM INFORMER'S SHARE — 1. In General. — He who, with the intention of having his information acted upon, first gives information of a violation of the law which induces the prosecution and contributes to the recovery of the fine, penalty, or forfeiture, is entitled to receive the fruits of his diligence to the exclusion of all the others.¹ Hence it has been held that he who first commences a qui tam action attaches to himself a right to the penalty, which cannot be divested by a subsequent suit brought by another informer though the judgment be first recovered in such subsequent suit.² The fact that a person has procured valuable testimony making a strong case against the offenders, but for which it is doubtful whether any conviction could have been had or any money recovered from them, does not entitle the person procuring such testimony to any portion of the fine, where the offense has been discovered and disclosed by others and proceedings have been commenced in pursuance of that information.³

Disclosing Conspiracy. — A party who furnishes the original information upon which a part of certain conspirators were arrested should be considered the informer as to all the conspirators in the same fraud, where it appears that the other conspirators were arrested, not upon any information given by any third party, but by the confession of the parties who had already been arrested.⁴

2. Government Officers. — In some instances, as in the case of information concerning any fraud upon the customs revenue, the statutes expressly exclude officers of the government from the benefit of the shares or moieties of informers.⁵ And apart from any such statutory provision officers of the government can be considered informers only where they incidentally, and not in the direct prosecution or course of their duty, or under a special retainer to investigate the matter, acquire information useful to the government.⁶ But under a statute expressly giving to an officer a proportion of a fine or forfeiture for information given, it has been held that he will be entitled to his share whether the information was obtained while he was engaged in the appropriate duties of an officer or otherwise.⁷

3. Joint Informers. — The information may be given by two or more persons in common, and in such case they will be entitled to the informer's share

In U. S. v. Simons, 7 Fed. Rep. 709, the court said: "The statute gives the informer's share to the one who furnishes the original information which shall lead to the recovery of the fine, but, whether justly or unjustly, awards nothing to those who furnish evidence to confirm the truth of the statements of the original informers; and this although the applicant may have spent much time and expended money in ferreting out the details of the fraud, since their action cannot be said to have induced the prosecutions."

4. Disclosing Conspiracy. — U. S. v. Simons, 7 Fed. Rep. 709. See also Sanner v. State, 85 Md. 523.

5. Statutory Prohibition of Informer's Share to Government Officers. — U. S. v. Simons, 7 Fed. Rep. 709, holding further that a person who is in the pay of the government and receives a salary or wages of any kind for his services in his endeavor to discover violations of the customs revenue is an officer within the meaning of the statute.

jointly or in common, and this though one or more of the informers were more active and influential than the others in bringing about the final result.¹ And it has been held that though the first information of a fraud on the customs was communicated to the government from an individual discovery and knowledge of one of the claimants, yet, if the act of information subsequently assumed the form of an authoritative communication in being reduced to writing and put in the name of all, it became the joint act of all and gave to each individual an inchoate interest in the results.²

IV. WHEN INFORMER'S SHARE VESTS. — Under some statutes the informer's share becomes vested on the recovery of judgment.³ But under other statutes the title of the informer does not become vested until the money representing the fine or forfeiture is actually paid over and is ready for distribution.⁴ Under a statute of the latter class it has been held that the amount of the informer's share is to be determined by the law in force at the time of the payment over for distribution.⁵

V. HOW SHARE MAY BE DIVESTED — 1. Repeal of Statute. — The rights of informers are liable to be divested by repealing statutes at any time before they become vested by judgment or payment over for distribution.⁶

2. Pardon. — After a judgment in proceedings for a fine, penalty, or forfeiture has been rendered, by which a share thereof has become vested in an informer, it is not within the pardoning power to remit or release by a pardon the moiety thus accruing to the informer, and the power is limited to the remission of the share of the government alone.⁷ But it has been held that until an order of distribution of the proceeds of property sold under the Confiscation Acts is made, or until the proceeds are actually paid into the hands of the party entitled as informer to receive them, or into the treasury of the Money Paid Over by Way of Compromise. — Under a federal statute it has been held that an action cannot be maintained in the courts of Massachusetts to recover a share of a forfeiture incurred by a violation of the customs revenue laws where the money forfeited has been paid over to the collector before the rendition of any decree or judgment, and by way of compromise of pending legal proceedings. This decision was based on the ground that it could not be said that the money was "recovered" as required by statute. Lapham v. Almy, 13 Allen (Mass.) 301.

But under statute in Iowa giving the informer a share of fines "collected by action" for a violation of a statute against the illegal sale of liquors, it was held that if the amount is collected by action, it is as much a recovery if paid to settle the action as if paid after final adjudication. Hull v. Welsh, 82 Iowa 117.

5. 25,000 Gallons Distilled Spirits, 1 Ben. (U. S.) 367.

6. In Georgia it has been held that an informer who begins suit under a penal statute acquires thereby only an inchoate right, and such right can become vested only by judgment; and hence at any time before judgment his right is liable to be divested by a repealing statute. St. Mary's Bank v. State, 12 Ga. 495.

Violation of Internal-revenue Laws. — Under the United States statutes provision was at one time made that informers should receive certain shares of the fines and penalties recovered in cases of violation of the internal-revenue laws. See U. S. v. Connor, 138 U. S. 61; One Large Water Tub, 3 Ben. (U. S.) 436. Under a later statute, however, repealing this law, it has been held that any rights which an informer might have to a share in a fine, penalty, or forfeiture under the provisions of the prior statute were taken away unless the amount of the fine, penalty, or forfeiture was fixed and settled by judgment or compromise and by payment before the passage of the later act. U. S. v. Connor, 138 U. S. 61. Compare Ramsey's Case, 14 Ct. Cl. 367; Bailee v. U. S., 23 Ct. Cl. 502. But it has been held that where a compromise was effected under the internal-revenue laws and the money was paid into the treasury prior to the repealing act, the informer might recover the amount awarded to him by the secretary of the treasury though the award was not made until after the repealing act was enacted. Horton v. U. S., 31 Ct. Cl. 148.

7. Effect of Pardon on Informer's Right. — Foster's Case, 11 Coke 66; U. S. v. Harris, 1 Abb. (U. S.) 110. See also U. S. v. Lancaster, 4 Wash. (U. S.) 64.

United States, they are within the control of the court, and no vested right in the informer accrues so as to prevent the pardon of the President from restoring them to the original owner.¹

3. Remission of Fine or Forfeiture by Secretary of Treasury. — In some instances power is granted by Congress to the secretary of the treasury to remit fines and forfeitures, including the informer's share, and this power is not unconstitutional as being an invasion of the President's right of pardon.² The power to make the remission after suit has been instituted, but before judgment, is expressly conferred in some cases;³ and in other cases the power extends to remitting the informer's share of the penalty at any time before or after a final decree or judgment until the money is actually paid over for distribution.⁴

Conditional or Partial Remission. — It has been held that the remission by the secretary of the treasury need not be absolute, but he has the power to remit any part less than the whole fine or forfeiture, or to remit upon a condition consistent with law.⁵

4. Release by Informer. — Where an informer's right has become vested by judgment it has been held that he may release his share of the judgment, but his release will not affect the remainder.⁶ But under a statute allowing an action for a certain penalty to be brought by any person who may sue for it, it has been held that no interest which can be the subject of compromise or arbitration is acquired by an informer until the demand for the penalty is asserted by the institution of a suit for its recovery.⁷

5. Misconduct of Informer. — It has been held that if, after the seizure of a vessel for a violation of the revenue laws, the informer is intrusted with the custody of the property, and endeavors to defraud the revenue of the United States of the fruit of the seizure by connivance with the party informed against, in which attempt he fails, this will not defeat his right to a part of the forfeiture, since his right as informer cannot be affected by his misconduct as agent.⁸

VI. ENFORCEMENT OF INFORMER'S RIGHTS. — Under statutes providing that a fine or forfeiture shall go in whole or in part to the informer, it may be laid down as a general rule that an informer cannot maintain an action for the penalty unless power is given to him for that purpose by the statute in express terms or by necessary implication.⁹ But he will be entitled to bring suit for

But in Raynham v. Rounseville, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 44, it was held, under a statute giving a penalty to be recovered by a qui tam action, one half to the use of the prosecutor and the other half to the use of the town, that if a person, having brought such an action, afterwards compromised it by receiving a sum of money of the defendant and had the action entered "neither party" on the docket, the town could not maintain assumpsit against the plaintiff in the qui tam suit to recover a part of the money received by him.

the penalty if authorized by statute, as where the statute gives the penalty or forfeiture, or a part of it, to any person who shall prosecute therefor.¹

Whether Two or More May Sue for Penalty. — Two or more persons may not unite in an action as informers for the recovery of a penalty unless the right is conferred by statute, and hence a statute giving a moiety of a fine or penalty to the person who shall sue therefor does not authorize a suit by two or more informers jointly.²

Effect of Death of Defendant. — Under statute in Massachusetts giving an action of tort to a common informer to recover of the owner of a place in which property is lost by gaming treble the value thereof, it has been held that the action does not survive against the representatives of the defendant.³

The necessary element in its signification is “locality of existence.” The permanency of the residence indicated, however, depends in a great degree upon the context. The word has been variously construed to mean an occupier of lands, a resident, a permanent resident, one having a domicile, a citizen, a qualified voter. The construction is generally governed by the connection in which the word is used.⁵

"one who has his domicile in a place; one who has an actual fixed residence in a place." Bouv. L. Dict., followed in Merrill v. Morrissett, 76 Ala. 437; Crawford v. Wilson, 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 504; Ryall v. Kennedy, 67 N. Y. 386.

"No words are capable of a larger or more limited interpretation." Lord Eldon in Atty.-Gen. v. Forster, 10 Ves. Jr. 339.

In Spragins v. Houghton, 3 Ill. 396, it was said: "The term inhabitant is derived from the Latin habito, and signifies to live in, to dwell in, and is applied exclusively to one who lives in a place and has there a fixed and legal settlement. It embraces locality of existence. It refers to the place of a person's actual residence, and excludes the idea of an occasional or temporary residence; and as used in the section referred to, the place where the elector dwells at the time of his voting." Construed with Reference to Context and Subject-matter.—In Rex v. Mashiter, 6 Ad. & El. 153, 33 E. C. L. 38, Coleridge, J., said: "Any lawyer who was asked the interpretation of the word inhabitants would say: 'I must see where it is used, for by itself it has no definite meaning.' If its signification varies, we must resort to the context for explanation." See also Withnell v. Gartham, 6 T. R. 398; Russell v. Devon County, 2 T. R. 672; *Rex v. Question for Jury.—"In general terms, one may be designated as an inhabitant of that place which constitutes the principal seat of his residence, of his business pursuits, connections, attachments, and of his political and municipal relations. It is manifest, therefore, that it embraces the fact of residence at a place with the intent to regard it and make it his home. The act and intent must concur, and the intent may be inferred from declarations and conduct. It is often a question of great difficulty, depending upon minute and complicated circumstances, leaving the question in so much doubt that a slight circumstance may turn the balance. * * * But it is a question of fact for the jury, to be determined from all the circumstances of the case." Lyman v. Fiske, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 234, 28 Am. Dec. 293. See also the title QUESTIONS OF LAW AND FACT.

A Legacy to the poor inhabitants of the parish was held good, but confined to those poor who did not receive alms. "The word inhabitant bears a very general sense, and may extend to everybody living in the parish." Atty.-Gen. v. Clarke, Amb. 422.

Inhabitant and Parishioner.—In Atty.-Gen. v. Parker, 3 Atk. 577, it was said: "Inhabitants is still a larger word [than 'parishioners'], takes in housekeepers, though not rated to the poor, takes in also persons who are not housekeepers; as, for instance, such who have gained a settlement, and by that means become inhabitants."

Inhabit.—In School Dist. No. 2 v. Pollard, 55 N. H. 504, it was said: "The word inhabit is derived from the Latin verb habito, which is defined, 'to dwell, to abide, to inhabit, or live in.' 'Reside' is from re and sedco, 'to sit down;' and 'dwell,' from the Danish dwellger, 'to abide.' All these terms are usually classed as synonyms, but not, in strictness, properly so; for the word inhabit does not convey the idea of permanent residence."

To inhabit is to occupy a place as a settled residence. Hinds v. Hinds, 1 Iowa 41.

Temporary Residence.—"The popular meaning of the term inhabitant is a resident or dweller in a place, in opposition to a mere sojourner or transient person." Long v. Brown, 4 Ala. 630. See also State v. Primrose, 3 Ala. 546; Crawford v. Wilson, 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 520; State v. Boyd, 31 Neb. 727; Boardman v. Bickford, 2 Aik. (Vt.) 345.

Inhabitant means "one who dwells or resides permanently in a place, or who has a fixed residence, as distinguished from an occasional lodger or visitor." Imperial Dict., quoted in Gormully, etc., Mfg. Co. v. Pope Mfg. Co., 34 Fed. Rep. 819.

One who has an actual but merely temporary residence in a place is not in any proper sense an inhabitant of that place. State v. Casper, 36 N. J. L. 368. See also State v. Ross, 23 N. J. L. 520.

In Bicycle Stepladder Co. v. Gordon, 57 Fed. Rep. 529, it was held that a resident of Kentucky who was temporarily in Illinois was not an inhabitant of Illinois within the meaning of the United States statute providing that no civil suit should be brought against any person in another district than that whereof he was a resident.

A foreigner who resides and transacts business in New York for seven years, and then leaves without intention of returning, taking his property with him, and at the end of a few weeks returns merely for a temporary purpose, is not an inhabitant within the meaning of an insolvent act. Matter of Wrigley, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 603, affirmed 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 134.

One who came into a parish with one load, intending to return with another, did not come to inhabit. Rex v. St. James, 10 East 25.

Sleeping once or twice in a place does not constitute one an inhabitant. Reg v. Exeter, L. R. 4 Q. B. 113.

But where a statute provided that "in action on joint contracts, if all the defendants are not inhabitants of this state, the service of the process upon such as are inhabitants of this state shall be sufficient notice to maintain the suit against all the defendants," the court said: "It is said that the statute does not apply to a case where none of the defendants permanently reside in the state. But we think otherwise. It would be giving too narrow a construction to the word inhabitant as used in the statute. We think the statute should be held to include, by a fair and liberal construction, every person who is in the state, whether here for a longer or shorter period." Bishop v. Vose, 27 Conn. 9.

Legal Settlement.—In Boardman v. Bickford,
Volume XVI.

2 Aik. (Vt.) 345, it was held that a legal settlement within the state was not necessary to constitute one an inhabitant thereof, within the meaning of the act directing proceedings against the trustees of a concealed or absconding debtor.

Definite Absence.—The incumbent of a benefice claimed to be entitled to vote in respect of the occupation by him of his rectory house. The claimant was absent from his house from October to June, under a license for nonresidence, obtained from his bishop, for a definite period. Three rooms in the house were retained by the claimant and kept locked up, but the house was occupied by his curate. It was admitted by the claimant that he could not have returned to reside in the house without providing some other residence for the curate. It was held that the claimant was not an inhabitant during the qualifying year, as required by the statute. Durant v. Carter, L. R. 9 C. P. 261.

But militiamen absent on duty are inhabitants of the place where they have dwelling houses and their families reside, within the meaning of a local election act. Rex v. Mitchell, 10 East 511.

Avowed Intention of Leaving State.—While a man remains in the state, though avowing an intention to withdraw from it, he must be considered an inhabitant. "The having once been an inhabitant will not, however, protect a man forever from a foreign attachment, where he has notoriously emigrated from the state and settled elsewhere." Lyle v. Foreman, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 480.

Two Residences—Living in One Place and Carrying On Business in Another.—Where a person occupied premises in one parish and carried on his business in person there, but resided in his dwelling house in another, he was held not an inhabitant of the former. Rex v. Adlard, 4 B. & C. 772, 10 E. C. L. 458; Rex v. Nicholson, 12 East 330; Holledge's Case, 1 Bott. 134.

Where a citizen, having lived many years at W., in the county of M., purchased and furnished a house at B., in the county of S., and afterwards with his family spent his summers at his house in W., where he continued to pay his taxes, and his winters at his house in B., and died while so residing in B., it was held that he was an inhabitant of W. within the meaning of a probate statute. Harvard College v. Gore, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 369.

Objection being taken to process of outlawry because it described the defendant as an inhabitant of W., whereas he worked there but resided elsewhere, the court said: "It is necessary to state the township; but if the defendant is proved to have been there, it is enough to satisfy the designation. The first day a man comes into a place he is a stranger; the second day he is considered as a guest; and the third day he becomes an inhabitant. But if any one comes from New Jersey and stays only an hour in Pennsylvania, during which he commits an offense, he must be charged as of the township in which he was at the time, for he cannot be called of New Jersey." Respublica v. Steele, 2 Dall. (Pa.) 92.

"The term inhabitant * * * means something more than a person having a mere temporary residence. It imports citizenship and municipal relations; and if the term were less unequivocal than it is, it could never be presumed, in the absence of the most explicit enactment, that the legislature designed to impose a poll tax upon the citizens of another state." Inhabitaney and residence are synonymous with domicil, and a citizen of Georgia having a house and establishment in New Jersey, where he spends five or six months of the year, is not an inhabitant within a poll-tax act. State v. Ross, 23 N. J. L. 517.

But under an act for the taxation of personal property, one is an inhabitant of a town which is in the state of which he is a citizen and in which he has a summer residence, if he is dwelling there at the time of assessment. Bell v. Pierce, 48 Barb. (N. Y.) 51.

Inhabitant and Domicil.—Upon the meaning of the word inhabitant as used in a statute regulating the probate of wills, the court in Merrill v. Morrisett, 76 Ala. 437, said: "We take it that the word inhabitant, as used in the * * * code, having reference to testamentary cases, is used as a synonym for domiciliary resident, or one who has his domicil in a given county." And so the meaning of one who has his domicil in a certain place has frequently been given to the term inhabitant. State v. Ross, 23 N. J. L. 527; Crawford v. Wilson, 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 504; Kellogg v. Winnebago County, 42 Wis. 107; Hall v. Hall, 25 Wis. 600.

In Ryall v. Kennedy, 67 N. Y. 386, Judge Miller, in discussing the question of domicil and residence, said: "Generally speaking, domicil and residence mean the same thing. And an inhabitant is defined to be one who has his domicil in a place or a fixed residence there." See also Matter of Colebrook, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 26 Misc. (N. Y.) 142.

Under an act regulating the probate of wills, it has been held that one is an inhabitant of the place of his domicil. Isham v. Gibbons, 1 Bradd. (N. Y.) 70.

In Massachusetts it is provided by law that every person shall be considered an inhabitant, for the purpose of electing and being elected into any office, in the town, district, or plantation where he dwells or has his home. This makes the question one of domicil. Opinion of Justices, 5 Met. (Mass.) 588.

In Borland v. Boston, 132 Mass. 89, it was held that the word inhabitant, when used in reference to being elected to office, meant one having his home in or being domiciled in the place mentioned. In this case the court disapproved Briggs v. Rochester, 16 Gray (Mass.) 337; Colton v. Longmeadow, 12 Allen (Mass.) 598. See also Boston Invest. Co. v. Boston, 158 Mass. 461.

In that state the question is treated as one of domicil. By a departure from the state, going to Europe, leasing his house at home and hiring another in Paris, where he remains sixteen months, one does not cease to be an inhabitant for the purpose of taxation of his personality. The court said: "If the departure from one's fixed and settled abode is for a purpose in its nature temporary, whether it be business or pleasure, accompanied with an intent of returning and resuming the former place of abode as soon as such purpose is accomplished, in general, such a person continues to be an inhabitant at such place of abode, for all purposes of enjoying civil and political privileges, and of being subject to civil duties." Sears v. Boston, 1 Met. (Mass.) 250. But if the removal is permanent the inhabitancy terminates. Thayer v. Boston, 124 Mass. 132.

But within a statute providing that a County Court should have exclusive power to grant letters of administration upon the estate of a person who was an inhabitant of the county, it was held that the word inhabitant had a narrower and more limited signification than "domicil," and implied a personal presence in the county as a dweller therein. Holmes v. Oregon, etc., R. Co., 5 Fed. Rep. 523. See also Briggs v. Rochester, 16 Gray (Mass.) 337; Hinds v. Hinds, 1 Iowa 43.

Inhabitant and Resident.—In a plea of a discharge under an insolvency act it was stated that the defendant was a resident of a certain county, where the act required that the insolvent should be an inhabitant. The court said: "These words signify the same thing; a person resident is defined to be one 'dwelling or having his abode in any place,' an inhabitant, 'one that resides in a place.'" Roosevelt v. Kellogg, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 210.

In an act requiring the appointment of substantial inhabitants to collect the rate on real estate, this word means residents. The court said: "The word inhabitant may mean either occupier or resident. The latter is the proper sense when it is used to denote persons on whom a personal (and not a pecuniary) charge is to be imposed. Rex v. Adlard, 4 B. & C. 772, 10 E. C. L. 458. Here a personal service is imposed." Donne v. Martyr, 8 B. & C. 62, 15 E. C. L. 154.

And in the following cases the terms "resident" and inhabitant were held synonymous: Rex v. Nicholson, 12 East 330; Rex v. Rochester, 12 East 353; Reg. v. Exeter, L. R. 4 Q. B. 113; Zambrino v. Galveston, etc., R. Co., 38 Fed. Rep. 452; Bicycle Stepladder Co. v. Gordon, 57 Fed. Rep. 531; Shaw v. Quincy Min. Co., 145 U. S. 444; Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Hartford, 3 Conn. 24; McCormick v. Johnson County, 68 Ind. 217; Hinds v. Hinds, 1 Iowa 43; Matter of Wrigley, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 140; People v. Platt, 50 Hun (N. Y.) 458; Munroe v. Williams, 37 S. Car. 86; Brown v. Boulden, 18 Tex. 434.

But it has been held that the word implies a more fixed and permanent abode than "resident," and frequently imports many privileges and duties which a mere resident could not claim or be subject to. Tazewell County v. Davenport, 40 Ill. 206.

Thus in Givanovich's Succession, (La. 1897) 24 So. Rep. 680, McEnery, J., said: "An inhabitant is one who dwells or resides permanently in a place, or who has a fixed residence, as distinguished from an occasional lodger or visitor; as, the inhabitant of a house or cottage; the inhabitants of a town, city, county, or state. Webster. The words 'resident' and inhabitant are not synonymous, the latter implying a more fixed and permanent abode than the former, and frequently imports many privileges and duties to which a nonresident could not lay claim or be subject.

Abb. Law Dict. The word inhabitant imports citizenship and municipal obligations."

So in Frost v. Brisbin, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 11, it was said that the word inhabitant "implies a more fixed and permanent abode" than the word "resident."

And in School Dist. No. 2 v. Pollard, 55 N. H. 504, it was said that inhabit conveys the idea of a home, but not necessarily of a full and fixed settlement, such as is conveyed by the term "residence."

In Opinion of Justices, 1 Har. & M. (Md.) 558, it was said: "The act has declared who shall be deemed inhabitants, for a certain purpose; but you must go further, and say an inhabitant is a resident; and in doing so you go beyond the act, when, on the contrary, for the reason above, it ought to be construed most strictly. This part of the case may be further explained by an instance: Suppose a number of people should be incorporated under the name of the inhabitants of Dale, and be made capable of suing and being sued; an action brought by or against them in the name of the residents of Dale could not be supported."

And for the distinction between inhabitant and resident see Barney v. Oelrichs, 138 U. S. 532; Tazewell County v. Davenport, 40 Ill. 206; Harvard College v. Gore, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 369.

Inhabitant and Citizen.—"The words inhabitants or 'residents' may comprehend aliens, or they may be restrained to such inhabitants or residents who are citizens, according to the subject-matter to which they are applied." Opinion of Justices, 7 Mass. 525.

Thus the terms inhabitants and "citizens" are frequently used synonymously. Shaw v. Quincy Min. Co., 145 U. S. 444; Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Gonzales, 151 U. S. 501; State v. Primrose, 3 Ala. 546; McKenzie v. Murphy, 24 Ark. 155; Risewick v. Davis, 19 Md. 93; Opinion of Justices, 7 Mass. 525; State v. Boyd, 31 Neb. 727; State v. Ross, 23 N. J. L. 520; Union Hotel Co. v. Hersee, 79 N. Y. 461.

In laws prescribing qualifications of electors and of office, the word inhabitant is generally construed to be equivalent to "citizen." "The words inhabitant, 'citizen,' and 'resident,' as employed in different constitutions to define the qualifications of electors, mean substantially the same thing; and one is an inhabitant, resident, or citizen at the place where he has his domicile or home." Cooley's Const. Lim. (6th ed.) 754. See also Thorndike v. Boston, 1 Met. (Mass.) 242.

The Constitution of New Hampshire provided that "every male inhabitant of each town * * * in this state, of twenty-one years of age and upwards," should have a right to vote. In construing this constitution in the Opinion of Justices, 8 N. H. 574, the court said: "The term inhabitant, as used in this relation, was not intended to include all residents; and reasons of public policy seem to show conclusively that it must be confined to such inhabitants as are citizens of the state."

The Judiciary Act of 1789, § 11, provides that "no civil suit shall be brought before either of said courts [Circuit and District Courts] against an inhabitant of the United States by any original process in any other district than that whereof he is an inhabitant, or in which he shall be found at the time of serving the writ." In construing this act, Story, J., said: "I lay no particular stress upon the word inhabitant, and deem it a mere equivalent description of 'citizen' and 'alien' in the general clause conferring jurisdiction over parties. A person might be an inhabitant without being a citizen; and a citizen might not be an inhabitant, though he retained his citizenship. Alienage or citizenship is one thing, and inhabitancy, by which I understand local residence animo manendi, quite another. I read, then, the clause thus: 'No civil suit shall be brought before either of said courts against an alien or a citizen by any original process, in any other district than that whereof he is an inhabitant or in which he shall be found at the time of serving the writ.'" Picquet v. Swan, 5 Mason (U. S.) 35, followed in Toland v. Sprague, 12 Pet. (U. S.) 328.

In construing this statute in Shaw v. Quincy Min. Co., 145 U. S. 447, the court said: "The word inhabitant, in that act, was apparently used, not in any larger meaning than 'citizen,' but to avoid the incongruity of speaking of a citizen of anything less than a state when the intention was to cover not only a district which included a whole state, but also two districts in one state, like the districts of Maine and Massachusetts in the state of Massachusetts and the districts of Virginia and Kentucky in the state of Virginia, established by section 2 of the same act."

A much less restricted meaning was put upon the word in Spragins v. Houghton, 3 Ill. 377, where it was decided that under a constitutional provision that every white male inhabitant of the age of twenty-one years, who has resided in the state six months immediately preceding any general election, is entitled to vote at such election, an unnaturalized Irishman is qualified to vote. The court said: "The term inhabitant is derived from the Latin habito, and signifies to live in, to dwell in; and is applied exclusively to one who lives in a place and has there a fixed and legal settlement. It embraces locality of existence. It refers to the place of a person's actual residence, and excludes the idea of an occasional or temporary residence; and as used in the section referred to, the place where the elector dwells at the time of his voting. The term is conceived to be entirely free from technicality, and has a known and universally accepted meaning, all agreeing in considering inhabitant as directly connected with habitation and abode. It is supposed that a term of no technicality, so simple and expressive in itself, and so clear and definite in its character, is susceptible of but one meaning. This residence, however, is to be bona fide, and not casual or temporary. To determine, then, the qualifications of an elector in this state, it would seem to be wholly unnecessary to inquire whether the elector was a citizen of the United States. * * * The word inhabitant comprehends a single fact, locality of existence; that of citizen, a combination of civil privileges, some of which may be enjoyed in any state of the Union. The word 'citizen' may properly be construed, a member of a political society; and although he might be absent for years and cease to be an inhabitant of its territory, the right of citizenship may not thereby be forfeited, but may be resumed whenever he may choose to return.' From what has already been said, it must appear that the words 'citizen' and inhabitant cannot be considered synonymous." And see Opinion of Justices, 122 Mass. 594.

In Ex p. Blumer, 27 Tex. 737, it was said: "Vattel says: 'The inhabitants, as distinguished from citizens, are strangers who are permitted to settle and stay in the country. Bound by their residence to the society, they are subject to the laws of the state whilst they reside there; and they are obliged to defend it because it grants them protection, though they do not participate in all the rights of citizens.'" See also Matter of Wrigley, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 605; Picquet v. Swan, 5 Mason (U. S.) 40.

An inhabitant of a county during one year preceding his appointment to the office of county superintendent is not ineligible thereto because not a citizen thereof during so long a time. A citizen is a native or naturalized person. An inhabitant is one having a fixed and permanent residence in a county. State v. Kilroy, 86 Ind. 118.

A man born in Pennsylvania, who on December 26, 1776, departed and joined the enemy, and was subsequently brought back into the state as a prisoner of war, was upon his return an inhabitant, but not a subject of the state within the meaning of an act of attainder. Respublica v. Chapman, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 53.

In State v. Primrose, 3 Ala. 546, it was said that it by no means follows that an inhabitant is a subject or citizen; a foreigner, permanently resident, is as much an inhabitant as if he were a citizen or subject. In that case, however, it was held that the word inhabitant was used in the sense of citizen.

An allegation that defendants are inhabitants of a certain state is not a sufficient allegation of citizenship to confer jurisdiction upon a federal court on the ground of diverse citizenship. The court said: "There is here no allegation of the citizenship of either of the individual defendants, and the term inhabitant or 'resident,' it is well settled, does not necessarily imply citizenship, and cannot be substituted for it." Allen B. Wrisley Co. v. George E. Rouse Soap Co., 90 Fed. Rep. 6, citing Grace v. American Cent. Ins. Co., 109 U. S. 278.

Inhabitants includes qualified voters of a town, and is frequently used to mean such. Baldwin v. North Branford, 32 Conn. 47.

"Our constitution and statutes, with great uniformity, use the word 'citizen' to designate one who is a citizen of the state and of the United States, and the term inhabitant to designate the domiciled resident of a town, and such is the general acceptance of the terms." Bull v. Warren, 36 Conn. 85.

Where an Act of Congress vests the title to certain lands in the inhabitants of a township, and a subsequent act authorizes their sale with the consent of the inhabitants, which is to be ascertained by a vote of the qualified electors, a sale under the latter act is binding on the inhabitants. Long v. Brown, 4 Ala. 622.

In Bryan v. Lincoln, 50 Neb. 622, it was said: "It was stated in an act that towns and cities might submit a proposition to the vote of the inhabitants. The word inhabitants was held to mean 'voters.'" Citing 6 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW (1st ed.) 445; Walnut v. Wade, 103 U. S. 693.

In an act authorizing municipal corporations to subscribe to railway stock, on approval by the inhabitants of the city, inhabitants means "legal voters." The court said: "In its broadest sense this would include all sexes, ages, and conditions. To require the approval by a vote of the inhabitants in this sense would be an absurdity. The act itself is its own interpreter, and shows that this is not its meaning. * * * The act, though carelessly drawn, clearly meant to restrict the election to the voters, and the approval of the inhabitants was to be indicated by the vote of a majority of the legal voters." Walnut v. Wade, 103 U. S. 694. See generally the title MUNICIPAL AID.

Under an act providing that no school district shall be abolished without the consent of a majority of the "taxable inhabitants," aliens cannot vote, but only those qualified to vote for officers. State v. Deshler, 25 N. J. L. 180, the court saying: "The words 'taxable inhabitants,' it is clear, cannot have their full, unrestrained meaning, so as to include every resident liable to be taxed, or they must be held to include not only females but infants of the most tender age. Some restrictions must therefore be put upon them. What it shall be must depend upon the connection in which they are used and the constitution and statutes relating to the same subject." State v. Deshler, 25 N. J. L. 180.

Householder.—"An inhabitant is defined to be a householder in a place, as inhabitants in a vill are the householders in a vill. The word inhabitants includes tenants in fee simple, tenants for life, tenants at will, and he that has no interest but his habitation and dwelling. He who hath a house in his hands in a town may be said to be an inhabitant." Matter of Wrigley, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 141.

Corporations. (See also the titles CORPORATIONS (PRIVATE), vol. 7, p. 694; FOREIGN CORPORATIONS, vol. 13, p. 834.)—The term inhabitant has in many cases been held to include a corporation. Rex v. Gardner, 1 Cowp. 79; Zambrino v. Galveston, etc., R. Co., 38 Fed. Rep. 452; Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Letson, 2 How. (U. S.) 497; Jenkins v. California State Co., 22 Cal. 538; Davis v. Central R., etc. Co., 17 Ga. 328; Baldwin v. Ministerial Fund, 37 Me. 369; Greene Foundation v. Boston, 12 Cush. (Mass.) 54; Ontario Bank v. Bunnell, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 193; People v. Utica Ins. Co., 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 382; Tripp v. Merchants' Mut. F. Ins. Co., 12 R. I. 435; Crookston v. Centennial Eureka Min. Co., 13 Utah 117.

In U. S. Bank v. Deveaux, 5 Cranch (U. S.) 88, it was stated by Chief Justice Marshall that the word inhabitant, in the statute of Hen. VIII., concerning bridges and highways, which provided that they should be made and repaired by the "inhabitants of the city, shire, or riding," was held to include a corporation that had lands within said city, shire, or riding, although it might reside elsewhere. See also Rex v. Hall, 1 B. & C. 136, 8 E. C. L. 59.

In Rex v. Gardner, 1 Cowp. 79, it was held that a corporation seized of lands in fee for its own profit was, within the meaning of the statute 43 Eliz., c. 2, an inhabitant or occupier of such lands.

In Ontario Bank v. Bunnell, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 193, it was said: "There can be no doubt the term inhabitant includes a corporation occupying an office or building in a town, ward, or village, in conducting the business of their corporation for many purposes, and especially with reference to the burdens of taxation for public purposes."

In Gormully, etc., Mfg. Co. v. Pope Mfg. Co., 34 Fed. Rep. 820, it was said: "I am not aware that the term inhabitant, as applicable to a corporation in a case like this, has ever been judicially defined, but it seems to me a corporation must be held to be an inhabitant of the place where it has its principal place of business, where its corporate offices and records are kept and its corporate meetings are lawfully held. A corporation, like an individual, may have agents representing it in a district of which it is not an inhabitant."

But a foreign corporation has been held to be an inhabitant of any state in which it operates its lines and maintains offices for the transaction of business. U. S. v. Southern Pac. R. Co., 49 Fed. Rep. 304; East Tennessee, etc., R. Co. v. Atlanta, etc., R. Co., 49 Fed. Rep. 608; Gilbert v. New Zealand Ins. Co., 49 Fed. Rep. 884; Miller v. Eastern Oregon Gold Min. Co., 45 Fed. Rep. 347; U. S. Bank v. Deveaux, 5 Cranch (U. S.) 88. See also the title UNITED STATES COURTS.

In Zambrino v. Galveston, etc., R. Co., 38 Fed. Rep. 452, it was held that a railroad company doing business in one district, although its principal office is in another district, may be considered as inhabiting both districts, within the United States statute which provides that no suit shall be brought before the federal courts in any district other than that whereof the defendant is an inhabitant.

In Home Ins. Co. v. City Council, 50 Ga. 540, it was held that a foreign corporation having officers and an office and doing business in Augusta, Georgia, was an inhabitant of that state within a license act.

In Shainwald v. Davids, 69 Fed. Rep. 704, a foreign insurance company doing business within the state was held to be an inhabitant, within a United States statute conferring jurisdiction upon United States courts.

In Pennsylvania Co. v. Sloan, 1 Ill. App. 371, it was held that a corporation created by the law of one state and doing business by permission in another, although a citizen in the former, was an inhabitant of the latter for purposes of jurisdiction. See also Stillwell v. Empire F. Ins. Co., 4 Cent. L. J. 463.

In Tripp v. Merchants' Mut. F. Ins. Co., 12 R. I. 435, the court said: "It is contended that the provision recited [imposing a tax on personal property] does not subject them [corporations], because it only extends to personal property belonging to the inhabitants of the state, and a corporation cannot be an inhabitant in any proper sense of the word. We should be inclined to consider the argument conclusive if the statute itself did not refute it. Section 2 of cap. 38 designates the property which is exempt from taxation. Among the property so designated is 'the property, real and personal, held for or by any incorporated library society,' and 'the property, real and personal, not exceeding twenty thousand dollars in value, held for or by any church or incorporated religious society or incorporated charitable society.' If the property were not liable to taxation, any exemption would be unnecessary."

But that a corporation is not an inhabitant within the natural, ordinary, and literal meaning of the word, see People v. Schoonmaker, 63 Barb. (N. Y.) 44.

And in Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Hartford, 3 Conn. 24, it was said: "This word has a technical sense which has no bearing on this inquiry. The popular sense of the term is the same as resident, or one who lives in a place. An inhabitant necessarily implies an habitation, an abode, a place of dwelling. It requires no reflection to determine that in this sense a corporation resides nowhere. It is an artificial person, a creature of the imagination, subsisting only in intendment and consideration of law." This reasoning was followed in State Bank v. City Council, 3 Rich. L. (S. Car.) 348, where it was said: "Is a bank an inhabitant of Charleston? Surely not! It is a body in law, but not in fact; it exists altogether in paper—its charter—and cannot be an inhabitant living and dwelling in the city."

A banking corporation is not an inhabitant of a county for the purpose of taxation of its capital stock, though it may be for some purposes. Cherokee Ins., etc., Co. v. Justices, 28 Ga. 121.

A Massachusetts statute provided that all personal property within or without the commonwealth should be assessed to the owner in the city or town where he was an inhabitant. It was held that this did not refer to foreign corporations. The court said that the word inhabitant in the statute meant one whose domicile was in the place referred to. Boston Investment Co. v. Boston, 158 Mass. 462, citing Borland v. Boston, 132 Mass. 89.

Occupier.—In the early English rate acts, inhabitant was interpreted to mean occupier, landholder. 2 Inst. 702; Rex v. Hall, 1 B. & C. 136, 8 E. C. L. 59; Rex v. Gardner, 1 Cowp. 79; Rex v. Guardians of Poor, 3 T. R. 523. But see Rex v. Liverpool, 8 East 456, note c.

In an act authorizing guardians of the poor to apprentice poor children to any inhabitant or occupier of lands in the parish, inhabitant and occupier are synonymous. The idea of residence is not necessarily included. Rex v. Guardians of Poor, 3 T. R. 523.

Infant. (See also the title INFANTS, ante, p. 255.)—"All the inhabitants" living within certain limits, in an act of incorporation, intends "all those who were inhabitants of the several towns from which the new town was taken, who were of full age and sui juris." The expression does not include an infant whose father has a settlement elsewhere, but whose mother, who is also his guardian, is divorced from his father, and is settled in the town. Marlborough v. Hebron, 2 Conn. 22.

School. (See also the title SCHOOLS.)—A statute provided that no person should have a right to attend school or to send any scholar to the school in any district in which he was not an inhabitant. It was held that the minor children of paupers, supported at the county poor farms, had a right to attend the public school in the district in which such county farm was located. School Dist. No. 2 v. Polard, 55 N. H. 503.

But a person temporarily and fraudulently located in a district for the sole purpose of acquiring an education is not an inhabitant. School Dist. No. 1 v. Bragdon, 23 N. H. 507.

Inhabited Building.—In State v. Collins, 2 Idaho 1182, a jail occupied by two prisoners was held to be an inhabited building within an arson statute.

Inhabitant of House.—An act providing that an entry into a house for the purpose of committing theft is not burglary when made by a domestic servant or other inhabitant of such house, does not cover the case of a boarder in a boarding house entering the room of another boarder. The act applies only to those who have a recognized right of entry, which one guest has not into the room of another. Ullman v. State, 1 Tex. App. 221.

Inhabitants of Street.—Persons residing in houses abutting on a street are inhabitants of the street, within an act making it penal to disturb such inhabitants by loud, indecent, and profane language. Keller v. State, 25 Tex. App. 325.

Attachment.—An unmarried man who took lodgings in a place, rented a store, and declared his intention of taking up a permanent residence there, and after six months absconded, is an inhabitant within a domestic attachment law. Kennedy v. Baillie, 3 Yeates (Pa.) 55.

But one who sails as a supercargo, taking with him the bulk of his property, making a partial assignment of the rest for the benefit of his creditors, and leaving his wife and child behind, and who is absent nine months and is silent as to his return, is not an inhabitant within a foreign attachment act. Nailor v. French, 4 Yeates (Pa.) 241. In this case the court refused to lay down a general rule to govern this class of cases.

Inhabitants in the Sense of Persons.—The Constitution of Montana provided that the legislative assembly should not levy taxes upon the inhabitants or property in any county, city, or town, or municipal corporation, for county, town, or municipal purposes. It was held that this did not apply to a license tax. It was argued by counsel that the word inhabitants meant persons, and that the only kind of tax that could be levied upon persons would be a license tax, which is personal, while the tax upon property is not personal; and therefore that the use of the word inhabitant could mean nothing but a prohibition against the legislature levying the only kind of a personal tax, i. e., a license tax. The court refused to sustain this provision, saying: "It was not important that the section uses the word inhabitants as well as 'property,' for the result is the same, and the taxation referred to meant a property tax; that is to say, a tax upon a person, levied upon the basis of the property owned by him." State v. Camp Sing, 18 Mont. 128. See also People v. Martin, 60 Cal. 153.

INHERITANCE. (See also the titles ESTATES, vol. 11, p. 364; SUCCESSION; TAXATION.) — The term "inheritance" is usually applied in law to

Nonresident Property Holders. — Inhabitant has been held not to include nonresident property owners under an act exempting the inhabitants of a city "from working upon any road beyond the limits of the city, and from paying any tax to procure laborers to work upon the same." Fletcher v. Oliver, 25 Ark. 289.

Out of the Commonwealth. — A Kentucky statute authorized service by publication where the defendant was shown to be "out of this commonwealth." In construing this statute the court said: "We think the legislative meaning of the words 'out of this commonwealth' imply and embrace the case of one who is properly described as not 'an inhabitant.'" In law, the term inhabitant is used technically with varying meaning in respect of permanency of abode." Century Dict. To be an inhabitant does not imply the relation of the inhabitant to the commonwealth. It refers primarily to one's abode or residence for the time being. If one is not an inhabitant, it is understood that he has no abode in the place spoken of. To be 'out of this commonwealth' implies, as we think, one permanently out, as a nonresident or non-inhabitant, and that the act, by authorizing constructive service of notice upon one 'out of this commonwealth,' meant one who had neither domicile nor habitation within it." Foster v. Givens, 67 Fed. Rep. 693.

Letters of Administration. — In an action for damages for negligently causing the death of the plaintiff's child, it appeared that at the time of the accident the plaintiff lived, and for seven months prior thereto had lived, in New York; he came from England, and his wife and child were coming to join him and live with him. It was held that the evidence showed prima facie that he was domiciled in New York, so that his child was an inhabitant thereof, and that the surrogate of that county properly issued letters of administration to him. Ryall v. Kennedy, 67 N. Y. 380.

Divorce. — In Winship v. Winship, 16 N. J. Eq. 107, a citizen of another state who had brought his effects into New Jersey, and established a residence there, but with the manifest intention of procuring a divorce, and had immediately commenced a suit for that purpose, was held not to be an inhabitant of New Jersey, within the meaning of the act concerning divorces.

Legacy, Gift, etc. (See generally the title WILLS.) — A legacy for the benefit of the inhabitants of a place would seem to be a good charitable bequest. Atty.-Gen. v. Clarke, Amb. 422. See also the title CHARITIES AND TRUSTS FOR CHARITABLE USES, vol. 5, p. 893. And in Rogers v. Thomas, 2 Keen 8, the word inhabitants, in a gift to the inhabitants of a certain parish, was held to be designatio personarum. As to prescriptions see Willingale v. Maitland, L. R. 3 Eq. 103, and see the title PRESCRIPTIONS.

1. Inhale. (See also the title LIFE INSURANCE.) — An exception in an insurance policy that the insurance shall not extend to any bodily injury "by the taking of poison, contact with poisonous substances, or inhaling of gas, or by any surgical operation or medical treatment," does not cover a case of death caused by breathing illuminating gas which in some way escaped in the room of the insured while he slept. "Inhaling of gas" is here used to designate its use in dentistry, surgery, etc. "It contemplated a voluntary and intelligent act by the assured, not an involuntary and unconscious act." Paul v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 45 Hun (N. Y.) 313, affirmed 112 N. Y. 472. To the same effect see Pickett v. Pacific Mut. L. Ins. Co., 144 Pa. St. 79, distinguishing Pollock v. U. S. Mut. Acc. Assoc., 102 Pa. St. 230.

And that the term imports a voluntary act see McGlother v. Provident Mut. Acc. Co., 89 Fed. Rep. 688; Fidelity, etc., Co. v. Waterman, 161 Ill. 635.

2. Inheritor. — In Boys v. Bradley, 10 Hare 389, it was held that the word inheritor had been used merely in the sense of "taker."

Inherit. — In De Kay v. Irving, 5 Den. (N. Y.) 646, it was held that the term inherit would be held applicable to lands devised by a parent or ancestor to the child or descendant, to effectuate the intention of the testator. See also Jemison v. Scottish-American Mortg. Co., 19 Tex. Civ. App. 232.

In Rountree v. Pursell, 11 Ind. App. 522, the terms "descent" and inherit were held to have been used synonymously.

Inherited. — At the expiration of the particular estate, a testator provided that the lands should be inherited and equally divided among his grandchildren. The court said: "The word inherited (which is applied to the real estate only) implies taking immediately from the testator upon his death, as heirs take immediately from their ancestor upon his death." McArthur v. Scott, 113 U. S. 380.

Inherit and Pay. — In Donald v. Forger, (Supm. Ct. App. T.) 26 Misc. (N. Y.) 16, it was held that the fact that, in an artificial instrument by which a father and his family "pledged" to an employee five hundred dollars within thirty days after the father's death, use was made of the word inherit instead of the word "pay," did not make the beneficiary a legatee nor make the agreement one which must be enforced against the estate of the father, since deceased; and that the surviving guarantors were personally liable to the employee. The court said: "The word inherit, if used in the instrument in a strictly legal sense, was utterly meaningless, since the expression, when confined to the definition as accepted in law, is applicable only to a right of possession as vested in a lineal heir."

express the passage of real estate from the ancestor to the heir; but when used in connection with goods and chattels, it aptly, if not technically, signifies the succession to the ownership.¹ The term is also applied to an estate which descends or may descend to the heir upon the death of the ancestor.²

1. Horner v. Webster, 33 N. J. L. 391.

So in East v. Twyford, 9 Hare 729, the term inheritance was held to mean succession.

2. 2 Black. Com. 201.

Inheritance.—Inheritance is defined as a perpetuity in lands to a man and his heirs; the right to succeed to the estate of a person who dies intestate. The term is applied to lands. The property which is inherited is called an inheritance. The term inheritance includes not only lands and tenements which have been acquired by descent, but every fee simple or fee tail which a person has acquired by purchase may be said to be an inheritance. In civil law the term means the succession to all the rights of the deceased. Bouv. L. Dict., followed in Adams v. Akerlund, 168 Ill. 639.

An estate acquired by inheritance is one that has descended to the heir, and has been cast upon him by the single operation of law. Matter of Donahue, 36 Cal. 332.

Inheritance in the Sense of Distributive Shares.—A testator directed that on the happening of a certain event his farm should be so'd and the proceeds divided among his several children, and if any one or more of them "should die before inheriting, his, her, or their inheritance to be equally divided amongst the remainder." The court said: "The words 'inheriting' and inheritance, in the same clause, unquestionably refer to the same thing, and are used in the same sense; and the inheritance to which the testator referred must have been the distributive share of the proceeds arising from the sale of the farm. True, it would not be an inheritance, in the technical sense of that word, but this will was not drawn with professional accuracy. There is no doubt that the so-called inheritance referred to the proceeds of the sale, as there was nothing else to which it could refer; and, indeed, the entire sentence admits of no other construction." Ridgeway v. Underwood, 67 Ill. 426.

Including Personal Property. (See also INHERIT—INHERITOR, ante, p. 335.)—The words "inherit" and inheritance ordinarily relate to real estate. Rountree v. Pursell, 11 Ind. App. 522. But when a will directed that no child should control the part given to him, or which should come to him by inheritance from another, until of a certain age, it was held that the word inheritance was here used as designating anything that the child might be entitled to by succession and included personal property. Stevens v. Stevens, 23 N. J. Eq. 300. And in the following cases the term was held to apply to personalty: Matter of Donahue, 36 Cal. 329; Ridgeway v. Underwood, 67 Ill. 426; Horner v. Webster, 33 N. J. L. 390; Simmons v. Burrell, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 8 Misc. (N. Y.) 388; Shippen v. Izard, 1 S. & R. (Pa.) 222; Swanson v. Swanson, 2 Swan (Tenn.) 457; Matter of Fort, 14 Wash. 10.

3. Iniquity. (See also the title EQUITY, vol. 11, p. 162.)—As used in the maxim, "He that hath committed iniquity shall not have equity," it was said: "This means iniquity, not merely moral, nor necessarily what is against sound morals, but anything illegal." Tufts v. Tufts, 3 Woodb. & M. (U. S.) 490, citing Thomson v. Thomson, 7 Ves. 473; 1 Hovenden on Frauds 163; 1 Spence's Eq. Jur. 422; Jones v. Randall, 1 Cowp. 38; Farmer v. Russell, 1 B. & P. 296.

4. Initial Terminus.—In Citizens' St. R. Co. v. Africa, 100 Tenn. 37, it was said: "By the terms 'initial terminus' and 'final terminus' is meant that there must be a definite beginning point and a definite ending point, fixed by the charter, and that each line must be distinct in respect of its terminus and general route."

I. DEFINITION. — An injunction is a judicial process issuing out of a court of chancery, whereby a party is required to do or to refrain from doing a particular thing. The most ordinary form of injunction is that which operates to prevent the performance of an act. The other form of injunction commands that an act shall be done.¹

II. CLASSES OF INJUNCTIONS—1. Mandatory and Preventive Injunctions. — According to one classification, injunctions are mandatory or preventive. The remedy given by injunction is usually preventive in its character and operates to restrain the commission or continuance of an act or series of acts resulting in injury to the applicant. Nevertheless, it is settled beyond question that equity has jurisdiction in a proper case to compel affirmative performance of an act as well as to restrain it.² These injunctions are called mandatory, and Definition by Louisiana Code. — Code Prac. La., § 296, provides: "Injunction * * * is a mandate obtained from a court by a plaintiff, prohibiting one from doing an act which he contends may be injurious to him or impair a right which he claims." State v. Young, 38 La. Ann. 926.

will never be granted unless extreme or very serious damage at least will ensue from withholding that relief; and each case must of course depend on its own circumstances.¹ The earlier decisions, while reluctant to compel performance of an affirmative act, have accomplished this result by indirection; in other words, an order was granted restraining the person against whom the injunction was asked from allowing the thing to continue, which had the effect of compelling him to take some active measure.² The fact that the work complained of has been completed before the filing of the bill will not affect the petitioner's right to a mandatory injunction if he has been guilty of no acquiescence or delay.³

Whether Granted on Interlocutory Application. — In a number of decisions it is either said or held without qualification that a mandatory injunction will not be issued on an interlocutory application; that an injunction, unless issued after the decree, when it becomes a judicial process, can be used only for the purpose of prevention and protection.⁴ This view, however, is not supported by the weight of authority. While it is conceded that mandatory injunctions should rarely be granted except on final judgment, and only where a plain and imperative case for equitable interference is shown,⁵ they have been frequently issued on interlocutory applications.⁶ It is to be noted, however, that most

Illustration of Rule. — In Lane v. Newdigate, 10 Ves. Jr. 192, the object of the injunction was to compel the restoration of a stopgate which had been wrongfully removed. The order granted was not that the stopgate be restored, but to restrain the prevention of use of

of the cases in which mandatory injunctions were ordered on preliminary applications were cases in which some erection was placed and maintained by the defendant to effect the injury complained of, and its removal was ordered or its maintenance forbidden on the ground that by continuing such erection the defendant effected the act from doing which he was restrained.¹ Yet a mandatory injunction on preliminary application is not confined strictly to this class of cases. It has been held that where a chattel is of peculiar value (such as a monument), and the loss of it cannot be fully compensated in damages, equity will interfere and grant full relief by requiring specific delivery on an interlocutory application.²

2. Perpetual or Interlocutory Injunctions — a. PERPETUAL INJUNCTIONS. — With regard to the time during which injunctions are operative, they may be classed as interlocutory and perpetual. The nature and effect of an interlocutory injunction are explained in another connection.³ The effect of a perpetual injunction is perpetually to prohibit the defendant from asserting an alleged right, or perpetually to restrain him from the commission of an act contrary to equity and good conscience.⁴ Perpetual injunctions are awarded, or their issuance is directed, or the preliminary injunction already issued is made final or perpetual, by the final decree of the court, or when the rights of the parties so far as relates to the subject of the injunction are finally adjudicated or disposed of by the order or decree of the court.⁵ An injunction will not be perpetuated against a party until he is before the court.⁶ The burden of establishing a right to this kind of injunction is upon the party claiming it. A court will grant a perpetual injunction only when a clear right thereto is shown.⁷ In order to grant relief on the merits of the case by perpetual injunction it is not a prerequisite that a temporary injunction should have been applied for and granted.⁸ When a perpetual injunction is granted in the final decree, the preliminary injunction is merged therein, and its function and operative effect are thereby terminated.⁹ Where the relief sought is purely preventive, a court of equity will not continue or make perpetual an injunction after the cause for which it was granted has been removed and when danger

Not Provisional Remedy. — A permanent injunction is in no sense a provisional remedy. It is always, and must be, final relief. A court of equity may grant aid in an action where the pleadings show its necessity and the remedy is asked as the element of final relief sought; but after a judgment which does not award it, and which judgment is a final disposition of the case, there can be no permanent injunction granted upon affidavits and on orders. Jackson v. Bunnell, 113 N. Y. 216.

Improvident Award of Temporary Injunction — Effect. — Although an injunction may have been improvidently granted, yet if it is in effect when the final decree is made in the case, and the complainant shows himself entitled to the relief prayed for, it is proper to make the injunction perpetual so far as the complainant may show himself entitled to relief. Clark v. Young, 2 B. Mon. (Ky.) 59.

Erroneous Refusal to Dissolve Temporary Injunction. — A judgment granting a perpetual injunction is not affected by error in refusing to dissolve a temporary injunction because of failure to give an injunction bond. Nicholson v. Campbell, 15 Tex. Civ. App. 317.

to the rights of the plaintiff no longer exists,¹ or where the complainant has parted with his interest in the subject-matter of the suit.²

b. INTERLOCUTORY INJUNCTIONS — (1) Nature and Object. — An interlocutory or preliminary injunction is a provisional remedy granted before a hearing on the merits, and its sole object is to preserve the subject in controversy in its then existing condition, and without determining any question of right, merely to prevent a further perpetration of wrong or the doing of any act whereby the right in controversy may be materially injured or endangered, until a full and deliberate investigation of the case is afforded to the party.³ In many cases the court will interfere to preserve the property in statu quo during the pendency of a suit in which the rights to it are to be decided; and that without expressing, and often without having the means of forming, any opinion as to such rights. It is true that the court will not so interfere if it thinks that there is no real question between the parties; but seeing that there is a substantial question to be decided, it will preserve the property until such question can be disposed of. In order to support an injunction for such purpose, it is not necessary for the court to decide upon the merits in favor of the plaintiff.⁴ The court must satisfy itself, not that the plaintiff has certainly the right, but that he has a fair question to raise as to the existence of such a right. The complainant may be entitled to preliminary injunction in cases where his right to the relief prayed may fail on a hearing on the merits.⁵ A preliminary injunction will never be granted unless from the pressure of an urgent necessity. The damage threatened, and which it is legitimate to prevent, during the pendency of the suit, must be in an equitable point of view of an irreparable character.⁶ The writ will not usually be allowed where its effect is to give the plaintiff the principal relief he seeks without ever bringing the cause to trial.⁷

(2) Discretion of Court as to Issuance — (a) In General. — A preliminary injunction is not a matter of strict right. Its issuance rests in the sound discretion of the court, and the exercise of this discretion in granting or refusing the injunction will not as a general rule be reviewed on appeal, or otherwise controlled or interfered with.⁸

Discretion Defined. — The discretion which is vested in the chancellor does not authorize him to grant a preliminary injunction in any and all kinds of cases with or without a reasonable showing.¹ The discretion which he may exercise in granting or refusing a preliminary injunction is a sound judicial discretion, not an arbitrary one, nor a discretion exercised contrary to the facts shown or inapplicable thereto.² If in granting or refusing an injunction errors of law are committed by the chancellor, the judgment will be reversed, and that too although he may be right on the facts.³ A preliminary injunction may sometimes be properly refused upon the same facts which would entitle the party

This Discretion Depends in General upon Settled and Well-defined Principles which have been established by a long course of adjudication in courts of equity; and in awarding or dissolving an injunction the chancellor is no more at liberty to depart from approved precedents than is a judge who presides on the final decision in a court of law. *Rowley v. of right to an injunction on final hearing.¹

(b) Mandamus to Compel Issuance. — The granting or refusing of an injunction is not an act ministerial in its character, but an exercise of judicial discretion; and according to the weight of authority, mandamus will not lie to control this discretion and to compel the issuance of an injunction.² Mandamus does not lie to compel the dissolution of an injunction.³

(3) Necessity of Caution in Issuance. — The power to grant preliminary injunctions should be exercised with great caution, and an injunction should not be granted except in cases of the most urgent necessity.⁴ Interference by injunction rests on the principle of a clear and certain right to the enjoyment of the subject matter in question and an injurious interruption of that right which on just and equitable grounds ought to be prevented.⁵ The rule that great caution should be exercised is especially applicable in the granting of preliminary injunctions on an ex parte hearing, as experience shows that an ex parte statement seldom presents the full truth.⁶ The fact that an injunction will not operate injuriously on the party against whom it is sought should not influence the chancellor to grant an injunction in a case where no injunction is necessary.⁷ In determining whether an injunction should be awarded, the facts and particulars of each particular case are to be considered.⁸

3. Common and Special Injunctions. — Interlocutory injunctions are sometimes classed as common and special. In the United States common injunctions are seldom issued, and the distinction is therefore of little practical importance. Common injunctions are in aid of and secondary to another equity.¹ Their office is to stay proceedings at law until the defendant shall appear and answer to the bill. A common injunction issues as of course on the defendant's default or delay in answering the bill, and only as a means of compelling him to appear and answer.²

A Special Injunction is founded, not on the equity existing in the controversy at law between the parties, but on something collateral to it — as, for instance, the necessity of protecting the property in dispute pending the litigation — and is granted only on special application.³ So injunctions of this latter class are usually granted only on notice.⁴ The principles regulating the dissolution of these two classes of injunctions are different.⁵ A common injunction is usually dissolved as a matter of course on the coming in of the answer denying the merits, and without any inquiry into the truth of the allegations, unless some special reason is alleged for continuing it.⁶ In the case of special injunctions the bill may be read as an affidavit to contradict the answer where there is any conflict and the injury to the plaintiff will be irreparable if the relief be not granted; but the injunction will not be dissolved on motion, but will be continued to the hearing to enable the parties to support by proofs their respective allegations.⁷ To dissolve a special injunction before hearing the cause on proof, the defendant must show that the plaintiff has no cause fit to be heard; and if from the answer it appears that there is any question on the matter that should be further inquired into, the injunction will be continued until the hearing.⁸

4. Cross Injunctions. — Where one person obtains an injunction restraining another from interference with or disposition of certain property, and the person thus enjoined appears to be equally entitled to the possession of this property, he may, on application, obtain a like injunction against the other party without any proof of insolvency or other special cause for depriving him of the control.⁹

383; McCreery v. Sutherland, 23 Md. 471, 87 Am. Dec. 578; Matter of Sloan, 5 N. Mex. 590.

The Criterion by which the issuance of a writ of injunction is to be allowed or refused is to be found in the question, Does the position of the parties and the status of the matters involved at this present moment justify the exercise of the power? "Writs of injunction are not to be scattered loosely by the court for a tentative purpose only, but there must appear an impending injury which demands instant preventive action, to justify their allowance." *Mexican Ore Co. v. 8. Purnell v. Daniel, 8 Ired. Eq. (43 N. Car.) 11.

9. Cross Injunctions. — McCrackan v. Ware, 3 Sandf. (N. Y.) 688.

Enjoining Plaintiff on His Own Application. — Where the plaintiff in an injunction suit is himself a wrongdoer in first invading the rights of the defendant whom he seeks to enjoin, and should therefore be denied all equitable relief on that account, he cannot complain that, instead of dismissing his complaint, as demanded in the defendant's answer, the court grants a further relief to the defendant by enjoining the plaintiff and thus adjudicating all the equities between the parties growing out of the facts alleged or litigated. Power v. Athens, 99 N. Y. 592.

III. RESTRAINING ORDERS.—There is a material distinction between a restraining order and an injunction. A restraining order is intended only as a restraint upon the defendant until the propriety of granting a preliminary injunction can be determined, and it does no more than restrain proceedings until such determination.¹

The Purpose of a Restraining Order is to preserve property which is the subject of controversy in its existing condition until the hearing and determination of the cause, and the order should be limited so as to simply preserve the status quo, and should not give an advantage to either party by proceedings in the acquisition or alteration of the property the right to which is disputed, while the hands of the other party are tied.² A restraining order without notice should run only until the hearing of the application for a temporary injunction.³ It ceases to be operative on the expiration of the date fixed by its terms.⁴ And where the injunction is refused on the hearing the restraining order expires by limitation; no formal order setting it aside is necessary.⁵ So the force of the order ceases upon the granting of the injunction.⁶

IV. JURISDICTION—1. Inherent Power of Courts of Chancery.—The term "jurisdiction," as used in this section, has no reference to the question whether the facts before the court present a case for the proper exercise of the power of a court of equity. In this connection it means no more than the power to hear or determine a cause; in other words, the power inherent in or conferred upon judicial officers and tribunals to deal with the general subject involved in the action. In this section the inquiry will be directed to the ascertainment of the court or judicial officer before whom proceedings to obtain an injunction should be instituted. Jurisdiction as dependent upon the facts which may appear in a particular case is elsewhere considered. The authority to allow injunctions is an incident of chancery jurisdiction and can be exercised

1. Restraining Order Defined—United States.—Fenwick Hall Co. v. Old Saybrook, 66 Fed. Rep. 389; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Burlington, etc., R. Co., 34 Fed. Rep. 481; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Spokane, 52 Fed. Rep. 430.

California.—Hicks v. Michael, 15 Cal. 107. Georgia.—Strickland v. Griffin, 70 Ga. 542. Indiana.—Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. Huncheon, 16 Ind. 436; Wallace v. McVey, 6 Ind. 300; Pleasants v. Vevay, etc., Turnpike Co., 42 Ind. 391.

Nebraska.—State v. Greene, 48 Neb. 327. Ohio.—Vornholt v. Gordon, 4 Ohio Dec. 498. Washington.—State v. Lichtenberg, 4 Wash. 407.

Nature of Restraining Order in Quebec.—The provisional injunction or restraining order in the province of Quebec is assimilated to a writ of mandamus. Crawford v. Protestant Hospital for Insane, 4 Montreal Super. Ct. 215.

Modification of Restraining Order.—A temporary restraining order may be so modified as to protect the rights of all the parties thereby affected. Lake Erie, etc., R. Co. v. Young, 135 Ind. 426, 41 Am. St. Rep. 430.

Issued by Judge Outside of State.—A judge of the state of Indiana cannot sit in chambers in the state of Michigan and issue a valid restraining order. Where an appeal, however, was not taken until after a trial of the cause on its merits and a final judgment in the appellee's favor which vacated the temporary injunction, the error, though properly saved by the appellant, was held not an available error. Price v. Bayless, 131 Ind. 437.

2. Purpose of Order.—Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Spokane, 52 Fed. Rep. 430; State v. Licht- enberg, 4 Wash. 407; State v. Greene, 48 Neb. 327.

3. Duration of Order.—Fenwick Hall Co. v. Old Saybrook, 66 Fed. Rep. 389; San Diego Water Co. v. Pacific Coast Steamship Co., 101 Cal. 218; Strickland v. Griffin, 70 Ga. 542; Vornholt v. Gordon, 4 Ohio Dec. 498.

4. State v. Greene, 48 Neb. 327.

5. Hicks v. Michael, 15 Cal. 107; San Diego Water Co. v. Pacific Coast Steamship Co., 101 Cal. 216; Walton v. Develing, 61 Ill. 201; Leech v. State, 78 Ind. 570; Central R. Co. v. Standard Oil Co., 33 N. J. Eq. 372.

6. Effect of Injunction Order.—Cohen v. Gray, 70 Cal. 85.

Dismissal of Cause Before Hearing of Application for Injunction.—Where a restraining order has been granted without notice to the adverse party, and an order made requiring the adverse party to show cause on the day cited why a temporary injunction should not be granted, but before hearing upon the application for temporary injunction the court dismisses the cause, the restraining order cannot be kept in force pending an appeal from the judgment of dismissal. State v. Lichtenberg, 4 Wash. 407.

Where Motion for Injunction Is Not Kept Alive.—A restraining order pending an order to show cause why an injunction should not be issued and until the further order of the court is authorized only pending the motion for an injunction, and where there is no appearance at the time when the order to show cause is returnable, and the motion for injunction is not completed or kept alive in any mode, a restraining order falls and ends naturally with only by courts clothed with general chancery powers or by virtue of legislative enactment.¹ But the fact that the court has both common-law and chancery jurisdiction in no way changes or obliterates its equitable jurisdiction in the absence of express legislative restriction.²

A Stipulation by Parties cannot give jurisdiction to grant an injunction.³

2. Jurisdiction Conferred by Statutory Provision.—Jurisdiction, in determining applications for injunctions, is very largely a matter of statutory regulation under constitutional provisions authorizing it. In all cases the practitioner should carefully consult his own constitutional provisions and statutes. If the statutes are silent on the subject, any court having inherent chancery jurisdiction, as already shown, may hear and determine applications for injunctions.⁴

3. Power of Federal Courts and Judges.—The judges of the Circuit Court have power to grant writs of injunction only in cases where they might be granted by the Circuit Court. If the case is one in which the injunction might be granted only by the Supreme Court, then the application must be made to that court, or to a judge thereof.⁵ The United States Supreme Court, the Circuit Court, and the District Court have the power to issue writs not specifically provided for by statute which may be necessary for the exercise of their jurisdiction and agreeable to the uses and principles of law.⁶ And writs of injunction may be granted by any justice of the Supreme Court in cases where they might be granted by the Supreme Court, or by any judge of the Circuit Court in cases where they might have been granted by such court.⁷ The writ cannot be granted by any court of the United States to the motion. San Diego Water Co. v. Pacific Coast Steamship Co., 101 Cal. 216.

1. Power to Grant Incidental to Chancery Jurisdiction.—Cummings v. Des Moines, etc., R. Co., 36 Iowa 174; Bailey v. Stevens, 11 Utah 175. See also Emporia v. Soden, 25 Kan. 588, 37 Am. Rep. 265; Traverse City, etc., R. Co. v. Seymour, 81 Mich. 378.

2. Courts Possessing Both Common-law and Chancery Jurisdiction.—Bailey v. Stevens, 11 Utah 175.

3. Effect of Stipulation.—Daly v. Smith, 38 N. Y. Super. Ct. 158.

4. In California the District Courts are invested, under the constitution, with such equity jurisdiction as was administered in the High Court of Chancery in England. An application for an injunction may be made to the District Court. People v. Davidson, 30 Cal. 379. So, by authority of statute, a county judge may grant an injunction in cases in the District Court. Ruthrauff v. Kresz, 13 Cal. 639. But the grant of authority to a county judge to award an injunction in cases in the District Court is a mere power to issue mesne process auxiliary to the proper jurisdiction of the District Court, and is not trenching upon it. Thompson v. Williams, 6 Cal. 88; People v. Placer County, 27 Cal. 151.

There is no prohibition in the constitution against the grant of authority to a county judge to grant injunctions, and the implication is decidedly in favor of its exercise. Thompson v. Williams, 6 Cal. 88.

The county judge's act has the same force and efficacy for all intents and purposes as if it was the direct act of the District Court. Crandall v. Woods, 6 Cal. 449.

In Louisiana it has been held that a parish judge, acting in place of a district judge during his absence from the parish, may issue an injunction. Green v. Huey, 23 La. Ann. 705.

By an amendment of the Code of Practice, power to grant orders of injunction in the absence of the judge from the parish, or when he is interested in the cause, is vested in the clerks of District Courts; but they are in all cases required to take bond and security from the party at whose suit the order of injunction is granted. Witkowski v. Selby, 15 La. Ann. 328.

In Texas District Courts have power to issue writs of injunction in cases in which a court of chancery would, under the rules of equity, have power to issue it. Stein v. Frieberg, 64 Tex. 271. An injunction may be granted by one county judge and made returnable before another. George v. Dyer, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas., § 780.

Under the Virginia Code of 1873, c. 175, § 6, which authorized every judge of the County Court to grant injunctions, whether the judgment or proceeding enjoined be of a superior or inferior court of his county or district, it was held that a county judge might award an injunction on a bill addressed to the judge of the Circuit Court, and the fact that the bill was afterwards filed in the Circuit Court did not affect the validity of the injunction. Rosenberger v. Bowen, 84 Va. 660.

5. Power of Federal Judges.—Murray v. Overstolz, 1 McCrary (U. S.) 606.

6. Power of Supreme and Circuit Courts.—Rev. Stat. U. S., § 716. See also Georgia v. Brailsford, 3 Dall. (U. S.) 1; Marine Ins. Co. v. Hodgson, 7 Cranch (U. S.) 332; Mississippi v. Johnson, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 475; Parker v. Judges, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 561.

7. Rev. Stat. U. S., § 719.

stay proceedings in any court of a state, except in cases where such injunction may be authorized by any law relating to proceedings in bankruptcy.¹

As Affected by Diverse Citizenship. — Jurisdiction of a Circuit Court of the United States to enjoin a proceeding in such court does not depend on diverse citizenship of the parties, the proceeding to enjoin not being an original suit, or ancillary and dependent, but supplementary merely to the suit out of which it arose.²

4. Power of State Supreme Courts and Judges. — In a few states the power to grant injunctions has been conferred on the Supreme Courts by constitutional provisions.³ In most jurisdictions where the question has arisen it has been decided that the Supreme Court is without this power.⁴ Constitutional authority therefore is necessary. The power cannot be conferred by statute.⁵ The grant of power to a Supreme Court found in the constitution cannot be limited, abridged, enlarged, or interfered with in any manner by the legislature.⁶ It would seem, however, that the fact that the Supreme Court has no constitutional authority to grant injunctions will not prevent the legislature from conferring this power on a judge of that court.⁷

5. Jurisdiction as Affected by Amount Involved. — The jurisdiction to issue an injunction as affected by the amount in controversy is determined by the value of the object to be obtained by the bill.⁸ An injunction may be of much greater value to the complainant than the amount in controversy in cases of disputes which have already arisen.⁹

Where Amount Involved Is Trifling. — A court of equity will not assume jurisdiction to grant an injunction where the amount involved is trifling. The principle de minimis non curat lex would seem to apply as well in courts

3. Constitutional Authority. — The Supreme Court of Alabama has power to grant injunctions in a proper case. Davis v. Tuscumbia, etc., R. Co., 4 Stew. & P. (Ala.) 421.

The power is expressly conferred by Const. Ala. 1875, art. 6, § 2.

The Texas Court of Appeals has a limited jurisdiction to grant injunctions. It can exercise such power where the writ may be necessary to enforce its own jurisdiction. Lopez v. Rodrigues, 3 Tex. App. Civ. Cas., § 112.

In Wisconsin the Supreme Court has original jurisdiction of a writ of injunction as a quasi-prerogative writ, where that is the proper remedy in matters publici juris, within the scope of the jurisdiction upon information of the attorney-general, but not in suits between private parties, or for the determination of mere private rights. Atty.-Gen. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 35 Wis. 425.

8. How Jurisdiction Determined. — Mississippi etc., R. Co. v. Ward, 2 Black (U. S.) 485; Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Kuteman, 13 U. S. App. 99; Whitman v. Hubbell, 30 Fed. Rep. 81; Rainey v. Herbert, 55 Fed. Rep. 443; Symonds v. Greene, 28 Fed. Rep. 834.

Illustrations. — In a suit brought to restrain the maintenance of an awning over a part of the street adjoining the plaintiff's premises, the matter in dispute is the value of the right to maintain the awning, not the amount of damage done by it to the plaintiff. Whitman v. Hubbell, 30 Fed. Rep. 81.

In a suit to enjoin the infringement of a trademark, the amount in dispute as determining the question of jurisdiction does not depend on the profits sought to be recovered. Symonds v. Greene, 28 Fed. Rep. 834.

9. Injunction of Greater Value than Amount in Controversy. — Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Kuteman, 13 U. S. App. 99; Symonds v. Greene, 28 Fed. Rep. 834.

of equity as in courts of law.¹

V. VENUE. — Where the county in which suit to obtain an injunction must be brought is designated by statute, a suit for an injunction cannot be brought in any county other than that designated.²

Power to Grant Injunction Throughout State. — Under a statute which provides that an injunction may be granted by "the district court or any judge thereof," a district judge may grant a temporary order or injunction in an action out of his own district, but he can do so only where the office of judge in such district is vacant, or where it is shown that the judge thereof is absent, or from some cause is unable to act.³

VI. MATTERS TO BE CONSIDERED IN DETERMINING RIGHT TO INJUNCTION —

1. Adequacy of Remedy at Law — a. IN GENERAL. — An injunction will not be granted where the remedy at law for the injury complained of is full, adequate, and complete.⁴ The ground of jurisdiction of a court of equity is its ability

1. Trifling Amount Involved. — Brush v. Carbondale, 78 Ill. 74; Purdy v. Manhattan El. R. Co., (C. Pl. Gen. T.) 36 N. Y. St. Rep. 43. See also Yantis v. Burdett, 3 Mo. 457, in which case it was held that a court of chancery will under no circumstances allow a judgment at law to be stayed for very paltry sums, unless in cases of the grossest fraud; Woodbury v. Portland Marine Soc., 90 Me. 18.

In Texas it is held that under the several provisions of the constitution the District Courts have power to issue writs of injunction in cases in which a court of chancery, under the settled rules of chancery, would have the power to issue them, and this without reference to the amount in controversy. Anderson County v. Kennedy, 58 Tex. 616. It is apprehended that what was said in this case was not intended to deny the rule stated in the text, that a court of equity will not take jurisdiction where the amount involved is trifling.

In Illinois there is a statutory provision to the effect that no writ of injunction shall be granted to stay proceedings under a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace for a sum not exceeding twenty dollars, exclusive of costs. York v. Kile, 67 Ill. 233; Starr & Curt. Annot. Stat. Ill. (1896), c. 69, par. 6.

2. Suit Must Be Brought in County Designated. — Gorham v. Toomey, 9 Cal. 77; Uhlfelder v. Levy, 9 Cal. 607; Rickett v. Johnson, 8 Cal. 34; Anthony v. Dunlap, 8 Cal. 26; Phelan v. King Wrought-Iron Bridge Manufacturing Co., 16 Kan. 270; Norfolk, etc., R. Co. v. Postal Tel. Cable Co., 88 Va. 932; Beckley v. Palmer, 11 Gratt. (Va.) 625.

Where Injunction Is Ancillary to Relief Sought. — Where it is provided by statute that a suit shall be brought in the county in which the judgment sought to be enjoined is rendered, or in which the act or proceeding sought to be enjoined is being done or apprehended, only a pure bill of injunction is meant, not a bill seeking other relief, to which the injunction sought is merely ancillary. Muller v. Bayly, 21 Gratt. (Va.) 521. See also Beckley v. Palmer, 11 Gratt. (Va.) 625.

Bringing Suit in County Where Judgment Was Rendered. — It is very commonly provided that where an injunction is granted to stay a suit or judgment at law, the proceeding must be in the county where the judgment is obtained or the suit is pending. Garretson v. Appleton Mfg. Co., 61 Ill. App. 443.

to afford more complete remedies than courts of law can afford — bound and tied down to remedies which they are not capable of moulding and adapting to the necessities of particular cases — thereby preventing irreparable injuries, preventing a multiplicity of suits, and avoiding vexatious litigations. Remedy by Motion to Quash. — Where a judgment debtor has been arrested on a capias, there is a complete and adequate remedy at law by a motion to quash the writ. An injunction to prohibit the further retention of the debtor should not be issued. Turner v. Norton, 31 Ill. App. 423.

When General Rule Does Not Apply. — The rule that an injunction will not be granted where there is an adequate remedy at law does not apply where both parties represent the public, so that the loss must fall on the public whichever party succeeds, as, for example, where the commissioners of the sinking fund apply for an injunction to restrain the board of health from interfering with a public market. Hoffman v. Schultz, (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 31 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 385.

Waiving Benefit of Rule. — Where the defendants come to a hearing upon the merits, it is too late for them to say that the plaintiffs have an adequate remedy at law where no such objection to the jurisdiction of the court was raised in the answer. Morris Canal, etc., Co. v. Jersey City, 12 N. J. Eq. 252; Holmes v. Jersey City, 12 N. J. Eq. 299.

quate compensation in damages at law, or such as from its continuance or permanent mischief must occasion a constantly recurring grievance which cannot be otherwise prevented but by an injunction.¹ The fact that the matters of defense will be more complicated and difficult of presentation in a court of law is no reason for granting an injunction.²

6. REMEDIES PROVIDED BY STATUTE. — Where a remedy for any particular wrong or injury has been provided by statute, the general rule is that no relief in equity can be afforded in such case by injunction.³ An injunction will be refused on the same general grounds as where there is an adequate remedy at law.⁴ It seems that this general doctrine is applicable although the provisions of the statute may conflict with the notions of natural justice entertained by a court of chancery.⁵ The rule is subject to a few exceptions. It has been held that the fact that a statutory method of procedure is provided does not take away the right of a court of equity to interfere by injunction for the prevention of a multiplicity of suits where the circumstances render such interposition proper.⁶ Under the English Judicature Act 1873, § 25, subsec. 8, which enables the court to grant an injunction in all cases in which it shall appear to the court to be just or convenient, it would seem that the existence of a statutory remedy would be no obstacle in the way of granting an injunction.⁷

2. Inadequacy of Remedy at Law. — A court of equity has jurisdiction in cases of rights recognized and protected by municipal jurisprudence where a plain, adequate, and complete remedy cannot be had in the courts of common law.

The Remedy Must Be Plain, for if it be doubtful and obscure equity will not assert jurisdiction.⁸

South Carolina, — Hornesby v. Burdell, 9 S. Car. 308.

Enjoining Statutory Proceedings. — An injunction will not lie to restrain the execution of the judgment of a special tribunal created by statute for the purpose of affording a cheap and expeditious mode of ejecting a tenant who holds over after the expiration of his lease in a case of which it has jurisdiction. Hornesby v. Burdell, 9 S. Car. 308.

Enjoining Order for Election. — In Minnesota an injunction will not lie to restrain county commissioners from ordering an election for the removal of a county-seat, because the statute which provides a mode for contesting elections furnishes a full remedy. Weber v. Timlin, 37 Minn. 274.

It Must Be Adequate, for if at law it falls short of what a party is entitled to, that founds a jurisdiction in equity.¹

And It Must Be Complete, i. e., it must contain the full end and justice of the case. It must reach the whole mischief and secure the whole right of the party in a perfect manner at the present time and in future. Otherwise equity will interfere and give such relief and aid as the exigency of the particular case may require.² It is not enough that there is a remedy at law. It must be as practical and efficient to the ends of justice and its prompt administration as the remedy in equity.³ Where equity can give relief, the complainant will not be compelled to speculate upon the chance of his obtaining relief at law.⁴ This doctrine has been applied in numberless instances, a few of which are given by way of illustration. Where the damages caused by the injury complained of are in their nature not susceptible of proof or estimation, an injunction will lie.⁵ Another application of this doctrine is in cases where a

Instances. — Where a right of way has been claimed and used for over twenty years without interruption or dispute, it cannot be closed against the person acquiring such right by prescription. An action for damages would not afford adequate relief, and an injunction party has equitable rights by way of defense of which he cannot avail himself in a court of law. In this case a court of equity will interfere by injunction.¹ So, also, where a party has been prevented by fraud, surprise, or accident from making his defense at law.² And an injunction has been granted to prevent the setting up of a threatened defense in case an action at law is brought, on the ground that the defendant is equitably estopped from so doing.³ Equity will also interfere to protect rights when it sufficiently appears that the evidence by which such rights can be established is liable to be lost.⁴

3. Laches of Party Seeking Relief by Injunction — a. WHEN A BAR TO RELIEF. — Relief by injunction is not controlled by arbitrary or technical rules, but the application for its exercise is addressed to the conscience and sound discretion of the court.⁵ Where a party seeks the intervention of a court of equity to protect his rights by injunction, the application must be seasonably made, or the rights may be lost, at least so far as equitable intervention is concerned.⁶ It is a rule practically without exception that a court of equity will not grant relief by injunction where the party seeking it, being cognizant of his rights, does not take those steps to assert them which are open to him, but lies by and suffers his adversary to incur expenses and enter into burdensome engagements which would render the granting of an injunction against the completion of his undertaking, or the use thereof when completed, a great injury to him.⁷ A suitor who by laches has made it impossible for a court to enjoin is the proper remedy to prevent obstruction of it. Sheeks v. Erwin, 130 Ind. 31.

So the appropriate remedy for acts which render the development of a mining claim impossible is in equity. It would be impossible to show the extent of the injury to an undeveloped mining claim by acts which render its development impossible. Fuller v. Swan River Placer Min. Co., 12 Colo. 12.

his adversary without inflicting great injury upon him will be left to pursue his ordinary legal remedy.¹ This rule is especially applicable where the object of the injunction is to restrain the completion or use of public works, and where the granting of the injunction will operate injuriously to the public as well as to the party against whom the injunction is sought.² A party who by his laches has made it impossible to prevent the completion or use of public works without great injury or inconvenience to the public will be confined to the relief obtainable by ordinary means in a court of law.³

Laches in Conjunction with Other Causes will operate as a bar to the right to an injunction. Thus, it has been held that where there has been delay in the assertion of legal right and the damage sustained is trifling, an injunction will not be granted.⁴ Nor will this remedy be granted where the applicant has been guilty of laches and has a remedy at law.⁵ A mere objection or protest or threat to take proceedings is not sufficient to exclude the consequences of laches or acquiescence.⁶

Effect of Coverture. — An estoppel against seeking equitable relief by injunction resulting from laches is not affected by the fact that the applicant is a married woman.⁷

b. WHEN NOT A BAR TO RELIEF. — The mere fact that a person applying for an injunction has been guilty of laches will not in all cases operate as a bar to his right to the remedy of an injunction. Thus, where a court of law cannot possibly deal with the subject-matter, delay in filing the bill to enjoin an action at law will not deprive the party of his rights to an injunction.⁸ So it has been said that there can be no reason for applying the general doctrine where the right of the complainant is clear and the injury is of a character which would entitle him to call on the court to entertain jurisdiction without resorting to law in the first instance.¹ In determining whether the right to an injunction is barred by laches, the question whether the defendant has been prejudiced by delay must also be taken into consideration. It has been held that laches which is not in any way prejudicial to the opposite party will not deprive the complainant of his right to an injunction.² Acquiescence in an act or the operation of works which caused merely trifling damage will not bar the right to an injunction for subsequent acts or for a different method of operating the works which will result in great damage.³ Mere delay in applying for an injunction until the right is actually invaded is no ground for refusing an injunction where the injury inflicted is serious and permanent in its nature, or such as would continue to operate in all future time.⁴

Delay from Attempt to Compromise. — And the right to an interlocutory injunction is not barred by laches when the party seeking it has forborne in a reasonable hope of an accommodation and the defendant has not incurred expense or injury from the delay.⁵

c. HOW LACHES DETERMINED. — There is no rule of law which requires that an action by injunction for equitable relief shall be brought within any fixed and definite time. Whether there has been an unreasonable delay in the application for an injunction is a question to be determined from all the circumstances.⁶

4. Certainty or Doubtfulness of Right Sought to Be Protected. — An injunction will not usually be granted where the complainant's right is doubtful.⁷

Where the right of a party is doubtful, an injunction will not in general be granted to prevent an interference therewith until the right is established at law.¹ Nothing is better settled as a rule of equity procedure than that the complainant is not entitled to a preliminary injunction to protect a right which depends on a disputed question of law, and which question has never been adjudged in his favor by a court of law.² When the principles of law on

Applications of Rule. — In Delaware, etc., R. Co. v. Central Stock-Yard, etc., Co., 43 N. J. Eq. 71, 605, the complainants sought an injunction to compel the defendants to receive at their stock yards, from the complainants, live freight carried over their road, and consigned for delivery at the defendant's yards. The injunction was refused because the question whether the defendants were subject to any duty to the complainants to receive such freight was, as a matter of law, unsettled.

which rights are disputed will admit of doubt, a court of equity, although satisfied as to what is the correct conclusion of law upon the facts, will not, without a decision of the courts at law establishing such principles, grant an injunction.¹ So if the facts on which the right to the injunction is based are in dispute the injunction will not be granted.² But where the facts upon which the right depends are established or admitted, and the principles of law which on these facts would give the right are settled and established, a court of equity may apply the principles as settled by the court of law to the facts and allow an injunction.³

5. Nature of Injury Against Which Relief Is Sought — a. SUBSTANTIAL INJURY NECESSARY. — To entitle a person to injunctive relief he must establish as against the defendant an actual and substantial injury, and not merely a technical and inconsequential wrong entitling him to nominal damages only; and this is true whether such injury be single or continuous, or whether it be the subject of one act only or of successive acts.⁴

b. IRREPARABLE INJURY NECESSARY. — To warrant the allowance of a writ of injunction it must clearly appear that some act has been done, or is threatened, which will produce irreparable injury to the party asking an injunction. Unless this be made to appear, an injunction should be denied.⁵ If, wrong, and that they have the power, the court will issue the writ.¹

d. WHETHER RELIEF GRANTED AS TO PAST INJURIES. — An injunction is usually a preventive remedy. Its province is not to afford a remedy for what is past, but to prevent future mischief. It is not used for the purpose of punishment, or to compel persons to do right, but merely to prevent them from doing wrong. It is a general rule, therefore, that rights already lost and wrongs already perpetrated cannot be corrected by injunction, and that the party aggrieved must seek some other remedy for redress.² Nevertheless, a remedy for an injury already committed may sometimes be given as an incident to an injunction.³ But this is only where a sufficient showing for an injunction is made out and the injury resulted from the act which it is sought to enjoin.⁴

1. Threatened Injury with Power to Injure Sufficient. — McArthur v. Kelly, 5 Ohio 140; Bonaparte v. Camden, etc., R. Co., Baldw. (U. S.) 205.

Reasonable Probability Necessary. — To make out a case for injunction it must appear that there is at least a reasonable probability, not a bare possibility, that a real injury will occur if the writ is not granted. Sherman v. Clark, 4 Nev. 138, 97 Am. Dec. 516.

When Injunction Granted, though Threats of Injury Not Made. — An action to enjoin is not prematurely brought where the defendants have made no threats or declarations of intention to act, if there is good reason to believe that the defendants will proceed to act and complete measures then in progress for such acts. Newton v. Mahoning County, 26 Ohio St. 618.

Right to Act on Appearances. — A party seeking to enjoin a defendant from doing an injurious act has the right, in determining the defendant's intention, to act on appearances. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Guernsey, etc., Electric Light Co., 46 Mo. App. 120.

Injury through Persons Acting under Color of Law. — If lawless danger impends from persons acting under color of law when it is abused, misapplied, exceeded, or not strictly pursued, and the act impending would subject the party committing it to damages in a court of law for a trespass, a court of equity will enjoin its commission. *Bonaparte v. So warrants already issued by a county auditor are beyond the reach of an injunction suit brought to restrain him from issuing such bonds. Webster v. Fish, 5 Nev. 190.

Proper Remedy for Past Injuries. — For past injuries or trespasses the proper and only remedy is an action at law for compensation in damages. Owen v. Ford, 49 Mo. 436; Verdin v. St. Louis, 131 Mo. 117.

An Injunction Will Not Be Retained where it appears that the acts the performance of which are sought to be restrained had been performed before the order for injunction was made or served. Delger v. Johnson, 44 Cal. 182.

4. Sherman v. Clark, 4 Nev. 138, 97 Am. Dec. 516.

6. Criminality or Illegality of Act Which It Is Sought to Enjoin. — A court of equity has no criminal jurisdiction and cannot interfere to prevent the commission of criminal or illegal acts unless there is some interference, actual or threatened, with property or rights of a pecuniary nature; but when there is such interference, and there is no adequate remedy at law, the fact that the act may be criminal will not divest the jurisdiction of equity to prevent it.¹

7. Absence of Precedent for Injunction Sought. — While it has been said that the writ of injunction will not be awarded in new and doubtful cases not coming within the well-established principles of equity,² yet the absence of precedent, though not to be overlooked entirely, does not of itself determine questions of jurisdiction.³ It is not a fatal objection that the use of the writ for the particular purpose for which it is sought is novel.⁴ Courts may amplify remedies and apply rules and general principles for the advancement of substantial justice. If this were not so, and courts were confined to particular precedents, there would be no power to grant relief in new cases constantly occurring.⁵

8. Balance of Convenience. — On an application for an interlocutory injunction the court will always consider the balance of convenience; in other words, it will consider whether a greater injury would be done by granting an injunction than would result from a refusal,⁶ unless perhaps in cases where the wrong complained of is so wanton and unprovoked in its character as properly to deprive the wrongdoer of any consideration as to its injurious consequences.⁷ The courts will require a very strong case for the granting of an injunction which will cause more injury than it will remedy,⁸ and it may be said, as a general rule, that an injunction will not be granted where it will be productive of greater injury than will result from a refusal of it.⁹ This rule is especially applicable when the party applying for an injunction has by his own laches made it impossible to grant the injunction without inflicting serious injury on the party so to be enjoined.¹

In Determining Which Way the Balance of Convenience Lies, the resultant benefit and detriment to the parties litigant are not the only matters to be considered. The court will also consider the injuries which may be inflicted on strangers to the suit and to the public generally. The latter injuries, superadded to those which will be inflicted on the defendant, make a still stronger case for refusing an injunction,² and may of themselves be a sufficient ground for refusing it.³

9. Whether Injunction Will Require Change of Possession. — The ground on which courts of equity intervene by injunction in cases where there are conflicting claims as to the right and possession of property is the preservation of the property which is the subject-matter of the litigation, pending the controversy.⁴ The sole object of a preliminary injunction is to preserve the subject-matter of the controversy in the condition in which it is until the merits can be heard. It is a rule of almost universal application, therefore, that an injunction will not issue to take property out of the possession of one party and put it in the possession of another.⁵ The general rule stated admits,

A court of chancery has no more power than any other court to condemn a man unheard and to dispossess him of property prima facie his own, and hand over its enjoyment to another on an ex parte claim to it, for this can be done only by a final decree. Arnold v. Bright, 41 Mich. 207.

Where a mortgagor or his assigns are in however, of this apparent exception: If the possession of the defendant is a mere interruption of the prior possession of the plaintiff, the interruption will be remedied by injunction if the right is clear and certain, without driving the plaintiff to establish his title at law.¹

VII. SECOND INJUNCTIONS. — Where an injunction has been refused or has been dissolved by the court, it is irregular to apply for a new injunction upon a new bill containing the same grounds, and if granted it should be dissolved.² As a general rule, a second injunction will not be granted while the first is in force, unless the first has been withdrawn by agreement and satisfactory grounds are shown for a renewal.³ While a second injunction may be granted after dissolution of the first on a supplemental bill setting up new grounds, these grounds must be grounds which were not in existence when the first bill was filed. Successive injunctions upon different grounds which might be put at issue in one proceeding will not be allowed.⁴

VIII. ACTIONS AT LAW — 1. Nature and Extent of Jurisdiction. — When an injunction is granted to stay proceedings in courts of law it is in no just sense a prohibition to those courts in the exercise of their jurisdiction. It is not addressed to them and does not even affect to interfere with them. The process is directed only to the parties. It neither assumes any superiority over the court in which the proceedings are had nor denies its jurisdiction.⁵ An injunction cannot, therefore, be granted to restrain a judge in the exercise of his judicial functions. The suitors of his court may be restrained in proper cases from proceeding before him, but no such process can run against him.⁶ The injunction is granted solely on the ground that there are certain equitable circumstances of which the court granting the process has cognizance, and it is against conscience that the party inhibited should proceed in the cause. The object of the rule, therefore, is to prevent a vexatious use of the court of law in order to deprive another party of his just rights or subject him to some unjust vexation or injury which is wholly irremediable by a court of law.⁷

2. Where Remedy at Law Is Adequate — a. STATEMENT OF RULE. — It is a well-settled rule that a court of equity will not usually enjoin an action at possession, and deny the right of the mortgagee to a foreclosure, the court will not, by preliminary injunction, predicated on the mortgagee's asserted right at law as mortgagee, transfer to him the possession pending the litigation. Cheever v. Rutland, etc., R. Co., 39 Vt. 653.

Exception to Rule. — While as a general rule a second injunction will not be granted for precisely the same purpose for which an injunction has already been obtained, yet where a certain defendant was enjoined from maintaining a liquor nuisance on certain premises or elsewhere within the judicial district, it was held that a second proceeding might be maintained against the same person and the owner of other premises, as joint defendants, to restrain the maintenance of a liquor nuisance on such premises. Carter v. Steyer, 93 Iowa 533.

Y.) 35, in which case it was held that where new facts are stated in the supplemental bill a fresh injunction may be granted, although the one granted on the original bill has been dissolved on the merits. It did not appear in this case whether the new facts set up in the supplemental bill were or were not in existence at the time of filing the original bill.

law on grounds which may be urged as a defense to such action.¹ Even in cases of concurrent jurisdiction the action will not be interfered with by a court of equity unless that court can give a more perfect remedy or the case can be better tried by the procedure of that court.² The court which first assumes jurisdiction will hold it,³ and the mere neglect of the defendants in chancery to object to the jurisdiction of that court will not entitle the complainant to an injunction.⁴ The rule stated applies where by statute the distinction between actions at law and suits in equity is abolished. The principle remains as it was when actions at law and suits in equity were distinct.⁵

b. APPLICATION OF RULE. — In applying the rule stated it has been held that a court of equity will not enjoin an action at law on the ground that the court in which the action is pending is without jurisdiction,⁶ or because the claim which it is sought to enforce is not well founded,⁷ or because the claim sued on has been paid,⁸ or because a certain credit on a note in suit had not been entered,¹ or because the cause of action arose under a statute claimed to be in violation of the constitution,² or because the plaintiff in the action at law has executed a release for a valuable consideration,³ or because the defense relied on is an equitable estoppel.⁴

3. Where Remedy at Law Is Inadequate. — A court of equity has power to enjoin an action at law where the defense is purely of equitable cognizance and not available at law, or where the complainant cannot have full and adequate relief in the action at law, although the matters relied on as a ground for equitable relief may be set up as a defense to such action.⁵ Thus, where the litigation involves the adjustment of complicated accounts and the remedy at law is inadequate and embarrassed, and a full and complete defense at law is impossible, equity may enjoin the action at law.⁶ So where a party is induced to sign a note on the understanding that he will not be held responsible, and an action is brought thereon against him, the action will be enjoined and relief granted in equity;⁷ and where a note void for want of consideration is valid on its face, and negotiable, an action thereon will be enjoined and the note cancelled, as in case of discontinuance or nonsuit it might be held until the evidence of its being without consideration could not be had.⁸

4. Where There Has Been Fraud, Accident, or Mistake — Statement of Rule by Judge Story. — It has been said⁹ that "in general, * * * in all cases where by accident¹⁰ or mistake¹¹ or fraud,¹² or otherwise, a party has an unfair advantage in proceedings in a court of law, which must necessarily make that court an instrument of injustice, and it is therefore against conscience that he should use that advantage, a court of equity will interfere and restrain him from

1. Failure to Enter Credit. — Powell v. Chamberlain, 22 Ga. 123.

That a plaintiff in a suit at law to recover moneys due upon certain notes and checks has assigned a mortgage given to him by the defendant in that suit and intended merely as collateral security, furnishes no ground for an injunction to restrain the prosecution of the suit. The assignment would be a payment pro tempore of which such defendant might avail himself in the suit at law. Hewitt v. Kuhl, 25 N. J. Eq. 24.

8. Void Negotiable Note Valid on Its Face. — Metler v. Metler, 18 N. J. Eq. 270. See also Ferguson v. Fisk, 28 Conn. 501, holding that where the consideration for which an instrument is given has entirely failed, and the instrument, though overdue, is still transferable, the fact that the defense of want of consideration may be made at law is no reason for denying an injunction prohibiting an action thereon, since the suit might be withdrawn and the instrument made the basis of other suits against the petitioner.

9. 2 Story's Eq. Jur. (13th ed.), § 885.

10. Accident. — See Lash v. Butch, 4 Iowa 215, in which it was said that where the plaintiff brought his action at law to recover of the defendant the possession of a lot, both parties claiming from a common grantor, and where the defendant's title was derived from an unrecorded lost deed, the defendant might maintain a suit in equity to enjoin such action at law and to establish his lost deed and perfect his chain of title. In such case the court has jurisdiction on the ground of accident and to remove a cloud upon a title. See also Phalen v. Clark, 19 Conn. 435, 50 Am. using the advantage which he has thus improperly gained; and it will also generally proceed to administer all the relief which the particular case requires, whether it be by a partial or a total restraint of such proceedings." ¹

This Statement Is Very Broad and somewhat difficult to interpret accurately. If by it is meant no more than that the fraud for which the cause of action will be enjoined is such that a court of law cannot give complete and adequate relief, it is unquestionably correct and supported by the decisions,² for it is not enough that there is a remedy at law; it must be plain and adequate, or, in other words, as practical and efficient to the ends of justice and its prompt administration as the remedy in equity.³ It may be necessary that an instrument in suit be canceled for fraud in its procurement, because the evidence of fraud may not always be obtainable or the defense of fraud may not always be available at law; and in such case it is but a natural consequence of this equitable jurisdiction to decree the cancellation of a fraudulent instrument, that the court should inhibit the defendant from continuing any legal proceedings through which he is attempting to assert a right based on the existence of that instrument.⁴ There are, indeed, a number of decisions in which the rule seems to be stated without any qualification that an action may be enjoined on the ground of fraud although the party may successfully defend and obtain full relief in a court of law.⁵

The Weight of Authority, however, is unquestionably to the effect that while fraud is of itself a ground of equitable jurisdiction, the fraud which will authorize an injunction to proceedings at law is a fraud against which complete and adequate redress cannot be had at law. If there is nothing in the nature of the fraud or the inquiries to which it gives rise which affords a reason why complete and adequate redress cannot be had at law, an injunction should be denied.⁶

5. Confining Action to Original Forum. — Where a court whose power is adequate to the administration of complete justice in the premises has acquired jurisdiction of a case, the litigation should be confined to that forum, and any attempt by either party to divert the litigation to another court will be restrained by injunction,⁷ especially after an adverse decision on the claim of the party seeking relief in a new forum,⁸ and the propriety of the remedy by injunction is not affected by the fact that the court subsequently

Application of Rule. — A contractor having a claim against a railroad company filed a mechanic's lien, brought suit to foreclose thereon, and subsequently filed a petition in bankruptcy against the company. In a suit against such contractor by another contractor and the company for an equitable adjustment of the claims of the contractors, it was held that a continuance of bankruptcy proceedings would be enjoined. Pusey v. Bradley, 1 Thomp. & C. (N. Y.) 661.

acquiring jurisdiction of the matter has equity as well as common-law powers.¹ If a suit is originally commenced in a court of equity the court in which suit was so commenced will enjoin an action at law subsequently commenced in relation to the same subject-matter.²

6. Enjoining Actions Against Officers of Courts. — Courts of equity will usually interfere by injunction to restrain actions at law against their officers acting under their direction,³ and it is immaterial that the persons by whom such actions were instituted are not parties to the suit in the court of equity.⁴ The court will always interfere by injunction when it is claimed that the orders under which its officers acted were invalid or that the process executed by them was irregularly issued. A court of equity is alone competent to decide upon the validity of its own orders, and it must assume exclusive jurisdiction of the matters of complaint.⁵ If, however, the misconduct of an officer of the court in executing its orders becomes the subject of civil proceedings before any tribunal, the court in its discretion may either itself take cognizance of the complaint or may leave the matter to be dealt with upon such proceedings.⁶ Even where an officer of a court of equity is proceeded against by indictment for something done while executing the orders of the court, the court will grant an order restraining the prosecution of the indictment. While a court of equity has no jurisdiction over an indictment in general, as it would have over a mere civil proceeding, such action on its part is merely with reference to its own jurisdiction.⁷

7. To Prevent Inequitable Defenses. — The jurisdiction of courts of equity in the matter of granting injunctions is very frequently exercised for the purpose of preventing a defendant in an action at law from setting up unconscientious and inequitable defenses.⁸

Statute of Limitations. — One of the most frequent examples of the exercise of this jurisdiction arises where the prosecution of an action is enjoined and the cause of action is barred by the statute of limitations because of the operation of the injunction. An injunction does not stop the running of the statute, and as it would be manifestly inequitable to the party whose action is enjoined to lose his remedy because of the injunction, equity will enjoin the defendant in the action at law from setting up the statute of limitations as a defense.⁹ An injunction may be granted although the party whom it is sought to restrain

As Was Said by Lord Eldon: "If there be a principle upon which courts of justice ought to act without scruple, it is this: To relieve parties against that injustice occasioned by its own acts or oversights at the instance of the party against whom the relief is sought." Pulteney v. Warren, 6 Ves. Jr. 73.

has not pleaded the statute nor even stated that he intended to do so.¹

Mistake as to Existence of Injunction. — It is no ground for relief by injunction, however, that a party permitted his claim to become barred by the statute of limitations under a mistake as to the existence of an injunction prohibiting him to sue thereon, where the mistake was not superinduced by the debtor.²

Supposed Inequity. — And when a demand, purely legal, has been barred by lapse of time, the court of equity has no power on account of any supposed inequity to enjoin the party from pleading or relying upon the statute of limitations in an action at law brought for its recovery.³

Deed Obtained by False Representations. — As a further application of the rule authorizing injunctions to restrain inequitable defenses, it has been held that where a party signs a deed on the faith of the representations of his adversary that certain rights will not be affected thereby, and the deed is afterwards pleaded in bar of such right, an injunction will be granted against the use of the deed as a defense to a suit at law.⁴

So Where Actual Payment Discharges a Bond or Judgment at Law, it will not do so in equity, if justice requires the parties in interest to be restrained from alleging it or insisting on their legal rights.⁵

8. Where Discovery Is Necessary to Defense. — A court of equity may compel a discovery in aid of a defense at law and enjoin proceedings at law until an answer to the bill of discovery has been obtained.⁶ The discovery sought, however, must be of facts which are material and incapable of proof without the answer of the defendant,⁷ and it must be shown wherein the facts are material; the court will not rely exclusively upon the party's own opinion as to the materiality of the disclosure sought.⁸

9. Criminal Prosecutions — a. STATEMENT OF RULE. — At one time the Court of Chancery in England exercised a jurisdiction partaking of a criminal character, but it was not without objection and protest from the Commons and the common-law courts. It was excused, rather than justified, because of the inability of other tribunals to maintain internal peace and order, and because it was exercised for the defense of the poor and helpless. It passed away when the necessity for its exercise ceased, and the common-law tribunals were restored to power sufficient for the repression of violence and wrong.⁹ It is a well-settled rule, both in England and America, that a court of equity has no jurisdiction to interfere by injunction to restrain a criminal prosecution, whether the prosecution be for violations of statutes¹⁰ or for an infraction of

Where Testimony of Codefendant Is Necessary. — A party who can prove his defense only by the testimony of a codefendant may have relief in chancery after a judgment at law against him. In such case, it seems, it would not be proper to file a bill of discovery pending the action at law. Jordan v. Loftin, 13 Ala. 547.

municipal ordinances.¹ The rule applies whether the prosecution is by indictment or by summary process,² and to prosecutions which are merely threatened or anticipated as well as to those which have already been commenced.³ So it is not within the power of the parties to waive the question relating to the jurisdiction of the court and to compel it to try the cause.⁴ If the prosecution is under an ordinance, no ground for enjoining it is constituted by the fact that the ordinance is void,⁵ or that the party seeking the injunction has not committed a violation of the ordinance,⁶ or that the complaint in the prosecution under the ordinance states no cause of action.⁷

b. APPLICATIONS OF RULE. — Under the rule stated it has been held that an injunction does not lie to restrain a prosecution under an ordinance requiring peddlers to take out a license⁸ or an ordinance relating to the traffic in intoxicating liquors,⁹ as, for instance, an ordinance requiring a license for the sale of intoxicating liquors.¹⁰ So an injunction will not be granted to prevent a prosecution under an ordinance against obstructing streets,¹¹ or an ordinance prohibiting the carrying on of a dairy business within certain limits in the municipality,¹² or an ordinance prohibiting gaming,¹³ or an ordinance requiring the taking out of a license for the exhibition of a show.¹⁴ And it has been held that a court of equity has no power to enjoin proceedings to remove a state officer upon charges filed against him for malfeasance in office,¹⁵ or to enjoin a prosecution under a statute for failure to pay a license for operating a railroad.¹

c. EXCEPTIONS TO RULE. — There are some exceptions to the rule set forth and illustrated in the preceding sections, which will now be considered. Probably the best-settled exception exists where the criminal proceedings are instituted by a party to a suit already pending before a court of equity to try the same right that is in issue there. Under these circumstances the prosecution will be enjoined.² In such cases the injunction is merely incidental to the ordinary power of the court to impose terms upon parties who seek its aid in furtherance of their rights.³

Prosecution of Officer of Court of Equity. — So where a criminal prosecution is commenced against an officer of the court of equity, based on an act done in pursuance of an order of such court, it will enjoin the prosecution of the action.⁴

Injury to Property Rights. — There is also another line of decisions which establish an exception to the rule. In these cases, where the enforcement of an ordinance or statute would work great injury to property rights, injunctions were allowed. In the majority of these cases the question of the power to enjoin arose where property rights were invaded by the attempted enforcement of void ordinances or statutes, and it was held that substantial grounds were presented for equitable interference and relief.⁵ Some decisions, however, go even further and hold that although the ordinance or statute under which prosecutions are begun or threatened is not void, equity will enjoin the enforcement thereof if this will impair property rights.⁶

10. Proceedings in Same Court of Equity. — As a general rule, a court of equity will not interfere by injunction to stay proceedings in another equitable suit in the same court;⁷ and the rule applies whether the application is made by parties, privies, or a stranger to the litigation.⁸ An exception is recognized, however, in the case of interpleader suits.⁹ It has been held that where one of the defendants to a bill of interpleader is suing the plaintiff in equity and another is suing him at law, the court will grant him an injunction to restrain the suit in equity as well as the action at law;¹⁰ and where there are two claimants to a fund and one files a bill against the stakeholder, without making the other a party, the stakeholder may file an interpleader to restrain proceedings in the suit of the other claimant.¹¹

11. Actions Relating to Real Property. — Actions relating to real property will not be enjoined where there is a full and adequate remedy at law.¹ Thus an action of ejectment will not be enjoined on the ground that it is barred by the statute of limitations;² nor will a bill to enjoin an action of forcible entry and detainer be sustained when it shows that the complainant has a full and complete defense at law.³ So a court of equity will not restrain a person from asserting title to real estate in the course of judicial proceedings, or decree a release by one party to another, unless in a case entirely free from doubt.⁴ On the other hand, the jurisdiction of courts of equity is frequently exercised to restrain actions of ejectment on the ground of preventing a multiplicity of suits.⁵ If, however, there be a proper case for consolidation of causes, there is no reason for equitable interference, as a court of law is fully competent to afford relief.⁶ Actions of ejectment have also been enjoined on the ground that the plaintiff in such action has by his conduct estopped himself from maintaining it,⁷ and also to prevent a cloud upon the title where a party claims under a conveyance which vests in him an apparently perfect title.⁸ So it has been held that an action on a vendee's bond for purchase money might be enjoined where the vendor had no title at the time when he agreed to convey.⁹

12. To Prevent Multiplicity of Suits. — One of the most frequent grounds for the intervention of equity to afford relief by injunction is to prevent a multiplicity of suits. This question will be found discussed elsewhere in this work.¹⁰

13. Necessity of Confessing Judgment. — It has been stated that the general rule is that when a party comes into equity to be relieved against proceedings at law he confesses judgment at law and relies solely on the court of equity for relief.¹¹ The rule has been held to apply where no discovery is sought in aid of a defense at law, and the matters referred to the court of equity for relief against proceedings at law are the sole ground on which the party under such rule claims right; or, in other words, where the party seeking equitable relief has no defense at law.¹² So in a number of decisions the rule was held to apply where it either did not appear that the party seeking equitable relief had a legal as well as an equitable defense to the action at law, or, if it did appear that the party had defenses of both characters, the court attached no importance to such fact.¹³ On the other hand, it has been held that if besides the grounds of relief in equity the party has distinct and substantive grounds of defense at law, not cognizable in equity, he may, without being compelled to waive his legal defense by confessing judgment, have a hearing in a court of chancery on the merits of his case, and a decree for the proper relief;¹ and in other decisions the rule laid down seems to be that it is entirely in the discretion of the chancellor in each case whether he shall require a confession of judgment,² and that if a confession of judgment in the action at law is required the order should require the judgment to be taken to be dealt with as the court shall direct.³ A court of chancery will not, on a bill filed by the plaintiff in an action at law, enjoin the defendant therein from making his defense to such action and yet allow the plaintiff to proceed. The plaintiff, having elected his forum, should abandon his action if he discovers that he has commenced in the wrong forum.⁴

IX. JUDGMENTS AND DECREES — 1. Necessity of Taking Advantage of Legal Remedies — a. INTRODUCTORY STATEMENT. — Applications for relief in chancery against judgments at law will at all times be viewed with close scrutiny, and an injunction to prevent the enforcement of such judgment will not be granted except upon facts which show the clearest and strongest reasons for the interposition of chancery. That court will not entertain a party seeking relief against a judgment which has been rendered against him in a court of law in consequence of his default in regard to steps which might have been successfully taken in the court of law, unless some reason founded in fraud, surprise, or some adventitious circumstances beyond the control of the party be shown to excuse such default.

b. FAILURE TO MAKE DEFENSE AT LAW — (1) Defenses Purely Legal — (a) Statement of Rule. — Probably the most frequent application of this general rule arises in cases where the grounds on which the complainant seeks to enjoin the judgment are such as would have constituted a good defense to the action in which the judgment was rendered, but which the party seeking equitable relief negligently and without excuse failed to present. Under these circumstances it is a rule of general application that the injunction will be denied.⁵ The only cases in which equity will relieve against a judgment

Instance. — Thus it has been held that where the suit at law is upon a bond, note, or like instrument, signed by the party, the complainant must not only give judgment, but must waive errors, or, what is equivalent, confess judgment, which will be a waiver of errors. on grounds which might have been availed of as a defense to the action at law are where the party was prevented from making such defense, not through any lack of diligence on his part, but through fraud, accident, surprise, or some adventitious circumstances beyond his control.¹ This proposition has been so repeatedly affirmed that it has become a principle and maxim of equity,² and it is so inflexible that it will not be abrogated even where the judgment is manifestly wrong in law or fact³ or will work injustice and hardship,⁴ as, for instance, when the effect of allowing the judgment to stand will be to compel the payment of a debt which the defendant does not owe or which he owes to a third party.⁵ The fact that the party was ignorant of matters constituting the defense does not alter the rule, unless by the exercise of ordinary diligence he could not have discovered them, or was prevented from using such diligence by fraud, accident, or the act of the opposite party, unmixed with any negligence on his own part.⁶ If the facts constituting the defense can be established only by an appeal to the conscience of the adverse party, it is his duty to file a bill of discovery and obtain a stay of the trial until this discovery is obtained.¹ If he does not do so, and in consequence fails to make out his defense, he cannot after the verdict against him obtain the aid of the court of equity to enjoin the judgment.²

(b) Illustrations of Rule. — As illustrative of the principles enunciated in the preceding section, it may be stated that equity will not relieve by injunction against a judgment on the following grounds which the defendant neglected to set up as a defense to the action in which the judgment was rendered: a discharge in bankruptcy;³ the statute of limitations;⁴ rescission of the contract in suit prior to judgment;⁵ infancy;⁶ coverture;⁷ failure of consideration;⁸ that the contract in suit was against public policy;⁹ that the bond in suit was procured by fraud and deception;¹⁰ that the note in suit was without consideration;¹¹ that the plaintiff in the action at law was not legally incorporated;¹² that the plaintiff, a foreign corporation, was without authority to sue because of noncompliance with the requirements of domestic statutes;¹³ that the defendant in the original suit was discharged from liability as surety by an extension of time granted to the principal;¹⁴ that because of collusion the complainant's right to a set-off was defeated;¹⁵ that the complainant did not execute the note in suit;¹⁶ that a credit to which he was entitled was not given to the complainant;¹⁷ that coupons which the complainant had contracted to buy were invalid because severed from the bonds before issue;¹⁸ and that the debt on which the judgment was founded had been paid.¹⁹

(2) Defenses Cognizable Both at Law and in Equity. — The defenses considered in the preceding section are such as were purely legal, but the rules therein stated and the reasons on which they are based apply with practically the same force where the defense is cognizable either at law or in equity. If a defendant in a suit at law neglected to avail himself of a defense which he might have made there, he cannot be permitted to come into equity to make

The Kentucky decisions seem to make a distinction between payment at the day of payment and payment afterwards, the rule being that payment in full at the day can be relied on after judgment, but that payment after the day cannot be so relied on, because it cannot be pleaded at law. Whittington v. Roberts, 4 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 175.

it, whether the defense was purely legal or in its nature both legal and equitable.¹ There must be, as in the case of defenses purely legal, a clear showing of fraud, accident, or surprise, and a lack of negligence on the part of the party in asserting such defense. These cases proceed upon the theory that where the jurisdiction is concurrent the court which first assumes jurisdiction will hold it.²

There Is, However, This Distinction between the two classes of defenses under consideration: If a defense be purely legal, no neglect on the part of the defendant in chancery in insisting on the want of jurisdiction will prevent his availing himself of it at the hearing; in other words, neglecting to demur and answering over upon the merits will not, in such case, give jurisdiction; but if the defense be both legal and equitable, if the defendant in chancery neglects to object to the want of jurisdiction on this ground, and answers over upon the merits, he waives the objection by his own act and will not be permitted to insist upon it.³

c. FAILURE TO TAKE ADVANTAGE OF REMEDY BY APPEAL, CERTIORARI, MOTION, OR SUPERSEDEAS. — Where a party has an adequate remedy by appeal, and through his own negligence this remedy is lost, he cannot obtain equitable relief by injunction against the judgment.⁴ This is equally true whether the party has neglected altogether to take an appeal⁵ or has Exceptions to Rule. — In one case this exception to the rule seems to be recognized. Where there was no service of process on the defendant in the suit at law, the court said that the party was not obliged to take an appeal instead of resorting to equity; that the case was one for equitable interference, though presented independently of mere reversible error. Robinson v. Reid, 50 Ala. 69. See also infra, this section, Void Judgments, where the question is discussed at length. The weight of authority is probably against this view.

5. Failure to Take Appeal. — See cases cited in the preceding note.

prosecuted a defective or insufficient appeal.¹ So where a party has an adequate remedy by writ of error,² certiorari,³ supersedeas,⁴ or a motion in the original cause in the trial court⁵ or in the court having appellate jurisdiction,⁶ equity will not relieve him against the consequences of his own neglect by enjoining the judgment. The correctness of a judgment cannot be reviewed in an independent action upon grounds which were available to the litigant in the original action.⁷

2. Defenses Not Available in Action at Law — Defense of Purely Equitable Character. — A court of equity will enjoin a judgment at law where the complainant could not avail himself of a meritorious defense in the action at law because it was of a purely equitable character and not cognizable at law.⁸ The rule

1. Defective or Insufficient Appeal. — Long v. Smith, 39 Tex. 160; Dunson v. Spradley, (Tex. Civ. App. 1897) 40 S. W. Rep. 327.

Failure to Give Bond or Giving Insufficient Bond. — Where a party against whom judgment has been rendered fails to give bond (Dunson v. Spradley, (Tex. Civ. App. 1897) 40 S. W. Rep. 327), or gives a bond which is radically defective in form (Long v. Smith, 39 Tex. 160), the judgment will not be enjoined.

Neglect to Take Bill of Exceptions. — Where a party might have the benefit of a bill of exceptions, but neglects to avail himself of it, a court of equity will not interpose to perform the legitimate office of such bill of exceptions by way of relief against the judgment at law. Dibble v. Truluck, 12 Fla. 185.

Where a Party Negligently Allows the Time for an Appeal to Pass, he is not entitled to enjoin the judgment. This presents no ground for equitable interference. Hollenbeak v. McCoy, (Cal. 1899) 59 Pac. Rep. 201.

4. Neglect of Remedy by Supersedeas. — Perrine v. Carlisle, 19 Ala. 686, in which case it was held that a part payment of a judgment constitutes no ground for resort to equity, since the party has a complete remedy at law by supersedeas.

5. Neglect of Remedy by Motion — In Trial Court. — Pickens v. Yarborough, 30 Ala. 408; Borland v. Thornton, 12 Cal. 440; Moyo v. Bryte, 47 Cal. 626; Leet v. Leet, 12 N. Y. Motion for New Trial. — Where a party knows, or, in the exercise of ordinary diligence, could know, before final judgment, that such prejudice exists in the community as will deprive him of a fair trial, he should move for a new trial, and, if refused, appeal. Graham v. Citizens' Nat. Bank, 45 W. Va. 701.

Where the plaintiff in an action at law failed for want of evidence as to the identity of the slaves sued for, this was matter on which to base a motion for a new trial, but was not ground for relief in equity. Pickens v. Yarborough, 30 Ala. 408.

Motion to Retax Costs. — Errors committed by the clerk of the court of law in taxing costs under its orders cannot be corrected by a court of equity on a bill by one of the parties in a suit against the other. The parties litigant, with the complainant, being free from fraud, the remedy is by motion to the court. Ross v. McCarty, 3 Humph. (Tenn.) 169.

applies whether the party suffered judgment to go against him without attempting to make the defense,¹ or whether, on attempting it, it was adjudged to be purely equitable and not a defense to an action at law.² Equity will relieve against the judgment, however, not by compelling a new trial at law, but by dealing with the subject as one of its own original jurisdiction. This involves no conflict of the two jurisdictions, for each court, though acting upon the same subject-matter, and to contrary results, deals with distinct rights or relations of the parties — the one with those which are legal, the other with those which are equitable.³

Defense Not Available Because of Forms of Pleading. — So equity may relieve against a judgment if the matter relied on could not have been received as a defense by reason of the forms of legal pleading.⁴

Defenses Not Available at Time of Trial. — And relief will be granted in equity against a judgment at law when a defense could not at the time or under the circumstances be made available at law without any laches on the part of the complainant.⁵

Defense at Law Doubtful or Embarrassed. — If, according to the jurisdiction of a court of common law, it be doubtful whether the grounds of the plaintiff's defense were legally available,⁶ or if there is great difficulty and embarrassment in the complainant's legal remedy,⁷ the judgment may be enjoined, especially if such difficulty and embarrassment is produced by the conduct of the defendant.⁸

3. Judgments Obtained by Fraud — a. STATEMENT OF GENERAL RULE. — Courts of equity have inherent jurisdiction to relieve against judgments or decrees obtained by fraud. Where a judgment or decree has been so obtained, without fault or negligence of the party against whom it was rendered, he is entitled to relief by injunction.⁹ The most usual instance in which relief is granted on this ground is where the party seeking an injunction against the judgment or decree had a meritorious defense which he was prevented from making by the fraud and contrivance of his adversary;¹ but an injunction will also be granted where, by reason of fraud, the party loses his right to move for a new trial² or to take an appeal.³ The fact that a judgment has been affirmed on appeal does not affect the right of the party to come into equity to enjoin the judgment for the fraud of the person procuring it.⁴

Fraud in Procurement of Judgment Necessary. — It must be borne in mind, however, that the fraud which will authorize a court of equity to enjoin a judgment or decree is fraud practiced in the procurement of the judgment or decree itself. A court of equity will not enjoin the judgment merely because it is founded on a cause of action vitiated by fraud,⁵ unless the interposition of the fraud as a defense has been prevented by fraud of the opposite party.⁶

which will justify equitable interference must be actual and positive, and not merely constructive.¹

Laches a Bar to Relief. — And in addition to the fraud complained of, the party seeking an injunction must have been free from negligence,² especially where the rights of innocent third parties have intervened.³ The fraud or practices of the other party are no excuse to him for not attempting to counteract them.⁴

Necessity of Meritorious Defense. — He must also show that he has a meritorious defense,⁵ and strict proof of the fraud alleged is necessary.⁶ While the defense need not be made out clearly and beyond any doubt, enough should be shown to make it reasonably doubtful in the mind of the court whether the merits have been fully and fairly determined.⁷ So it must be shown that the fraud was successfully perpetrated. There is no ground for equitable intervention where the fraud, if attempted, was unsuccessful.⁸

Solvency of Defendant. — Where a party has obtained a judgment by fraud it is no ground for refusing to enjoin the judgment that he is solvent.⁹

b. CONCEALMENT OR SUPPRESSION OF MATERIAL FACTS. — Concealment of material facts which if known would have constituted a good defense is sufficient ground for equitable relief by injunction. Active representations by the party perpetrating the fraud are not necessary.¹⁰

c. LOSS OF DEFENSE OR REMEDY BY VIOLATION OF AGREEMENT. — The jurisdiction of equity to relieve against judgments obtained by fraud is exercised very frequently where a party is prevented from presenting his defense, or taking advantage of remedies to which he is entitled, because of the violation by his adversary of some express agreement with him.¹¹ The fraud for which the judgment may be enjoined may be that of the attorney as well as that of the party himself.¹² Equity will enjoin a judgment taken in violation of an Effect of Appearance. — When the appearance of an attorney is entered on the record, it is always considered that it is by the authority of the party, and whatever is done in the progress of the cause by such attorney is con-

agreement to compromise or to dismiss or to discontinue a suit,¹ or to submit the matter in controversy to arbitration,² or that the cause shall not be called for trial except by consent,³ or to allow certain set-offs,⁴ or to credit a sum paid after the commencement of suit,⁵ or that the plaintiff in the action at law was not to take a personal judgment against the defendant in a suit in ejectment,⁶ or an agreement, on payment of a certain sum of money, not to enforce a judgment already obtained.⁷ So equity will relieve against a judgment obtained by inducing the defendants thereto to withdraw an equitable plea that they had filed in the case, by the promise of the plaintiff that if such plea were withdrawn he would do the equity set up in the plea, and would enter into writing to that effect, all of which he failed to do;⁸ and also where the maker of a note held a receipt acknowledging payment thereof from the indorsee, who sued upon the note, representing to the maker that he did not intend to enforce its collection against him, but against the payee, and judgment was accordingly rendered by default.⁹ If the agreement relied on is made by the attorney of the adverse party, the violation of it will not constitute a ground for equitable interference, unless it be shown that the attorney had authority to make such agreement, or that it had been ratified.¹⁰

4. Fraudulent Alteration of Judgment. — Where the record of the judgment is fraudulently altered, as to the amount of the judgment, without consent of the judgment debtor, a court of equity has jurisdiction to interpose by injunction to prevent its collection and relieve against the fraud.¹¹

Threats to Enforce Not Essential to Jurisdiction. — To entitle a party to enjoin a judgment obtained in violation of an express agreement, it is not necessary that the judgment debtor should have threatened to enforce it; it is indispensable to the security of the party that it be discharged, and a refusal to discharge it is equivalent to a threat to enforce it. *Chambers v. 3. Agreement Not to Try Case Except by Consent. — Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. King, 80 Tex. 681. See also Moore v. Lipscombe, 82 Va. 546. In this case judgment by default, in an action at law, was taken against the complainant owing to his absence and want of defense. It was held that as he relied on the statements of the defendant's attorney that the case would not be tried at the ensuing term, that he might rest assured that there would be no trial at that time, and that he (the attorney) was incapable of attending court, there was sufficient ground for equitable relief.

Agreement to Dismiss on Part Payment of Claim. — The violation of an agreement to dismiss a suit on part payment of the amount involved will not entitle the defendant to enjoin the collection of the entire judgment. Alexander v. Baylor, 20 Tex. 560.

Violation of Agreement to Transfer Property. — The collection of a judgment by default, on agreement of the adverse party to transfer certain property, will not be restrained merely because he failed to make such transfer. Equity considers as done that which ought to be done, and that by the agreement to transfer the property becomes the property of the plaintiff, and that the defendants hold it as trustees for the plaintiff's benefit. Rollins v. National Casket Co., 40 W. Va. 590.

Where a Judgment Is Irregularly Affirmed on Appeal, in violation of an agreement of settlement, whereby the appeal was abandoned, this will constitute no ground for enjoining the judgment if it appears that sufficient time remains to set aside the affirmance at the term at which it was rendered. J. A. Roebling Sons Co. v. Stevens Electric Co., 93 Ala. 39.

5. Judgments Obtained Through Mistake — Mistake of Law. — It is well settled that where a judgment is obtained through a mistake of law by a defendant, not induced by the fraud of the other party, equity has no jurisdiction to grant relief by injunction.¹ This is true even where the mistake is due to an erroneous statement made by the trial judge.² Relief, however, may be decreed in cases of mistakes in law induced by the fraud or circumvention of the party profiting thereby.³

Mistake of Fact. — Equity will relieve against a judgment obtained through a mistake of fact by the party which is in no way attributable to the negligence of himself or counsel.⁴ Relief will be granted, however, only where a party proceeds without unreasonable delay after the discovery of the mistake,⁵ and he must both allege and prove facts constituting his excuse for not defending himself at law.⁶ To entitle a party to relief against a judgment on the ground of a mistake made by him, the mistake must have been caused without his negligence. Equity will not relieve against a mistake where the exercise of ordinary and reasonable diligence would have disclosed the truth.⁷ The fact that a judgment has been affirmed on a writ of error does not affect the party's right to equitable relief against it. A judgment which has been affirmed stands in the same position after the mandate is sent down that it occupied before the writ of error was allowed.⁸

Mistake of Court. — In some cases equity has assumed jurisdiction to relieve against judgments on the ground of mistake of fact made by the court.⁹ It is believed, however, that these cases are not in accordance with the weight of authority.¹⁰

6. Judgments Obtained Through Accident. — Where a party having a meritorious defense is by accident, unmixed with negligence on his part, prevented from making his defense or from taking steps for the preservation of his rights, such as moving for a continuance or for a new trial, or taking up the proceedings for review by appeal or error, a court of equity has power to grant relief by enjoining the judgment.¹¹ Mere accident, however, though unmixed with was held that equity has jurisdiction to vacate a judgment fraudulently altered so as to include a defendant not served with process and not originally included in the judgment.

negligence of the party, will not of itself furnish a ground for relief in equity. A party who has obtained a judgment after a full investigation of the controversy by a competent tribunal will not be forced by a court of equity to submit to a new trial unless justice imperatively demands it. It must clearly appear to the court that it would be contrary to good conscience to allow the judgment to be enforced; in other words, a meritorious defense must be alleged and proved;¹ and it must appear that the accident was unavoidable or in no way attributable to the negligence of the party seeking equitable relief.²

Applications of Rule. — In applying the rule just stated the following have been held cases of accident sufficient to authorize relief: Death of a party with whom the defendant sued at law by the administrator had rescinded the contract sued on (the relief being asked on the ground of the rescission);³ sudden illness of the counsel of a nonresident defendant, preventing the counsel from attending the trial;⁴ sickness of a party at the time of service of process, and for many months after, the sickness being of such a character as to incapacitate him altogether from attending to business and causing him to fail to recollect the service of the summons;⁵ prevention from moving for a new trial by the dispersion of the justices composing the court;⁶ disability of the judge, caused by sudden sickness, to dispose of a motion for a new trial during the term at which judgment was rendered;⁷ loss of a bill of exceptions essential to enable a party to obtain a writ of certiorari, because the justice died without signing it;⁸ and loss of the right to appeal by the death of the judge without signing the bill of exceptions.⁹

Grounds Insufficient for Equitable Relief. — On the other hand, the fact that the complainant did not remember the grounds of his defense when the judgment at law was rendered, which grounds, had they been presented, would have been a good defense at law, is not such an accident as will authorize relief in equity.¹⁰ So it has been held that the mere sickness of a party will not of itself authorize equitable interference, since an application should have been made by the defense, and the party should have sent an agent to the court, or put his attorney in possession of the facts necessary to procure a continuance.¹¹ And it is likewise not a ground for relief that the witness failed to state a material fact, and that the complainant did not know of the omission until after the trial, as he could not hear very well and could not know what the witness said.¹²

10. Forgetfulness of Grounds of Defense. — Bailey v. Anderson, 6 Humph. (Tenn.) 149.

11. Sickness of Party. — Pharr v. Reynolds, 3 Ala. 521.

Sickness of One of Two Counsel. — If one of the counsel of the defendant is present, but by reason of the sickness of the other he is unprepared for the defense, this should be made the ground for an application for a continuance or for a new trial after verdict. It furnishes no ground for relief in equity. McBroom v. Sommerville, 2 Stew. (Ala.) 515.

12. Failure of Witness to Prove Material Fact. — Stone v. Moody, 6 Yerg. (Tenn.) 31.

7. Judgments Obtained Through Surprise. — Equitable relief against a judgment may be had in the case of surprise, unmixed with negligence of the party seeking the relief,¹ or where the facts constituting the surprise are tantamount to a perpetration of fraud by the opposite party.² Thus a party will be entitled to equitable relief where he had no knowledge of the suit until after judgment had been obtained,³ or where at a subsequent day of the term judgment was taken in a litigated case, the defendant and his counsel having in the meantime left the court, relying upon an order of continuance of all cases until the next term,⁴ or where a witness who immediately before the trial assured the defendant that he could prove material facts either designedly or from lapse of memory failed to do so.⁵ On the other hand an injunction will not be allowed where there was no surprise but such as the party might reasonably have anticipated.⁶

8. Void Judgments — a. JUDGMENTS VOID FOR WANT OF JURISDICTION OF SUBJECT-MATTER. — There is great conflict of authority as to the power of courts of equity to enjoin judgments void for want of jurisdiction, and decisions even in the same state are not always uniform. According to some decisions, the fact that the judgment is void because the court in which it was rendered had no jurisdiction of the subject-matter will constitute no ground for enjoining it, it being held that the party has an adequate remedy at law of which he must avail himself.⁷ In other decisions the power of a court of equity to enjoin such a judgment has been upheld;⁸ but where this view obtains, such want of jurisdiction must be alleged and proved.⁹

b. JUDGMENTS VOID FOR WANT OF JURISDICTION OF PERSON — (1) Want of Notice or Process. — While there are some decisions which seem to hold, without any qualification, that a judgment void because the defendant was not served with process cannot be relieved against in equity by injunction or otherwise,¹⁰ the great weight of authority is unquestionably to the effect that courts of chancery have the power to enjoin judgments rendered against a party without service of process upon him or notice of suit, by reason whereof he

1. Surprise Unmixed with Negligence of Party. — Dibble v. Truluck, 12 Fla. 185; Dilly v. Barnard, 8 Gill & J. (Md.) 170; Jones v. Kincaid, 5 Lea (Tenn.) 677; White v. Washington, 5 Gratt. (Va.) 647; Mosby v. Haskins, 4 Hen. & M. (Va.) 427.

2. Surprise Resulting from Fraud of Adverse Party. — Dibble v. Truluck, 12 Fla. 185; Post v. Boardman, 10 Paige (N. Y.) 580.

3. Want of Knowledge of Suit until After Judgment. — Mosby v. Haskins, 4 Hen. & M. (Va.) 427.

4. Judgment Taken in Case Continued to Next Term. — Jones v. Kincaid, 5 Lea (Tenn.) 677.

5. Failure of Witness to Prove Facts Which He Promised to Prove. — White v. Washington, 5 Gratt. (Va.) 647.

6. Surprise Such as Party Could Have Reasonably Anticipated. — Shannon v. Reese, 38 Ala. 593; Williams v. Lockwood, Clarke (N. Y.) 172; Fowler v. Roe, 11 N. J. Eq. 367. See also Fisk v. Miller, 20 Tex. 572; Goss v. McClaren, 17 Tex. 108, 67 Am. Dec. 646.

7. View that Injunction Does Not Lie. — Morris v. Morris, 76 Ga. 733; Stockton v. Ransom, 60 Mo. 535; Crandall v. Bacon, 20 Wis. 639, 91 Am. Dec. 451.

Loss of Jurisdiction by Adjournment. — Where a justice loses jurisdiction by adjourning the cause without specifying the hour of the day and the place to which it is adjourned, the judgment is void, but the remedy is by certiorari and not by injunction. Crandall v. Bacon, 20 Wis. 639, 91 Am. Dec. 451.

8. View that Injunction Lies. — Dial v. Olsen, (Ariz. 1894) 36 Pac. Rep. 175; Connell v. Stelson, 33 Iowa 147; Hernandez v. James, 23 La. Ann. 483 (in this case it was held that jurisdiction was conferred by a statutory provision); U. S. Mutual Acc. Ins. Co. v. Reisinger, 43 Mo. App. 571, overruled in St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Lowder, 138 Mo. 533, 60 Am. St. Rep. 565, a case in which the judgment sought to be enjoined was void for want of service of process; Smith v. Deweese, 41 Tex. 594.

Presumption as to Jurisdictional Amount. — Where suit to enjoin a judgment is brought twenty years after the rendition of the judgment, it will not be presumed that the amount involved was not within the jurisdiction of the court rendering the judgment, where the declaration contained a number of counts which in the aggregate claimed a greater amount, although the judgment rendered was for less than the jurisdictional amount. Hill v. Gordon, 45 Fed. Rep. 276.

9. Averment and Proof of Want of Jurisdiction Necessary. — Johnson v. Van Cleve, 23 Neb. 550.

10. View that Want of Jurisdiction Does Not Authorize Injunction. — Hart v. Lazaron, 46 Ga. 396; Emmons v. McKesson, 5 Jones Eq. (58 N. Car.) 92; Partin v. Luterloh, 6 Jones Eq. (59 N. Car.) 341. Another North Carolina decision, does not appear and make defense to the action.¹ This rule has been held to apply whether the record affirmatively shows want of service of process² or merely omits to show the service, leaving it to be presumed prima facie.³ So, according to the weight of authority, a judgment may be enjoined even where it appears to be valid and regular on its face. The decisions on this question, however, are not harmonious.⁴

Necessity of Showing Defense. — According to some decisions, the issuance of the injunction is not dependent upon the question whether the complainant shows a defense to the action wherein the judgment is sought to be enjoined.⁵ The great weight of authority, however, is to the contrary. Equity will not interfere to relieve against a judgment obtained without service of process, unless the judgment defendant has a meritorious defense to the action in which such judgment was obtained. A condition precedent required by courts of equity

Myers v. Daniels, 6 Jones Eq. (59 N. Car.) 1, is in conflict with this view.

Effect of Statutory Provisions Relating to Enjoining Judgments. — The right of a judgment debtor to enjoin a judgment void for want of service of summons is not taken away by a statute which authorizes relief from a judgment taken against a party through mistake or excusable neglect, or from a judgment without personal service of summons. Smith v. Morrill, 12 Colo. App. 233.

Where No Notice Is Required. — Where, on a proceeding for final distribution of an estate, personal notice is not required by statute, the want of such notice furnishes no ground for enjoining the judgment. Daly v. Pennie, 86 Cal. 552, 21 Am. St. Rep. 61.

Admission that Part of Judgment Is Due. — Where a party admits that he owes part of an amount awarded by the judgment, an injunction will not be granted unless he tenders what he admits is justly due. Parsons v. Nutting, 45 Iowa 404.

Enjoining Judgment as to Part of Claim. — An injunction against the enforcement of a judgment at law may be allowed if a good defense is established against the entire claim upon which it is founded, or against the enforcement of part of the judgment, if the defense goes only to a part of the claim. Jeffery v. Fitch, 46 Conn. 602.

Effect of Affirmance of Judgment. — The affirmance of judgment on appeal does not affect the party's rights. The affirmance of a void judgment upon grounds not touching but overlooking its invalidity does not make it valid. Wilson v. Montgomery, 14 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 205; Chambers v. Hodges, 23 Tex. 104.

before they will enjoin the execution of such judgment is that if relief is granted, a different result will be attained than that already decreed by the void judgment.¹

Want of Notice or Knowledge Is Not Enough.—The applicant for an injunction must go further and show both in averment and proof that he had and has a defense good in law, and in what that defense consists. The court must be put in possession of the facts, where the sufficiency of the defense is an indispensable element of the issue.²

Showing Want of Service.—So where a defendant in a judgment or decree seeks relief against it in equity and avers that he was not served with process, though the averment is negative in its character, the burden of proving it rests on him, and he must adduce evidence sufficient to overcome the sworn return of the officer.³

Effect of Adequate Remedy at Law on Right to Injunction.—In a considerable number of the decisions cited relating to the injunction of judgments void for want of service of process it did not appear whether the party had or had not any other remedy than by injunction, and so far as these decisions are concerned it is a legitimate inference that the question whether there was any remedy at law was considered a matter of no importance. There are, however, a number of decisions in which the question is directly raised, and the conclusions reached are by no means harmonious. According to some decisions, equity will grant relief by injunction although there may be an adequate remedy in the original cause.⁴ But the weight of authority, it is believed, asserts the contrary doctrine.⁵ These decisions proceed upon the theory that where there is an ordinary remedy for error an extraordinary one will not be allowed.⁶

ment for want of jurisdiction of the defendant's person may be maintained against any person who attempts to put such judgment in force and who has apparent authority for so doing.¹

Where Action Brought. — And it has been held that the action may be maintained in any county in which the attempt to enforce the judgment is made, although it may have been rendered in another county.²

(2) False Return of Service of Process. — The weight of authority seems to be that if the process is returned executed upon the defendant at law, and was not in fact executed, and judgment was rendered without appearance or opportunity to defend, chancery has power to enjoin the judgment, if it be alleged and proved that the party aggrieved has a good defense to the action.³ According to these decisions, the return of the officer to the writ is only prima facie evidence of the fact stated by it, and may be contradicted in a collateral proceeding.⁴ There are, however, some decisions which deny without qualification that a judgment may be enjoined because of a false return of service of process.⁵ So there are other decisions which modify very materially the rule as stated. The rule as formulated by them is to the effect that the judgment cannot be enjoined unless the plaintiff in the action at law actively participated in procuring the false return of service;⁶ that if he acted in good faith the judgment is conclusive as between him and the defendant. Redress can be had only in a court of law where the record was made, and if relief cannot be had there, the party injured must seek his remedy against the officer making the false return.⁷ While there are a few decisions holding that it is not necessary to allege or prove that the party has a good defense to the action at law,⁸ the weight of authority is clearly to the effect that the party must allege and prove that he has a meritorious defense, and this is certainly in accord with the decisions in which it has been sought to enjoin judgments upon other grounds.⁹
